At present these people (the uncivilized Eskimo of Coronation Gulf and Victoria Island) are very healthy and without any serious ailment.

Lower down on the same page Mr. Jenness says:

But if ever the diseases which have swept through the western Eskimo (the civilized ones) find their way into this country (Coronation Gulf), more especially measles, tuberculosis and venereal diseases, half the population would probably be swept away within a decade or two.

Did it ever occur to you that there are some large inhabited areas of our earth where tuberculosis is as yet unknown? And now that it does occur to you, which of the blessings of civilization is it that is going to compensate these healthy people for the ravages of the tuberculosis germ? Will it be the Little Red School House or will it be soap?—for they are now as undeniably illiterate and dirty as they are undeniably contented and healthy. After all, Homer could not read nor write and Moses and Elijah were alike unacquainted with Woodbury's and with Pear's.

And now for the last of my texts. It was written by the Venerable Hudson Stuck.

If there were any evidence or reason to believe that morality or religion will be furthered by the browbeating or cajoling of the little peoples into a close similitude of the white races in dress and manners and customs, all other considerations would, of course, be swallowed up in a glad welcome of such advance. But almost the exact opposite is true. Show me an Indian who affects the white man in garb, in speech, in general habits and external characteristics, and it will be easy to show an Indian whose death will be little loss to his community or his race.

These may seem to be many texts for my brief sermon that now follows, but they are in reality but one text: "This civilization of ours that is so commonly admired by the thoughtless (and which is comparatively innocuous to us who are acclimated to it)—this civilization of Europe has descended upon the native peoples of the Americas and of the isles of the sea not as a blessing but as a blight. Their bodies have rotted with our diseases while their homes disintegrated under our influence and their self-respect wilted in the glare of our power and arrogant self-sufficiency."

I will admit at the beginning of my sermon that it is of the "but I say unto you" type. We cannot afford the space for argument and proof and must simply assert things which you either know to be true or will find upon investigation and deliberation. And if you find after the investigation and deliberation are over that you are so proof against facts and so deaf to reason that you still continue thinking that civilization has been on the whole a good thing for the Indian and the Hawaiian, why then you will have cause to be thankful for those qualities of mind which enable you to view with indifference or even with satisfaction the process which the rest of us see as something scarce less gruesome than war and feel as a tragedy of which we and our forefathers are blood guilty, be that guilt deliberate as it was when Kentucky was "the Bloody Ground," or be it unintended and unrealized as when a Yukon trader encourages Indians to live crowded in a village that he may trade with them or a school teacher that he may educate them.

It is the great misfortune of the native Americans that the enterprise of the miner, the cupidity of the trader and the uninstructed benevolence of the educator and philanthropist are as fatal to them as the squirrel rifle of Daniel Boone or the bowie of Kit Carson. Take just a single instance: I have elsewhere shown that when Sir John Franklin first visited the Mackenzie delta in 1826 there were over three thousand Eskimos between Cape Bathurs and what is now the Alaska boundary; it is well known that today there remain of their descendants less than a hundred and that this hundred are as badly infected with tuberculosis as are the Indians of the Yukon and have suffered many other horrors from their contact with us, the most appalling of which is a rate of incidence of insanity which has for this district averaged above one person per year for the last ten years, as against three cases for the fifty years that preceded. To some this devastation may seem less gruesome than that of war; to me it is a war in its results, if not in its aims and methods. But in the onslaught of civilization on "the people of nature" it is as it has proved in the present war of the Germans—it is the result of the Teuton attitude we object to, and not their pleas and protestations. And if ruthlessness does appear now and again in German speech and print, then where can the ruthlessness be better matched than in that gem of Americanisms: "The only good Indian is a dead Indian."

When we realize, then, that the civilizing process is a war in its devastating results, and when we remember that the Church was founded to carry forward the work of Him who went about doing good, is it not incongruous that the Church should, as it often does, name itself as among the chief of the civilizing agents and that it should in fact frequently deserve that name? Of course we find the answer, as we find also the excuse, in that best known of all pleas for mercy: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do."

For those who do not know, and who want to learn, just why our civilization is so deadly to the nature peoples, we may note that the answer is to be found in three things: (1) In the biological doctrine of evolution against disease, which doctrine is one of the cornerstones of modern medicine; (2) in the fact that these people have been ground by nature into a nearly perfect adjustment to their environment and if you change the environment you compel them to live under conditions to which their bodily and mental powers are not properly adjusted; (3) and (most easily understandable of all) many of the native ways are in themselves both morally and physically wholesome, e. g., the snowhouse of the Eskimo, the tepee of the Cree or the mere windbreak of the Fuegian, all dwellings that are healthful in their abundance of fresh air and cleanly in the fact that they are continually moved away from whatever filth may accumulate.

Then, seeing civilization is deadly to the nature peoples, should the Church enlist on the side of the native to fight against what we grandiloquently call "Progress?" By no means, for the fight would be hopeless—hopeless for many reasons, not the least of which is that the native is no more anxious to be saved from becoming civilized than the drunkard is from becoming drunk.

Seeing the march of civilization through new lands is like the march of a ruthless army in its results, we can well borrow from modern war a figure representing truly what the attitude of the Church should be. The Church should be the Red Cross of this strife that must go on till the world is acclimated to a nearly uniform civilization—uniform in its main essentials, no matter how infinitely diverse it may prove in outward detail. Seeing the wind of change is a bitter wind, we should do what we can to temper it to the shorn lamb. An injurious change is deadly in proportion to its suddenness—then let us do our best to see that the changes that must come shall come as slowly as may be. Keep the people healthy by encouraging them to live and dress as near their former standards as practicable; bolster up their self-respect by developing native industries in preference to new ones; remember that charity leads to pauperization in the wilderness as surely as in the slum and that ethics and morality cannot under our present system be securely grounded on anything but economic independence. If you encourage Eskimo women (to take but one concrete example) to live on groceries instead of seal meat, to dress in cloth instead of skins, to knit and crochet instead of tanning leather and sewing water boots, you need not be surprised if Eskimo husbands find their wives burdens rather than helpmates or if the graduate of your school finds prostitution the only practicable route to the gratification of the many expensive and undesirable tastes she has acquired along with her English and her three R's.

If Christianity were what the best of its representatives claim it to be; and, that being true, if the whole world could then be made Christian in deeds as well as in professions, perhaps civilization might in such case eventually become so tempered as to descend upon the nature peoples as a blessing instead of falling as a blight upon their home life, health and self-respect. Unfortunately we cannot have any soundly reasoned hope that any of the native races will survive uncontaminated till the day of such a blessed change. But I for one do have a hope that before the last defenseless native race goes down in the dust before the black Hussars of our civilization, the mission organizations of the Church will have been converted from regiments fighting in the battle front of that horror-attended progress into a frankly non-combatant order of mercy, mitigating the evil they cannot prevent.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

BY THE VEN. JOHN HAROLD GREIG, B.D.

I AM not saying that as now drafted the league can take shape and become a fact. There may be all kinds of difficulties in the present form which further consideration will point out and remove. Still less have I anything to add to the debate as to whether it is in harmony with the constitution of the United States. . . . What does concern me and what I venture to think concerns you also as Christians is the fact that such a draft as this has appeared at all. For what does that fact mean? It must needs mean that in the opinion of these representative statesmen the idea which lies behind the league is one that it is possible to put into force. It implies . . . that this body of responsible leaders do not regard the idea of the League of Nations as the baseless fabric of a vision which cannot be realized. And that to my mind is an enormous and most welcome gain. . . . The representative statesmen of the greatest powers of the world regard the idea as feasible, agree that there is more than a bare prima facie case for it and have gone so far as to put out to the world a suggested method by which the league may, and I believe can, become an actual working fact. The method they suggest . . . may need recasting; but they assure us, not in verbal professions of faith but by an act which stakes their reputation, that the main idea of the league is not visionary or sentimental, but one that can be embodied in a definite institution.

I say that is a great event and I ask what should be our attitude as Christians towards it. Surely it must be one of gladness, goodwill and support. We must make them know that we are behind them—not blindly and impractically, but to give all proposals a sympathetic welcome; that we will examine them, not to make difficulties, but rather to see how difficulties can be overcome. We ought to make them aware of the fact . . . that if to make it work we have to change our way of conducting some of our affairs we are ready for the necessary changes. . . . Christian people are terribly divided . . . but surely in this matter of securing the peace of the world we are face to face with ideals so clear to all Christians that in these matters we must show the world what a united Christianity can achieve.

The crisis is tremendous and the all of the human race is at stake. No one can doubt that if in five or ten years' time there is another war, it will be much more brutal and destructive of man and all his works than this last war has been. We are not at the end of the aid that science can give to the work of destruction. . . . Anybody can see that in methods of organization and transport even the Germans were bunglers from lack of experience, which experience we have now gained. Nor is this all. For it is plain that the old method of warfare, army against army, has gone forever. A modern war is a war of nation against nation; there is no longer any distinction between combatant and non-combatant, military and civilian. . . . Inevitably in coming wars an enemy will seek to strike at and destroy all persons and all forms of property belonging to the enemy . . . so that just at a time when the power of destruction will reach a higher point of effectiveness the range of what must be destroyed will be widened to an equal degree. . . . Nor will any nation ever again be able to wait until the other side begins to make warfare more brutal. On the contrary, it will be necessary in self-defense to think out in advance and forestall the possible brutalities of the foe. We stand, in fact, on the edge of a great inclined plane of warfare that is deteriorating at an ever steeper rate of calculated scientific brutality and destructiveness and once more in the history of the world civilization seems to be on the point of destroying itself.

In what mundane factor can we then hope? There is only one that is worth anything, as it seems to me.

Turn your thoughts back to July, 1914, and ask yourself how many of the leading nations who were to be so soon involved in war really desired it. How many in France, in England, in Russia, in Austria, in Germany? Why you could get them all into this fragment of your new cathedral and with room to spare. There were hundreds of thousands in Germany who had been taught and persuaded that in self-defense Russia must be struck down . . . that it would be well to deal with the growing envy of England and France at the same time; but these did not want or desire war. It was only a small handful who did want it, and it is no exaggeration to say that for every one who wanted it there were a hundred thousand who hated and loathed it. Yet the few had their own way, not the many. The handful prevailed, not the vast altogether overwhelming majority. . . . How could such a thing be? Why, because the handful knew their own mind, were organized and could give expression to their will, while the right-feeling and sound-thinking of the majority was altogether powerless. It was not gagged or fettered; that implies that it had a body or a voice, whereas it had neither. It is a great and all-important truth that even such measureless moral forces as the widespread love of peace and hatred of war are powerless unless they have a body, so to speak, unless they become an organism.

A great tidal river that rises and falls twenty feet at each ebb and flow is a mighty force, but it cannot light a single room or grind a bushel of flour unless and until the right machine transmutes all this immense diffused force into power. . . . And it is this force, strong before the war began but intensified now a hundredfold, to which I look, and the League of Nations will make it a great social, political, international power, not a beautiful but impotent force. . . .

It is said that no nation can enter into this league without impairing its sovereign independence. . . . I think the sovereign independence of the United States of America and of my own country is a robust, better established thing than that. . . . But what hundreds fear . . . is that we lose everything that makes sovereign independence worth having. Where is the magnificence of sovereign independence in a continuance under still more intense conditions of the old race to have a better army and a stronger navy than any other power? . . . No. The league must come or the old wearisome race to be more destructive than our neighbors lest they destroy us must go on and on and on. In the name of God and humanity there can be no doubt what the Christian verdict must be.

I own that for us to take a leading part in the league will impose on us a great moral burden. We shall have to live on a higher plane in regard to all international matters and therefore in regard to all our home and internal questions, too. Altruism, not self-seeking; world-wide service, not gain or aggrandisement, must be our aim, and in this sense our independence will be less. But nations as well as individuals receive their call from God to a higher life where the rights and pleasures of self are replaced by costful duties. And to my mind it is to that that your country and mine are now called by God Himself in this League of Nations. It is the consummation of our victory and the supreme proof of the fact that with all our sins and shortcomings we were on God's side that this call now comes. For He only calls to a higher service those who are already serving Him; He only asks those to win a victory for Him on a higher plane who have already conquered in His cause. And, believe me, great and glorious as is the victory we have won over Germany and her allies, it is not nearly so glorious nor so necessary to mankind as the victories which await a true and efficient league of peace. For the whole world is fast becoming one great comity; we are learning that we must think not even in terms of empire, but for all mankind. And there are the child races and the feeble nations of the world, in Africa and Asia and elsewhere, to be brought in and trained and educated to take their place in the fellowship of mankind. We have fought the war in vain and lost our touch with the mind of God if we fail to see that we must train them and bring them out in peace, in an atmosphere of good will and neighborliness.

A new era dawns for the world, a new call for a world-wide fellowship, a true comity of nations in which black and yellow, red and white, may be united. Our part therein—what shall it be? Beloved, we are white men—God's white men—and our place is in the van where the burdens and the risks of being white men abound and cannot be shirked. A new day with a new call, new responsibilities, new burdens, new services, new tests for manhood come pressing on us. Surely this is one of those great moments of national life of which your own deep thinker and patriot, poet and seer, whose centenary England and America have just united to celebrate—one of those times of crisis and decision of which James Russell Lowell sang:—

Once to every man and nation
Comes a moment to decide
In the strife of truth with falsehood
For the good or evil side.

By the light of burning martyrs
Christ thy bleeding feet we track,
Toiling up now calvaries ever
With the Christ that turns not back.

A PRAYER OF THOMAS À KEMPIS

WE beseech Thee, our most gracious God, preserve us from the cares of this life, lest we should be too much entangled therein; also from the many necessities of the body, lest we should be ensnared by pleasure; and from whatsoever is an obstacle to the soul, lest, being broken with troubles, we should be overthrown. Give us strength to resist, patience to endure, and constancy to persevere; for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THE FIRST WORD

Then said Jesus, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do.

THE short walk is finished. The soldiers take the cross from Simon of Cyrene and nail Jesus to it. His enemies look on exultingly. "Yes! he is beginning to pay the penalty now. Let him suffer!" His friends cannot bear to watch, nor endure not to watch. Their hearts are shattered by every hammer blow that drives the nails. The spectators eagerly note every detail of the crucifixion. It is a good chance to see how it is done if you have never seen it before. There are three of them today. Now the soldiers have finished their work. There the three victims hang, each upon his cross.

I do not mean to dwell upon the details of the physical suffering of the crucifixion. To dwell upon them over-long would be acting too much like the idle spectators who that day noted with morbid interest every twitching of the Savior's wracked muscles; too much like the people of our own time who delight in reading the details of the latest catastrophe, getting repulsive pleasure from vivid descriptions of human travail. I would say just enough to make you feel how grim the reality was. We honor the courage with which our heroes endured mortal pain by telling the story in carefully balanced verse, by painting the scene in nicely chosen colors. Till at last something of the melody of the words and the harmony of the colors finds its way into our conception of the event itself, and a scene of brutal cruelty done in stark daylight becomes transfigured into a pretty picture in which the artist loves to note the play of light and shade. Blood from an open wound adds to the beauty of a picture by enriching the color scheme with a dash of red; we almost forget that in the picture's original the falling blood meant a man's life flowing away. I would say enough to remind you that the scene on Calvary which has furnished the theme for so many lovely pictures was hideously real, and pass on.

Some have thought they found the message of Good Friday in the intensity of Christ's physical suffering. They have centred their attention on the utter cruelty and suffering of the crucifixion, as if it were that which made the day singular. But it was not that which singled it out in men's minds. It was not the manner of our Master's death which set it apart from all other deaths. Why, during the hours that He hung and suffered there two other crosses stood beside His cross. Yet Good Friday is not more solemn to us because three men were crucified instead of one. The bodily pain was multiplied by three, but absolutely nothing was added to the day's significance by that. We forget, when we centre our attention on the manner of our Lord's death that hundreds upon hundreds had traveled out of the world by that road. There was nothing new whatever in a cross raised on a hill to expose a human being to the jeers of a heartless crowd during his last moments on earth. There was nothing new in human cruelty or human agony. There is nothing unusual in either now. And as for death, it is one of the few experiences that comes to every living creature. If suffering or death were the only reason why Good Friday should claim our attention, every day of the Great War would have a better claim.

No! We must look for the secret of Good Friday

somewhere else. Not pain, nor death, nor even dauntless courage can account for its hold upon human interest. We shall come nearer to the truth if we turn our attention from the agony the Hero endured to the Hero Himself; look less at the cruelties by which they did Him to death, and more at the qualities of Him who died. In so doing we begin to read the secret.

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." As an expression of magnificent comprehension of the other man's point of view, that prayer stands as the supreme example. It is always hard for us to do justice to the motives of those who strive against us. Even when we are justly hurt, we can hardly believe that those who executed justice acted without malice. But when we are hurt unjustly, how seldom we can understand how the one who hurt us viewed the matter! When we realize how it is with us, we realize how wonderfully our Lord rose above the personal injury of that hour, that even when the nails were driving through His flesh He could understand what was in the minds of those who had brought him to this pass. Even then he could see that they were ignorant of the crime they were committing. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

But we know. They thought they were crucifying a dangerous imposter. We know that they crucified the Lord of life. Our better understanding is no credit to us. Should we have seen with clearer eyes than the rulers of the people if we had been living then? I dare not say yes. But in our better understanding we have the answer to the question why the death on Calvary is different from all other deaths. Not because of the pain, nor the injustice, nor even of our Lord's perfect courage; but because of the quality of Him who died. Not because Jesus was crucified, but because it was Jesus who was crucified.

There you have it. Take away the life of the Master, and His death loses its significance. His death means so much to us because it was the consistent ending of His life. We speak as if the Incarnation were the truth of His life, and the Atonement the truth of His death. But you cannot separate the two like that. They go together. Without the Incarnation there would have been no Atonement. And the Atonement was not done in a moment there on Calvary. It was the fruit of his whole ministry. We look up to Him hanging there upon the cross, and seem to see in that moment the whole purpose of His coming amongst men. And so we do. Yet we err if we say He lived that He might die. Rather, His death is precious because it was the climax, the summing up in one act, of His life.

PEACE

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD

NOT with the high-voiced fife,
Not with the deep-voiced drum,
To mark the end of strife
The perfect peace shall come.

Nor pomp nor pageant grand
Shall bring war's blest surcease,
But, silent, from God's hand
Shall come the perfect peace.

A PRAYER FOR THE SPIRIT OF PRAYER

O GOD, who art the Truth, O God who art Spirit, help us in spirit and in truth to worship Thy great name, not acknowledging Thee in one place or at one time only, but in every place and at every time, in all we do and all we see, in our work and in our rest, in our laughter and our tears, in loneliness and in fellowship, in the eye of day and in the shadow of night, beneath the open sky as in the house of prayer, in the heart of the little child as in the wisdom of the man, in the fullness of health and strength and happiness as in the valley of the shadow of death, through which, O Father Almighty, do Thou in Thy mercy bear us to never-ending life and light and love. Amen.

Meditation: The inmost meaning of prayer is harmony with the divine will.

REGARDING prayer not so much as consisting of particular acts of devotion, but as the spirit of life, it seems to be the spirit of harmony with the will of God. It is the aspiration after all good, the wish, stronger than any earthly passion or desire, to live in His service only. It is the temper of mind which says in the evening, "Lord, into Thy hands I commend my spirit"; which rises up in the morning, "To do Thy will, O God"; and which all the day regards the actions of business and of daily life as done unto the Lord and not to men—"Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God".

The trivial employments, the meanest or lowest occupations, may receive a kind of dignity when thus converted into the service of God. Other men live for the most part in dependence on the opinion of their fellow-men; they are the creatures of their own interests, they hardly see anything clearly in the mists of their own self-deceptions.

But he whose mind is resting in God rises above the petty aims and interests of men; he desires only to fulfill the divine will; he wishes only to know the truth. His eye is single, in the language of Scripture, and his whole body is full of light. The light of truth and disinterestedness flows into his soul; the presence of God, like the sun in the heavens, warms his heart.

Such a one, whom I have imperfectly described, may be no mystic; he may be one among us whom we know not, undistinguished by any outward mark from his fellow-men, yet carrying within him a hidden source of truth and strength and peace.—Benjamin Jowett.—From Prayers for Today, by Samuel McComb.

ASH WEDNESDAY

O GOD, our heavenly Father, we humbly pray Thee for Thy dear Son's sake, to bless abundantly at this time whatever efforts may be made to turn the hearts of Thy children to more sincere repentance and more living faith. Give a double portion of Thy Holy Spirit to all who minister and work for others. Prepare all hearts to receive the seed of Thy Word. Grant that it may take deep root, and bring forth fruit to Thy glory. Alarm the careless, humble the self-righteous, kindle the lukewarm, soften the hardened, encourage the fearful, relieve the doubting, and bring many souls in loving faith to Thyself. Remember us, O Lord, according to the favour that Thou bearest unto Thy people; O visit us with Thy salvation. Give more than we can desire or deserve; for the sake of Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—(Dean Goulburn, A. D. 1818.)

O GOD, Who by Thy Word dost marvellously work out the reconciliation of mankind, grant, we beseech Thee, that by this holy fast we may both be subjected to Thee with all our hearts, and be united to each other in prayer to Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—(Gelasian Sacramentary, A. D. 494.)

O GRACIOUS Saviour, we beseech Thee of Thy love and goodness to remember our manifold infirmities; give us full pardon of our sins and a new spirit. Give us grace, that we may always imitate Thy humility, resignation, purity, patience, charity, and all virtues, that we may be well-pleasing to Thee, may become daily more like Thee, and may hereafter dwell with Thee forever. For Thine own Name's sake we ask it. Amen.—(Treasury of Devotion, A. D. 1872.)

L ET Thy Spirit, O Lord, come into the midst of us, and washing us with the pure water of repentance, prepare us to be always a living sacrifice unto Thee; Who livest and reignest, ever world without end. Amen.—(Mozarabic Liturgy, before A. D. 700.)

O LORD, Who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth; send Thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before Thee; grant this for Thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.—(Sarum Missal A. D. 1085; Book of Common Prayer, A. D. 1549.)

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

LACK OF ORGANIZATION CAUSES MISSION DEFICIT

Says Mr. Sayre—Publicity and Immigrant Missions Department Wanted

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—February 19 an illuminating conference of church workers in the Province of New York and New Jersey was held in the Church of the Redeemer under the auspices of the Commission on Missions.

Mr. Monell Sayre said that three things were necessary to raise money: a good cause, a sufficient constituency, and organization; the Board of Missions has the first. Can any man ask for a better constituency than the Episcopal Church, overflowing with wealth and generosity? We do not talk about our devotion but it is there, and will respond to any adequate appeal adequately presented. Since we have the cause and the constituency, the board's deficit is due to lack of organization. The Church should give the Board of Missions a publicity bureau which would make the world take notice that the Episcopal Church is interpreting the Christian message to the twentieth century with a force and persuasiveness that has never been excelled. It should give its layman something worth while doing; he is bored with handing around the plate and ushering people to seats. Ask the Church for five, six or seven million dollars a year for missions; it is a man's task, and we have the men who would be flattered if asked to do it.

Archdeacon Pott said that the strange indifference shown to the Church in rural districts is due very largely to the Grange which is a great social centre, where practical things are discussed. To meet this, he suggests opening a schoolhouse where a common service might be held and people brought together, no matter what they were labeled.

Mr. J. R. Strong, speaking from a business man's point of view on "Missionary Organization," pleaded for more business-like methods.

The success of war activities was in getting the story to the individual through the impelling force of patriotism. Cannot we plead an impelling force in the love of God, and our fellowmen? consecration and service are as important as the collecting of dollars.

At the evening session Bishop Burch said if we were going to make Americans of foreign peoples we have got to teach them the English language. Christians are Christians everywhere but not American Christians until they think as we do, and they are a menace until then. We have started wrong; having our prayer book translated into foreign languages is a disadvantage; we make a mistake in having our services in anything but the English language.

Dr. Lacey said that in Manhattan Island there are 500,000 foreigners who can neither read, write nor speak the English language. He suggested a careful survey of this province to find out to what extent the different foreign elements are represented here, where they are, what are their religious feelings, and what is our opportunity of helping them.

Bishop Burch presented the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that at its earliest opportunity the Board of Missions should establish a separate department of the Church's domestic missionary work to deal with the peculiar and varying problems growing out of the religious needs of the immigrant.

ARCHDEACON GREIG VISITS THE CITY OF WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Archdeacon of Worcester, the Venerable J. H. Greig, D.D., spent the week beginning Septuagesima Sunday in the Diocese of Washington. He preached at the cathedral on Sunday morning, and at Epiphany Church Sunday night. Monday he conducted a quiet day for the clergy at the cathedral, Thursday a quiet day for women at St. John's, Lafayette Square, and Friday a quiet day for church workers at Trinity Diocesan Church. On Tuesday he addressed a very large and notable meeting of the Clericus, in addition to addresses to the cathedral school for boys and girls. On Wednesday he was one of the two special speakers at the Diocesan Sunday School Institute Convention in the morning, and in the afternoon he gave a lecture at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

At the Clericus he spoke on "The Religious Reactions of the English People to the War," and in a very delightful and informing way handled some of the high points in the spiritual changes brought about in English men and women by their war experiences. He mentioned the remarkable use and effectiveness of retreats in almost every dioceses, and not only for people of leisure but also for working people, and not only for adults but also for children. Nothing parallel to this has ever been attempted or achieved in extent and quality in the American Church. He also described how the dearth of clergy due to the younger men being in the trenches as chaplains, and the almost total cessation of ordinations, had led to a great and valuable increase in lay activities in the Church.

CHURCH SOCIALIST LEAGUE HOLDS MEETING IN BOSTON

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—A conference of the members and friends of the Church Socialist League was held at St. Stephen's Church February 22. There was a very representative gathering of well known church radicals, and a spirit of desire to serve the Church in these critical times was manifested by earnest discussion.

Among the topics taken up during the day were "The Responsibilities and Opportunities of the League," "The Social Preparation," and "Radicalism Among the Clergy." It was recognized that the present size and work of the league does not by any means represent the extent of radical sentiment in the Church, and the conference took two very important steps and passed two resolutions, both of which when consummated by referendum of the society will undoubtedly have very far reaching effect upon the organization, and unify and bring together those in the Church who are seen to help man the outposts of social and industrial changes.

Bishop Lawrence Goes South

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Bishop Lawrence has left for several weeks rest at Aiken, South Carolina, where he will remain until shortly before Easter.

COORDINATION UNDERTAKEN BY NEW ENGLAND SYNOD

Women Get Opportunity to Talk
But No Seats

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—The fourth synod of the Province of New England convened in St. Paul's Parish House here February 18. The synod was called to order by the Bishop of Vermont, and the Bishop of Connecticut was elected chairman. A message of affectionate greeting was sent to Bishop Lawrence from the synod. The Bishop of Vermont presented a report on coordination and the synod approved in principle the appointment of a provincial executive committee as suggested in that report.

According to the words of the resolution which, as amended, provides for the constitution of such a committee, its functions are: "to foster and coordinate the work of the Church in the province. It shall prepare the program for each meeting of the synod and the budget for provincial expenses." The matter of an executive secretary for the province was left to the discretion of the executive committee. The Bishop of Massachusetts is chairman ex-officio. The other members are, the Rev. Dr. E. deF. Miel, Dean Rousmaniere, Mr. L. D. Learned and Judge Robert J. Peaslee.

Tuesday evening the bishop and deputies to the synod were entertained at dinner by the Church Club of Connecticut at the Lawn Club. The speakers were the Bishop of Connecticut, the Rev. Dr. H. B. Washburn for the executive committee of the War Commission, and the Rev. B. I. Bell. The Bishop of Vermont invited the synod to meet at Burlington, Vermont, in 1920. The invitation was accepted. The synod was asked to appropriate the sum of $3,000 for the salary and expenses for one year of a college secretary.

A resolution by the Bishop of Western Massachusetts as amended provides that two members of each diocesan organization of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Girls' Friendly Society and the Daughters of the King be invited to the synod with the privilege of presenting and discussing the work of their organizations.

The original vote was the usual clause that they should have seats but not votes, but the Bishop of Vermont was afraid that if they had seats they might be considered almost members and, at any rate, that it would help them toward full membership. Mr. Robert H. Gardiner suggested that it was hardly courteous to ask ladies and give them standing room only.

The same provision was made for an invitation to the New England Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Following are the commissions of the synod: On social service, the Bishop of Maine, chairman; the Rev. Messrs. A. W. Moulton, J. M. McGann, J. N. Lewis, Messrs. A. A. Thomas and R. A. Woods, Mrs. Frank Streeter and Miss Vida Scudder. On missions: The Bishop of Rhode Island, chairman; the Rev. Messrs. A. M. Hilliker, T. Burgess, W. L. Clark, E. B. Holmes and Marshall E. Mott. Messrs. Henry Lewis and H. H. Hemingway. On religious education; the Bishop of Western Massachusetts, chairman; the Rev. Fr. F. H. Sill, the Rev. Dr. Lester Bradner, the Rev. Messrs. M. Taylor and J. W. Suter Jr., Miss Lucy Sturgis and Miss Mary M. Patrick.

BISHOP HAS TO EXCUSE FLABBY CHURCH MEMBERS

Bishop Israel Receives a Warm Welcome to His Diocese

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—St. Valentine's Day proved true to its reputation when the Bishop of Erie returned to his diocese as quietly as he had left it nearly two years ago. He was met at the station by a committee of the cathedral chapter and escorted to the Episcopal residence. Sunday found the Cathedral and St. Mark's and Trinity Churches crowded to the doors and the congregations listening with intense interest to his descriptions of the Y. M. C. A. and the hospital work and "the boys."

He tried to excuse to "the boys" the weak and flabby characters that are often found among church members. He said that they would have been much worse without this help; but "the boys" would have none of these excuses. One of them, who declared his dad went to church for a Sunday wash so that he could get ready to do more mean things the next week, said, "Damn them, let them live it if they expect us to believe!"

Representatives of all organizations of the city's religious and civic and social life came to greet Bishop Israel at the reception given by the chapter Monday evening.

The Archdeaconry of Meadville met at New Castle, February 18-19. Bishop Israel presided at the meetings. The evening sessions found a crowded congregation desiring to hear about "our boys." The bishop told how the boys never complained.

In the mud of northern France the bishop found a battalion from Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut. He said, "Boys, how old are you?" Every one straightened up and said, "Twenty-one." He replied, "You mustn't lie to the chaplain!" He found many of the volunteers were only sixteen and seventeen years of age. They were enduring the rigors of army life like veterans.

Wednesday was a quiet day for the clergy, conducted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Bruce Reddish. At one place he startled the clergy by telling of and denouncing ministers he knew who had refused to enter the homes of sick during the influenza epidemic.

At Meadville the city turned out to greet Bishop Israel, Wednesday evening, February 19. A reception was given in his honor by the Men's Club, and he was welcomed by all. This is the bishop's home parish where he was rector for eight years. At present the parish is without a rector, the Rev. Arthur L. Seiter having resigned and Rev. Harvey B. Marks having become locum tenens.

In Erie the Rotarians of the city gave Bishop Israel a reception and a dinner in the Hotel Lawrence, Thursday evening. It was a notable civic gathering, and the bishop came back to his own for he was one of the founders and the first president of Rotary in this city.

A Charm String Round Mother Earth

The Young Women's Christian Association is putting a charm string around old Mother Earth's neck, and if you don't know what a charm string is, your education was neglected. The latest buttons on the string and the most unique and interesting are called "International Institutes." They are houses to demonstrate friendship, and the women who pass through the doors are women who do not speak the English language. They go there to learn; and also to learn how to bring up better babies, what to do when Ignace has the croup, or Pierre cuts his finger; how to sew, and how to cook the American way. It is a bit of Americanization that strikes right at the root of things, for it begins with the home.

CAPITAL AND LABOR ARE INTERDEPENDENT

In his convention address Bishop Francis said:

"By precept and example, we Christians must proclaim the brotherhood of mankind, the unity of the nations, the equal rights of men, because we are the children of the one God, who is the Father of us all.

"The application of these principles is not confined to international relations. It affects all the relationships of men in human life. For example, that which, more than anything else, has caused unrest and turmoil in the world, which has begotten hatred and distrust, is the antagonism between Capital and Labor, between the employer and the employed. The wrong has not been confined to either the one or the other. Both have been at fault. The only remedy lies in a readjustment and in a recognition of the dependence of the one upon the other. If the capitalist would recognize that labor is capital, and the laborer that capital is essential to labor; if, in a word, men would realize that their interests are one and if each would accord to the other what justice and fair dealing demand, the threatened danger, always lurking near at hand, would pass. True Christianity can accomplish this result. It is the only thing that can accomplish it. We are being tried and tested as to the reality of our Christianity. The Church's opportunity has come and opportunity unused never tarries long, it hastens by. I urge your thoughtful and prayerful consideration of these things. Do not dismiss them as a theory with which you are not in accord, for the theory rests on the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, whom we acknowledge as Lord and Master. We have fought for justice to Belgium and France and Armenia and all the other oppressed peoples of the world. The ideals which compelled us to fight must be the ideals which shall control all our actions and all our work. The Church is the divine organization in the world for the upholding of ideals, for impressing Christ upon the hearts and lives of men. We must see to it, then, as members of the Church, that we are doing all that in us lies to enable it to fulfill its mission in and to the world."

Conference This Year at Wellesley

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS.—The conference for church work which has been held for the past several years at Cambridge will this year be held at Wellesley College, from June 19 to 30.

A Churchwoman Honored

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—Mrs. Morris Guth, a member of the cathedral congregation, who has done such splendid work for Erie as head of the Red Cross Civilian Relief, was chosen vice-president of the State Conference of Social Welfare at its annual meeting at Harrisburg.

At the meeting Erie's experience in the value of the federation of all social service organizations, which she has tried for four years, was shown by Mrs. Guth and the dean.

UPHOLD CENTRAL RULE III AT QUARTERLY MEETING

G. F. S. Conference in New York Think It Should Be Retained

A quarterly meeting of the diocesan council, G. F. S., was held in the war headquarters, February 10. An interesting report of the vacation house was read by Miss Smith, chairman of the committee. In addition to the usual summer activities devised for rest and recreation, Land Army units were trained there and after training gave acceptable service to the farmers in the neighborhood.

The special subjects for discussion at the meeting came as a result of the new central constitution, part of which ruling was left optional to dioceses. The first concerned member representation on diocesan councils and whether it should be required that such members be communicants of the Church. Miss Bunker presented the question, strongly advocating that communicants only be admitted to the governing body. The Girls' Friendly Society is a church organization and it is a matter of principle, not opinion, that the Church should safeguard her boundaries. Unless membership in the council is limited to communicants it is quite possible that the government may not only be in the hands of those of varying Christian beliefs but in those of no belief at all. Mrs. Pfau spoke with much earnestness on a different point of view. She felt that were a church distinction made in member representation it would be manifestly unfair to the girls discriminated against. It would be undemocratic. It is now required that associates shall be communicants of the Church, no others are admitted. With members, all beliefs or none are accepted. A barrier put between them when considering privileges might justly be resented by the girls.

NO CHANGE MADE

It has been proposed to change the meaning of the third central rule by allowing members to return to the society who according to the rule as it now stands have forfeited their claim to membership. Miss J. V. Minor, assistant secretary of the New York Child Labor Committee, warmly advocated the change, believing that girls who have truly repented of the sin of impurity and now live entirely upright lives have every right to claim the protection of such a society as the G. F. S. Miss McGuire, secretary of the G. F. S. A., upheld and agreed entirely with Miss Minor on all principles but did not feel that this part of Christian work belonged to the Girls' Friendly. The G. F. S. does not claim to be the whole Church, only a small part of it. The society was organized primarily to prevent this one particular sin of impurity. Recognizing the intention of those desiring to alter the rule not to lower the standards of the society, Miss McGuire felt that the change proposed would lower the standard in spite of itself. The rule for many years has been a wall of protection and prevented evil; to remove it would lessen the power to prevent, and no amount of cure can equal the value of prevention. The probability would be that few girls would desire to return to the society after breaking its present rule and these girls could be cared for in other ways.

The meeting being for conference only no votes on these subjects were taken.

HEALTH OFFICER PRAISES BISHOP AND CLERGY

Worked Night and Day in Portland Hospital

PORTLAND, OREGON.—October last, at the height of the influenza epidemic, the Portland Auditorium was used as an emergency hospital. Bishop Sumner, several of the clergy and two of the sisters of St. John Baptist were on duty, or on call, for two or three weeks. At the time nothing was said about what was done. But the following letter from the city health officer merits wider publicity, showing as it does the spirit of social service which inspired the bishop and his helpers:

PORTLAND, OREGON, January 20, 1919.

THE RT. REV. WALTER T. SUMNER:

DEAR BISHOP SUMNER: When suffering and death, coupled with chaos, reigned supreme in the Auditorium Hospital and when I was nearly distracted from lack of actual practical workers, you and several of your clergymen came and said: "Doctor, we want to help you; we want work, real work. We are willing to carry bed-pans or stretchers or do anything, but please let us help you." Never was an offer more timely, or more gratefully accepted.

You went to work, and each week found you serving long hours day and night. There was no time when one of your official family was not present, either administering to the suffering and dying or helping the nurses or orderlies in the more disagreeable work. Dear Bishop, you went through it all bravely and nobly, as you have gone through other things, and you deserve unstinted credit—the more so, for there were so many people, with less responsibility, who might have offered to help, but who did not. For a long time I have wished to express my appreciation and gratitude to you and your good clergymen, but have always felt my inability to do so. I do not feel equal to it now, but let me simply say, I am deeply grateful until such a time that actions may speak louder than words.

In the meantime any suggestion or advice offered by you will always be most welcome to any member of the Bureau of Health. If at any time I can serve you, command me. Yours sincerely,

(Signed) DR. GEORGE FARRISH,
City Health Officer.

A PHYSICIAN CONDEMNS THE CLOSING OF CHURCHES

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.—The following excerpt from a statement made to a local paper by Dr. T. S. Clay of this city is well worth perusing as the word of a Christian physician on the so-called "Flu Ban":

"In the matter of our churches open one day in the week for service, the other six days of the week ventilated, aired, unused, carefully swept and cleaned floors, never spit upon by occupants, never attended by ill people, I also feel that a great injustice is being done to this class of our citizens in the period of reconstruction, through which this country is now passing and must continue to pass. There is no influence stronger or more potent than the influence of the Church, and when this is removed by such a ban as exists at the present time we are losing one of the strongest arms for good of our civilization.

"I greatly admired the statement recently of Bishop Keiley, in which he referred to the need of and power of prayer.

I fear we are placing our trust in man and the means devised by man rather than in Him alone who made us and keeps us. Let our people be restored to their religious liberty. Our President in a time of war and difficulty sought this means by calling upon all the people to resort to the house of God in prayer. Let us now, in a time of peace and pestilence, follow his example and let our health officer, sanitary board and citizens at large follow his example. Remove the ban and restore our religious liberties and in addition restore our children to the educational advantages which should not be taken away from them. I believe that the statistics used by those who favor the ban to further their cause are misleading."

MR. DRANE FINDS TRAILS CRUSTED AND UNTRAVELED

Does 110 Miles Over Them, But Still Enjoys Life

NENANA, ALASKA, January 10.—Mr. Drane has returned from a trip to some of the Indians. After spending December 22 at the Middle River Canyon, in the Indian hunting camp, he returned the sixty-five miles to Nenana, where three services were read on Christmas Day, after which he left for Chena, arriving at the village on the evening of the 26th. The trail was crusted and untraveled, and this forty-five miles meant another long walk, but Mr. Drane says the reception accorded him put new life into him. After much singing, he was given the blanket toss. A team sent down six miles to bring him the last of his journey missed him.

The Salchaket visit had to be omitted, as a ten-day quarantine is established above Fairbanks.

The winter has been mild. Early in December we had a week of fifty below zero weather, but it has been much warmer the balance of the winter. Only one who has cut wood for fuel can fully realize what that means to our wood piles at the mission.

The children at the mission are well and happy, making good progress in their studies.

WARN OF SOCIAL UNREST

Men at Church Gathering Hear of Dangers of Bolshevism

CORTLAND, NEW YORK.—Timely warnings were sounded by State Senator Clayton R. Lusk and City Judge Rowland L. Davis, who were the principal speakers at a meeting of the men of Grace Church here Saturday, February 15. The meeting was called primarily to receive the report of an every-member canvass, but it resulted in the formation of a permanent organization of the men of the parish for social service.

Senator Lusk sounded a note of warning against social unrest. He said that for years there has been strife between capital and labor, and called attention to the conditions in Russia, where chaos reigns. He declared that nearly one-half of the so-called civilized people of the globe are at the present time living under unstable government brought on by class strife, and asserted that thousands of dollars are being used in this country to carry on the campaign of social unrest. He urged his hearers to get back of any endeavor which would eliminate that spirit of discontent which in Russia is called Bolshevism. "The time is at hand to get out and help stem the tide of unrest, if we are not already too late."

Judge Davis said that he, too, had seen the dangerous storm of discontent approaching and enveloping some sections of this country to a pronounced degree. This country cannot survive with conflict of stable government and anarchy. One or the other must prevail. We must enlist our money, our bodies and our spirit of justice in the common cause. He referred to the prohibition amendment and said that, while its need was not fundamental, he approved its adoption as a necessary drastic method. "The saloon keepers tried to reform when they saw their business interests in danger, but they waited too long." Judge Davis declared that the laboring men had not been given fair treatment for years.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF BISHOP GIBSON HELD

Over One Hundred Bishops and Clergy Are Present

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—The funeral services of Bishop Gibson were held at noon on Wednesday, February 19, at the Church of the Holy Trinity here, in the presence of a sorrowing concourse of his brother bishops, clergy and people.

The body was met at the door by a long procession led by a delegation of students from the Virginia Theological Seminary, followed by ministers of other Churches in the city, our clergy and the bishops, to the number of about one hundred. These filled the spacious choir of the church.

In the chancel were Archdeacon F. W. Neve, the Rev. E. L. Goodwin, D. D., secretary of the diocese, the Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., president of the Standing Committee, the Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, D. D., representing the Standing Committee of Southern Virginia, the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., representing the Standing Committee of Maryland, the Rev. William T. Snyder, representing the Bishop of Washington, the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., rector of the church, and the six bishops who conducted the services.

The pallbearers were selected from the Richmond clergy. The choir of the church, supplemented by members of all the other choirs of the city, occupied front pews on one side of the nave. The church was filled to overflowing. There were present deputations representing the R. E. Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans and the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, of which the bishop was a member of the advisory board.

The opening sentences were read by Bishop Brown of Virginia, Suffragan Bishop Thomson led the selections and the lessons were read by Bishop Darst of East Carolina. Bishop Murray of Maryland read the Nicene Creed, and the prayers were said by Bishop Gravatt of West Virginia. The hymns were 396, "The thousand times ten thousand," 375, "Our Blest Redeemer, ere He breathed," 672, "Blest be the tie that binds," and 176, "For all Thy Saints, who from their labors rest."

At the grave the committal was said by Bishop Brown and the concluding prayers by Bishop Tucker of Southern Virginia. Bishop Gibson is the seventh bishop of our Church whose body lies in beautiful Hollywood. Within very few years Bishop Peterkin, Bishop Randolph and Bishop Funsten have been laid to rest there, where Bishop Newton, Bishop Whittle and Bishop Thomson of Japan had preceded them, with a long roll of faithful and beloved clergymen of the days that have passed.

Fiftieth Anniversary in Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—St. Stephen's Church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. H. J. Glover is rector, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, Friday, February 21. On that evening there was a very delightful parish reception at which addresses were made by the Rev. J. H. Melish, Messrs. F. W. Farnham, J. H. G. Atkinson and the rector.

On Sunday there was an early Corporate Communion of the parish and a second celebration, with a sermon by the Rev. W. Schouler who was their first rector and addresses by other former rectors.

In the afternoon appropriate exercises were held in the Church School, and in the evening Bishop Burgess administered the rite of Confirmation and preached.

Our Weekly News Letters

WASHINGTON

Church Community Centre Opened.—

The new plans of developing Trinity Church in Washington into a centre of diocesan and community activities was marked on Feb. 8 and 9 by the entrance of the Rev. David R. Covell, the new vicar, upon his duties, and by a great reception on Saturday afternoon and evening, and a festival service on Sunday night. From four o'clock until ten o'clock Saturday people representative of all elements in the community came to see the renovated church and parish hall, to greet Mr. Covell and his wife, and to wish Godspeed to the new undertaking.

The bishop informally opened the new work. The head of the Navy League, Mrs. James Carroll Fraser, with a corps of assistants, received the guests.

The commodious parish hall has been transformed so as to contain not only a large dormitory and an assembly hall, but also billiard rooms and club rooms. Here at this point, accessible to all portions of the city and in the vicinity of Union Station, during the whole period of demobilization the Navy League and the Church together will maintain an active work for the benefit of the soldiers, sailors, and marines, and endeavor will be made not only to provide them with a home and club facilities in Washington but also to help them to bridge over this difficult period in their lives by throwing around them religious influences and moral safeguards.

The great event on Sunday was the service Sunday night, when the music was rendered by the cathedral choir, and in response to the invitations, personal and public, a great and representative congregation of upwards of fourteen hundred persons thronged the church and included numerous marines, soldiers, and sailors. A short service with plenty of congregational hymns heartily sung was followed by a very strong address by the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York City.

The service was conducted by the dean and canons of the cathedral, together with the vicar, the Rev. David R. Covell.

One of the features of the occasion was the unfurling of the flags of the Allies, suspended from the great galleries of the church, after which the congregation sang: "O God Our Help in Ages Past."

This was the first of a regular plan of Sunday evening events which will emphasize the community and the social aspects of the work. Sunday mornings and afternoons will be given over to the usual round of church worship and Sunday activities.

NEW YORK

At the Cathedral.—The services at the cathedral on Sunday were especially interesting. Archdeacon Greig's sermon in the morning is given elsewhere in this issue. In the afternoon more than a thousand school girls from sixteen schools belonging to the Headmistresses' Association attended a victory service at which Dean Robbins was the preacher. They assembled in Old Synod Hall and at a quarter before four marched into the cathedral, filling almost every available seat in the crossing. The parents of the girls sat in the choir stalls. At ten o'clock the monthly celebration of the Holy Communion in Chinese was held in St. Saviour's Chapel.

Interesting Service at Holy Trinity.—On Sunday evening a most impressive service was held at the church of the Holy Trinity (St. James' Parish) when the men of the parish who have come back from their service to the country were welcomed home. A new silk service flag with 169 stars was presented to the church. The preacher was Dr. Stires who told in a vivid way his experiences in France with the A. E. F.

A Tablet Dedicated at St. James.—On Sunday morning, February 23, a tablet was dedicated in St. James' Church by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Crowder, in memory of Thomas Powell Fowler, vestryman of the parish from 1882 to 1900, and senior warden from 1900 to 1915, the year of his death. The tablet, which is bronze, and beautifully executed, is the gift of Mr. Fowler's widow, who, with the other members of his family, has continued to be active and helpful in the life and work of St. James' Church.

Meetings and Quiet Days.—On March 12 the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese will hold their annual quiet day at the Church of Zion and St. Timothy. Dean Fosbroke will conduct the meditations. Bishop Howden of New Mexico will be the speaker at the regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on March 4. Archdeacon Greig will conduct the annual retreat at the General Theological Seminary this week. Dr. Slattery will conduct a quiet day for the clergy of Dutchess County at Poughkeepsie on Wednesday of this week.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Clergyman on State Hospital Board.—Governor Smith has included in the list of nominees for the board of managers of the Utica State Hospital for the Insane the name of the Rev. Dr. E. H. Coley, rector of Calvary Church in that city.

Fellowship Dinner.—The first "fellowship" dinner of St. Paul's parish, Syracuse, was held in the Lockwood Memorial House on Friday evening, February 14. Baptists, Presbyterians, Christian Scientists, Roman Catholics, Universalists and Congregationalists are reported as taking part in the after-dinner speaking.

Rapid Progress.—Definite action toward the establishment of a new parish in Syracuse was taken on Septuagesima Sunday. For some time services have been held in the Seventeenth Ward of the city in the homes of persons interested, but the growing congregations have taxed the capacity of some houses and the safety of others. With the approval of Bishop Olmsted a temporary organization has been formed by the naming of an executive committee, to which has been delegated power to take action toward the purchase of property to be converted into a chapel. The project has the assurance of enough members to support a parish, from those who reside in that part of the city and find it difficult to reach other parishes on account of distance. A lot is in view, large enough for building purposes, which contains a large house that can be cheaply and conveniently converted into a chapel.

UNIQUE MEMORIAL RECEIVED BY PHILADELPHIA CHURCH

$10,000 for Use of Rector for Individual Cases of Need

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany has become recipient of a unique memorial in the form of a $10,000 deed of trust in memory of the late William Henry Barnes who was a director of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The dispersal of its income year by year makes possible the relief of cases other than those provided for in general ways or in the customary usages of parishes.

Among the purposes recited in the deed are these: "To keep true account of the principal of the said fund, separate and distinct from the endowment or any other funds of the church, and . . . to pay the net income arising from the said fund to the then rector of the church . . . at such stated intervals as shall from time to time be determined by the vestry as then constituted, to be expended and paid out by him for the alleviation of the sickness, want and distress of deserving persons, whose needs are brought to his attention in the course of his pastoral or professional ministrations."

It is especially "stipulated and provided: that the income shall not be used for repairs or maintenance of the church or for the expense of the services conducted therein, and that the income shall not be paid over to institutions or organizations, the object and purpose of the fund being to meet the necessities of individuals in sickness, want and distress. And, that an annual account or memoranda shall be furnished by the rector to the vestry of the income received by him from the fund showing the application which has been made of it."

Mr. Barnes was a man of wide acquaintance and diversified interests. He died on May 5, 1918 and his body lies buried at Old St. David's, near his home in Devon, where he had made his country residence for a quarter of a century. He is survived by John Henry Barnes, Esq., and by Miss Anne Hampton Barnes. The memorial given to the church has been made by the latter.

DEATH OF LIEUT. EDWARDS FOLLOWED DEVOTED LIFE

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—In a letter printed for a "memorial service for the Detroit heroes who will not return" at St. Paul's Cathedral, a story of the career and death of Lieut. Frederick Trevenen Edwards is printed, as follows:

First Lieutenant Frederick Trevenen Edwards, adjutant 18th Field Artillery, U. S., was the only son of Frederick Edwards and Emma Louisa (Satterthwait). He was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, on July 11, 1892. The class of 1893, of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, stood as his godfather, at his baptism. He was educated in the public schools of Bridgewater and Malden, Massachusetts, and graduated from the Milwaukee Academy in 1909, winning the Markam Gold Medal for oratory. In 1915 he graduated from the Arts Course in Columbia University, New York City, receiving the degree of A.B. In the fall of that year he entered the General Theological Seminary, New York, and became first a postulant and then a candidate for Holy Orders in the Diocese of New York, passing some of his examinations for the diaconate before he entered the army. He was passionately concerned about the war from its outbreak in 1914, and was only restrained from entering the British or French service by the counsel of his father, who felt that it was only a matter of time when his country would call him.

When we declared war in 1917 he immediately left the seminary, in May of his middle year, came to Detroit, where his father was dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, presented himself for examination at Fort Wayne, was accepted, enlisted and went to the First Officers' Training Camp at Fort Sheridan, Illinois. At the end of August, 1917, he was offered his choice of a first lieutenancy in the national army, or a provisional lieutenancy in the regular army. He chose the latter. After a few days with his family he joined his regiment at Fort Bliss, Texas, where he remained until April, 1918, when it was brought to Camp Merritt, near New York, and there his family spent a few happy days with him before he went overseas. The regiment sailed for France.

Upon arriving in France they were sent to an artillery school and remained there until the early days of July, when they started for the front. During this time Trevenen made progress and was successively promoted to be battalion adjutant and later on regimental gas officer, when he was attached to the headquarters staff. He was sent to the gas school at General Headquarters for a week's special training, and joined his regiment at Viffort, just below Chateau Thierry, where they were heavily engaged. They fought in the battle of the Marne without respite, until they reached Fismes, on the Vesle, on the 3rd of August, and then went back into rest billets. Soon they were on the move again, this time to St. Mihiel, where they were engaged again until the salient was wiped out. At this time he was promoted to be first lieutenant and regimental adjutant. Then, by forced marches, they proceeded to another position. He wrote regularly and fully, making no complaint, but it was a story of continued hardship, in rain and cold and mud, when he did not have his clothes off for four weeks at a time. His last letters contain an account of the fearful fighting, the last of all being written on the battlefield, October 5, shortly after nine in the morning.

On November 7 the fatal blue letter was opened, telling the story of his death. He was severely wounded in action in the town of Montfaucon, was taken to Field Hospital No. 114 about 11 o'clock on October 5, and died very early the next morning, October 6, about three o'clock. He was buried with military honors at Fleury-sur-Aire, Meuse, in a French cemetery. It was a singular coincidence that the first Sunday in October, which was the 6th, was the day on which it had long been planned he should begin his ministry by assisting in the services and preaching in his father's place. It was on that morning he died. At the memorial service his seat was marked with flowers, and then and there he entered upon his silent ministry.

Blue Sunday Laws May Go

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Many of the business men, and some of the clergy, are in favor of repealing many of the laws that make the city unduly sad, on Sunday. The business men declare that travelling men avoid Sundays here, and the clergy say they favor concerts and some entertainment. A bill is before the state legislature at the present time, which provides for a less puritanical observance of the day.

RAILROAD MAN SETS GOING ORGANIZATION OF LAYMEN

Bishop Fiske Cites Roosevelt as Ideal for Church Worker

UTICA, NEW YORK.—The fact that Theodore Roosevelt was once a Sunday School teacher and superintendent was presented to a large group of men in Calvary Church, Utica, Sunday afternoon by Bishop Fiske as an argument against the idea that engaging in church work is effeminate. "It is a big man's job," he said.

The meeting was called to consider the plan evolved by a Syracuse man, Frank H. Pyke, division freight agent of the D. L. & W. R. R., of organizing service groups of laymen in the parishes of the diocese. Mr. Pyke said that the germ of his idea was found in the systematic work recently done in the army camps by secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The plan met with the ready approval of Bishop Olmsted, Bishop Fiske and the general secretary of the Brotherhood. The meeting Sunday was the first of the series being held in the chief centers of the diocese. It numbered nearly 100 selected men, representing all the parishes of Utica and many of the adjoining towns.

The Rev. Dr. Coley, rector of the parish, conducted a brief opening service in which Mr. Roosevelt's favorite hymn was sung, "How Firm a Foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

Mr. J. Frank Shelby, general secretary of the Brotherhood, outlined the plan which he has come to the diocese to put in operation. Parish groups of representative men, with the same spirit of loyalty to their Church as to their government will be formed in every parish. The chairman of each parish group will be a member of a diocesan service group which will occupy the same relation to the bishop that the parish group will to the rector. Two definite lines of work were suggested by Mr. Shelby, either the formation of a Bible class for the six weeks of Lent each year, or the carrying out of a program to make evening services more attractive. "Our men need comradeship in the Church and in no Church in the world more than in the Episcopal Church," said Mr. Shelby. "We need to get closer together. That is the fundamental reason why so many of our confirmed boys do not remain in the Church. It is the Church where men are most active that is most highly regarded in the community."

Bishop Fiske said that he was deeply interested in this plan. He felt that the same methods used for the Liberty Loan and the Red Cross should succeed in the work of Jesus Christ. He told of his experience in the camps, where he learned that while 97 per cent. of the soldiers had a religious preference only 50 per cent. of these were Church members, half of whom rarely attended services. Some had not been to Communion in years. Many men were practically pagan. They had a splendidly religious spirit in simple things. They were courageous, unselfish, generous, humble-minded. They had fundamental ideas of real religion, but these were not linked up with Christ or His Church. There is great significance in this condition found in "a cross section of American society of all classes." A campaign with "money left out" is highly desirable.

Bishop Olmsted added that he felt it to be time that the men of the Church did more active spiritual work. They do not talk enough to other men about religion, thinking it to be hypocritical or effeminate.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LOSSES ARE TO BE OVERCOME

Diocese of Bethlehem Has Plans for Lenten Campaign

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—A Lenten Church School Campaign has been inaugurated by the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Bethlehem to overcome the great losses which have been revealed throughout the parishes of Bethlehem in the last two years. It has been found that the decline in the enrollments of our church schools began eight years ago, and that in the past twenty-four months the Diocese of Bethlehem has lost 1,340 officers, teachers and pupils. City, suburban and rural schools have lost in about the same ratio. The greater part of the losses is no doubt due to the distractions incident to the withdrawal of numbers of men and women for active war work and the epidemic, which was especially severe and alarming in the region covered by the Diocese of Bethlehem.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education has planned an elaborate program for the re-enrollment of all old scholars, teachers and officers.

The Lenten season has been set aside for the period of the campaign, and a threefold "drive" has been mapped out to get old members and new ones into the Sunday School, to secure the co-operation of the home, and all the other parochial forces related thereto, and, lastly, to strive for the largest possible Sunday School Lenten offering.

In the thirteen years of the history of the Diocese of Bethlehem, the Sunday Schools have given $53,081, and have occupied second place in the Province of Washington.

BP. REESE AND DR. JEFFERYS TEACH AT GENEVA SCHOOL

Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio and Dr. Jefferys of Philadelphia have both consented to teach at the Summer School of the Province of New York and New Jersey next July. The school will hold its seventh annual meeting at Hobart College, Geneva, New York, from June 30 to July 11. The program as planned is unusually rich in its promise of good things. The daily Bible class is to be led by Dr. Jefferys on "Thinking With Christ in the Twentieth Century." A new feature is the two days' conference for the clergy on July 8 and 9, led by Bishop Reese. Miss Lucy Sturgis and Mrs. Charles Hutchison will have mission study classes, and a life work class led by Miss Sarah Ashurst of Cuba will be conducted for the first time. Miss Mabel Hill and the Rev. Samuel Tyler, D.D., of Rochester, will lead classes in social service. Dr. Bradner, Dr. Boynton, Miss Withers and Canon Elmendorf will teach again. The young people are planning to present The Vision of St. Agnes' Eve, a mystery play, out-of-doors. Bishop Stearly is again pastor and president of the school. Applications for registration and requests for information should be directed to the secretary of the school, Mrs. G. H. Lewis, St. Andrew's Rectory, New Paltz, New York.

Pre-Revolutionary Chandeliers Used

OXFORD, NEW YORK.—During a breakdown of the electric lighting system by which this village is served, Litany was said by candle light on a recent Friday night. St. Paul's Church possesses some of the chandeliers which were sent from England in pre-Revolutionary days for the use of St. George's Chapel, New York City, and by which that historic building was lighted in the days when candles were commonly used. These are generally illuminated on occasions of great festivity and prove their value in emergencies.

CHURCH HOSPITAL OPENS

Wuchang Now Has One of the Finest in Country

WUCHANG, CHINA.—The Church General Hospital here was formally opened December 14 at 2 P. M., in the presence of a large gathering of invited guests, Chinese and foreigners. The exercises were held in the space between the hospital and the doctor's house on the most beautiful day of our late autumn. Speeches were made by the acting governor, the American consul and the bishop, by Dr. Yen and Mr. Sherman of the board of managers, and by Mr. Hsu, president of the Wuchang Chamber of Commerce, who spoke feelingly as one who had benefited in his own family from the hospital's ministrations.

Boone Band played and scrolls were presented by Dr. Wu of the Iron Works on behalf of Dr. L. N. Chang. Tea was served in one of the large open-air wards at the top of the building. Every one present was full of gratitude to those in America who have made possible this beautiful and convenient building, which, when completed, will be one of the very best hospital buildings in China. Owing to the tremendous loss by exchange, some $35,000 remains to be raised for the plant, and the committee in America is still at work on this problem. One of the most important memorials is the two large operating rooms which were the gift of Miss Olden of Princeton as a memorial to Mrs. Smith, aunt of Mr. Ludlow and Mrs. Howe. Doctors and nurses report that a decided raising of the tone of the hospital work has followed the move to the new and sanitary buildings now formally dedicated to their high service.

Governor Appoints Clergyman

GRASS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.—Governor Stephens appointed the Rev. Bert Foster, D.D., rector of Grass Valley, to be delegate from Northern California to the Pacific Coast Congress for a League of Nations, which was held in San Francisco February 19-20. The appointment was made on the recommendation of the Pacific Coast Congress Committee.

Oriental Research School Reopens

The American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, which has been closed on account of the war since the end of 1914, will reopen this year. The new director of the school is Prof. William H. Worrell, of the Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford, Connecticut, a noted Arabist and Orientalist. With him will be associated Prof. Albert T. Clay, of Yale University, distinguished as archaeologist and Assyriologist. The Fellow under appointment is Dr. W. F. Albright of Johns Hopkins University. The renovated condition of Palestine promises a new era for the school. It offers great opportunities for those who wish to know the Holy Land at first hand and is confident of American support. Information can be obtained from Prof. J. A. Montgomery, chairman, University of Pennsylvania, or Prof. George A. Barton, secretary, Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

BISHOP ISRAEL WARMLY WELCOMED IN SCRANTON

Newspaper Writer Pays Him a High Tribute

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—A large number of people greeted Bishop Israel, of the Diocese of Erie, at an informal reception hastily arranged at noon recently in the parish house of St. Luke's Church. The bishop, just back from eighteen months spent in the war zones, was exceedingly happy to be with his former parishioners.

Bishop Israel's most harrowing experiences were in the Toul sector, where he was under fire several times and had a number of close calls. He told of one Saturday night when nearly 300 men were wounded and maimed and brought to his hospital and more than 100 were killed. He personally helped bury sixty-four of these. It was while working with the stretcher bearers that the boche shells were fired at him. "We simply got into a shell hole, although the boys said it was a close shave," explained the bishop.

Bishop Israel disputed the fact that the war had caused a great religious revival. The soldiers were just plain ordinary American boys who took things more seriously because they faced death, he explained. "They were anxious to attend services because they realized that they were so near to death and therefore near to God. No person under the circumstances could help being more serious."

Bishop Israel traveled over the entire battle front twice. He was in the front line trenches, had mess with the men, ate their hardtack and lived with them in billets.

The following tribute appeared in a Scranton paper: "Bishop Israel entered the war zone before the United States declared war against Germany. He thought it to be his first duty to Christianity and humanity to be where he could edify by his life and example and bring the largest possible alleviation of human misery, which one man is capable of attaining."

"He went to work like a man and did a man's work among the troops on the firing line. He was wherever his presence was needed. He traveled thousands of miles along the front, preaching, praying, visiting hospitals, bringing what consolation he could, spiritual and material, to the sick and dying. All his work was accomplished with the modesty and abhorrence of notoriety which we in Scranton, and particularly the newspaper men of Scranton, knew when he was among us to be his distinguishing characteristic. I am positive if the war continued 20 years and that he lived so long amid its catastrophes and horrors, Bishop Israel would not have left the battle line under any compulsion or inducement whatever. It is characteristic of Dr. Israel that he did not leave the battlefield for a single hour during the two years in which he lived on it, except for an occasional official visit to Paris. There was no furlough or leave of absence for him. The Bishop of London obtained more advertising out of the war in two of his visits to France than Bishop Israel obtained out of the war during the two years in which he served as chaplain in the trenches and on the firing line and in the hospitals. Bishop Israel was one of the clergymen who assisted at the obsequies of the late James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald. This was one of the rare occasions during the war in which his name had been prominently mentioned in American newspapers that I could discover."

CHICAGO

Quiet Day for Women.—The fourth annual quiet day for business women was held on Saturday, February 22, Washington's Birthday, at the Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul. Dr. Stewart of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, was the conductor. He gave two talks in the morning and two in the afternoon. Luncheon was served at the mission house by the sisters of St. Mary.

Church Club Dinner.—On Thursday evening, February 20, the Church Club of Chicago gave a dinner at the City Club. The Rev. George Craig Stewart spoke on his experiences as a chaplain on the American Front in Europe. Announcement was made about the noon-day services at the Majestic Theater during Lent. The speakers are expected to be as follows: Bishop Johnson, Dr. Freeman, Bishop Fiske, Dean Bell, Dean Abbott and Dr. William C. Sturgis. The gathering wished Godspeed to Bishop Anderson, who left the next day. He expects to sail for Europe shortly after the first of March as chairman of a commission to confer with representatives of the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Churches on the matter of the World Conference on Faith and Order.

Dr. Carleton to Come to Wilmette.—Dr. Hubert Carleton, formerly secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and at present at Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, has accepted a call to St. Augustine's Church, Wilmette. Dr. Carleton will take charge of his new parish on April 1.

The Cathedral.—The Rev. Bertram Smith, who was ordained deacon last spring, has come to take up his work at the Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul as a member of the city mission staff. Mr. Smith is an old cathedral boy and was athletic director at the cathedral while he was at the seminary. He left the seminary in 1917 and enlisted in the Marine Corps. After his period of training he was sent to Santo Domingo, and was later promoted to the rank of second lieutenant. He preached at the cathedral on February 23.

The Rev. L. B. Hastings has been appointed senior priest at the cathedral, and is in charge of the work at the cathedral and the city mission.

CHARLES L. STREET.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

St. Mark's, Coldwater, Calls a Rector.—The rectorship of St. Mark's Church, Coldwater, vacant since the death of the Rev. John Hewitt, about a year ago, is likely soon to be filled. A call has been extended to the Rev. George A. Moore of St. Andrew's, Peoria, Illinois, and it is understood that he will accept upon his discharge from service as chaplain in the army. He is now stationed at Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Bereavement of the Rector of Muskegon.—Mrs. Anne Parsons Tunks, wife of the Rev. Walter P. Tunks, rector of St. Paul's Church, Muskegon, died of influenza after four days' illness, at the home of her mother, Mrs. Gustavus Parsons, in Columbus, Ohio, on February 9. She was a young woman greatly esteemed and beloved.

F. O. GRANNISS.

LOS ANGELES

A Loss to the Diocese.—The death of the Rev. C. Irving Mills, rector of St. Mark's Church, Glendale, was a distinct loss to the diocese.

Upon his arrival in Glendale in 1913, he found the church poor in the world's goods but rich in the enthusiasm and Christian ideals of its members,—few in number. His labors in this pastorate resulted in the upbuilding of St. Mark's, the purchase of a new building site and the general reestablishment of the institution. Ill health compelled him to resign his pastorate during Eastertide of 1917.

While located in Denver he instituted the movement for the building of the Ascension Memorial Church of that city, which edifice was completed during his administration. For six years Dr. Mills found time to act as secretary of the Colorado diocese as well as in the capacity of editor of the Colorado Churchman.

BETHLEHEM

Sunday Schools to Reorganize.—A special meeting of the teachers and officers of the Sunday Schools in the vicinity of Scranton was held at St. David's Church, Scranton, the Rev. G. H. Harvey, rector, on February 19 for the purpose of considering the Lenten Church School Campaign of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education.

This campaign aims to re-organize the Sunday Schools of every parish in the diocese, the re-enrollment of former pupils and the securing of new enrollments. Also a modification of the present system of teacher training and to make a definite plan to secure the co-operation of the homes of the children. Literature describing the three principal features of the campaign is to be placed in the hands of the rectors and superintendents at once and an effort is now being made to have the entire diocese begin the campaign simultaneously on the first Sunday in Lent, closing on Easter Day.

Widespread Activity.—Throughout the entire diocese there is an evidence of intense activity on the part of the parishes, both in ordinary parochial work and in extra gatherings of organizations and societies.

In Trinity Church, Pottsville, the Rev. Howard Diller, rector, the twelfth annual supper for the men of the parish will be held on the 19th. They have had to limit the number of the men to the seating capacity of their hall, keeping it down to 300. The bishop of the diocese and Dr. W. C. Sturgis, educational secretary of the Board of Missions are among the speakers.

Trinity Church, Carbondale, holds a men's dinner on the 20th.

St. James Church, Jermy, recently held a most successful dinner, with the bishop of the diocese and two laymen of the church, Mr. H. W. Kingsbury and Mr. Willard M. Bunnell, among the speakers.

Results of Canvass Felt.—The Pro-Cathedral of the Church of the Nativity, South Bethlehem, is reaping the rich results of the every name campaign inaugurated by Dean Larned in December. Not only were the pledges subscribed to meet all apportionments and parish expenses but there was an over-subscription large enough to pay the salary of a special missionary. The parish has accepted the Rev. W. Hoke Ramsaur who has gone to Liberia.

G. F. S. Progresses.—Miss Jeannette Zeigler, representative of the Girls' Friendly Society, has made a two weeks visit in the archdeaconry of Scranton, visiting parishes in Honesdale, Carbondale, Pittston, Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. She has aroused a great interest in the new program of the Girls' Friendly Society and has formed branches in five parishes and stimulated very greatly the work in others. At Grace Church, Honesdale, a group of associates has been brought together and plans made for an active branch. The same thing applies to Trinity Church, Carbondale and to St. David's Church, Scranton, where a candidates group of thirty members has been formed. St. Mark's Church, Dunmore, has adopted the new era program as has also St. Luke's Church, Scranton, where a group of active church women, fifteen in number, have undertaken to push the latest plans of the society to the very utmost.

IOWA

Welfare Work in Des Moines.—Just entering on its second year is the United Welfare Bureau, whose object is expressed as follows in its charter: "The federation of the charities and relief-giving organizations of the city of Des Moines, so that such co-operation may reduce duplication and give minimum service in the way of community betterment; leaving, however, to each of the charities and relief-giving agencies its separate organization and the direction and management of the affairs peculiar to its work."

The year preceding this federation of forces there were forty-two campaigns for funds, each charity making its own separate appeal. But in the year just past, under the united plan of work, one great "drive" was made, lasting one week. The interesting experiment was tried of including in the campaign the appeal for Armenian, Syrian and Jewish relief. The amount asked for, in the city of Des Moines, was $200,000, and the subscriptions totalled nearly $210,000. After the Oriental relief work is given its fixed percentage of this amount, the various charities of the city are allowed each its quota, according to its needs and the results of the work for which it has been able to achieve. Included among these is St. Monica's Home for Girls, which has been doing a very remarkable work, under Deaconesses Wurts and Roberts. Bishop Longley is chairman of the board of trustees.

ALLEN JACOBS.

ALBANY

Twenty-Fifth Anniversary.—A service in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rev. Harry Van Allen as diocesan missionary among the deaf of the Diocese of Albany took place in St. Paul's Church, Albany, on Sunday afternoon, February 9. Mr. Van Allen was ordained by Bishop Doane and is at present in charge of the deaf mute work in the dioceses of Western and Central New York as well as Albany. The speakers were the Rev. Dr. Enos, rector of St. Paul's Church, Troy, and president of the Commission for Deaf Mute Work; the Rev. Roeliff H. Brooks, rector of St. Paul's Church, Albany, and the Rev. W. W. Ellsworth of Johnstown. The service and addresses were interpreted in the sign language by Mr. Elwood Stevenson of New York. Miss Alice E. Judge, the choir leader of St. Ann's Church for the Deaf in New York, was in charge of the music. The hymns were given orally by Mr. Stevenson.

Mid-Winter Meeting of the Diocesan Assembly.—The Albany diocesan assembly of the B. S. A. held its midwinter meeting in Christ Church, Troy, the Rev. G. C. Wadsworth, rector, on Monday evening, February 10. Forty-one men representing nine chapters were present. Reports showed a revival of dormant chapters and several new chapters in the course of formation.

PHILADELPHIA

Every Member Campaign.—Following upon the discovery that the work of the church is being carried on by one-sixth and supported by one-third of the membership, all of the one hundred and fifty parishes of the diocese are active and interested in an every member campaign. Prayer, service and giving are the aims and slogans of this great movement.

It is largely ignorance that accounts for this indifference on the part of church people. From now until the campaign of education begins the organization of parish and district and diocesan committees is being perfected. Prayer circles are being formed, instructions are being sent out. The clergy and laity are being informed and interested; the women in many parishes are already doing great service as messengers, carrying news of the plan and progress of the work to every family.

In the week of March 9 each parish will, separately, hold services and meetings, at which the parish opportunities will be set forth, and workers enlisted for parochial service.

On March 16 the work of the diocese will be set forth for a week at various centers. The chairman of one of these diocesan sections lately discovered that there were one hundred and eighty-five organizations working in the diocese for all sorts and conditions of men.

The week of March 23 will be given to sectional meetings, when the Rev. Messrs. Patton and Wood will present the worldwide work of the whole Church. Other speakers in this list will be: Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, the Rev. Messrs. Philip Cook of Baltimore, W. C. Whitaker of Knoxville, W. H. Milton of Wilmington, North Carolina, and W. T. Sturgis of the Board of Missions.

On March 27 there will be a mass meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House to give instruction and inspiration to all who are to make the house-to-house canvass on Sunday, March 30.

The unusual feature of this campaign lies in the featuring of information and service; the financial gain will be secondary, a fruit and a proof of the interest and understanding aroused.

Mr. Richmond Deposed.—On February 13, in the chapel of the church house, in the presence of the Rev. Messrs. Hord and Morris, Bishop Rhinelander deposed the Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, he having declared his renunciation of the ministry of this Church.

Church School Superintendents Meet.—The eleventh meeting of the church school superintendents of the diocese will be held at the Church of the Covenant, Twenty-seventh street and Girard avenue, on Thursday evening, February 27. After the supper there will be an address and conference on "Stopping Leaks." The speaker will be Mr. Harry E. Paisley, superintendent of the County Association.

Memorial Altar for Soldier Churchman.—An altar will be erected in the Church of the Savior in West Philadelphia, in memory of Captain Howard C. McCall, who was killed in action in France. Several soldier members of this parish were lost in action. This is the first memorial of the sort to be erected in memory of those lost in the great war.

Wider Use of Parish House.—The Rev. David M. Steele, rector of the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, has recently extended an invitation to all organizations working in the central part of the city to use the parish house for meetings. He is eager to serve the community in the large quarters there, and hopes to accommodate afternoon and evening meetings of charitable and civic organizations.

LEXINGTON

Annual Council Meets.—The twenty-fourth annual council of the diocese was held February 11-12, in Trinity Church, Covington, Kentucky, the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector.

Special legislation was taken on the matter of the eligibility of women to membership in the council, the report of the committee to which this was referred at the last council being, that, "in the absence of action by the General Convention there should be no separate diocesan action upon it." Members of the committee and of the council felt that scope should be given the activities and interest of the women communicants in church matters, but because such membership in the governing bodies of the Church so affected the organization of the Church as a whole, the Council, in order to ascertain the mind of the Church on this important question, directed its deputies to the next General Convention to present to that convention the question as to the wisdom of making women eligible to our diocesan councils.

The Standing Committee on Church Unity of this diocese was directed to take steps to place the Church in touch with the proposed plan of the Interchurch World Movement of North America.

Special attention was given the matter of increased salaries for the clergy, and a committee was appointed to bring this matter to the attention of all vestries and church committees.

Perhaps the first officer of the kind in our Church is that of secretary for clerical supply, to which office Judge Lyman Chalkley had been appointed. It will be the endeavor of the secretary for clerical supply to keep always at hand a list of clergymen from among whom to supply future vacancies immediately upon their occurrence.

The following officers were elected: treasurer, Mr. Charles H. Edge; chancellor, Mr. John T. Shelby; registrar, Mr. J. E. Keller; historiographer, Miss Kate Scudder; commissioner of insurance, Mr. Charles J. Smith; commissioner of deeds, Mr. J. Craig Shelby.

Standing Committee: the Rev. George H. Harris, the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, the Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Mr. W. D. Spalding, Mr. Henry Higgin, Dr. W. B. McClure.

Trustees of the diocese: Mr. A. D. Cole, Mr. J. T. Shelby, the Hon. Mat Cohen, Mr. A. C. Hunter, Dr. W. B. McClure.

Ecclesiastical court: the Rev. Alex. Patterson, the Rev. T. L. Settle, the Rev. H. P. Manning, the Rev. G. H. Harrison, the Rev. J. C. Stephenson.

Deputies to General Convention: Clerical; the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D.D., Lexington; the Rev. George H. Harris, Versailles; the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, Covington; the Rev. George H. Harrison, Ashland. Lay: Mr. A. C. Hunter, Versailles; Mr. A. D. Cole, Maysville; Mr. J. T. Shelby, Lexington; Mr. Henry Higgin, Newport.

HENRY P. MANNING.

OLYMPIA

A Loss to the Diocese.—The Rev. Robert Marshall Harrison, D.D., rector of St. Paul's Bellingham, who died recently at the age of sixty-five, had done a very successful work, resulting in a well-knit parish. He was beloved not only in his own parish but throughout the city of Bellingham. He achieved the placing in the church of a fine pipe organ, which will now be made a memorial. The burial, which was in Bellingham, was conducted by Bishop Keator, Archdeacon Hilton, and a number of the clergy of the diocese. The ministers of the several churches in Bellingham attended in a body as a tribute of their affection for him. He was ordained by Bishop Littlejohn in 1898, and was successively assistant at the Church of the Holy Comforter, Philadelphia, and minister-in-charge of Holy Trinity Chapel, Philadelphia. Los Gatos, California, was his only western parish besides Bellingham.

The Rev. R. J. Arney Ill.—The Rev. Rodney J. Arney, rector of St. James, Kent, Washington, is suffering from a partial paralysis of the vocal cords. He is spending his leave of absence in California in a complete rest from all duties parochial and diocesan.

Bishop on Important Commission.—Bishop Keator of Olympia has been appointed by Governor Lister of Washington a member of the Veterans' Welfare Commission, created by a bill regarded as the most important piece of war business put forward by the present legislature. Its aim is to find ways and means of putting soldiers back into civil life, with funds at hand to do almost anything to help the state turn from a war to a peace basis. In appointing Bishop Keator, together with the other four members of the commission, Governor Lister says: "I have given the selection of the commission extended consideration and feel that the men named are particularly qualified for the great task that is to be accomplished."

EDWARD M. TRABER.

NEW MEXICO

Notes.—On Sunday, February 2, the Rev. K. L. Houlder, who comes from the missionary district of San Joaquin, was instituted, as rector of the church at Deming. As Camp Cody, where many soldiers have been stationed is nearby, it is fortunate that we now have a clergyman settled in this parish.

The Rev. R. E. Browning, who has been in war service, is expected to resume his duties as rector of the church in Silver City, early in March. The Rev. W. H. Ziegler, the newly chosen rector of St. John's Church, Albuquerque, who also has been in war service, has arrived there, and held his first church service on Sunday, Feb. 16. On Sunday, Feb. 9, the bishop visited St. Clements parish, El Paso, Texas, when fifteen adult persons were confirmed.

ARIZONA

Bishop's Visit.—At a recent visitation at Grace Church the bishop confirmed one of the professors of the State University and his wife. In the afternoon he visited St. Luke's in the Desert, one of our newer enterprises, and found it in an encouraging condition. Only $9.00 a week is charged to patients here, which does not begin to cover their expenses. The balance is met from funds of the Arizona Health League, which are at the bishop's disposal for the support of our hospitals. To complete this hospital as planned will take $10,000. Each unit costs $500 to build and $100 to furnish. The superintendent, Mr. E. C. Clark, gives his services without compensation. In addition to these duties he is treasurer of Grace Church and superintendent of the Sunday School, and as lay reader has charge of Fort Lowell and Oracle.

WESTERN COLORADO

Awakening of Interest in the District.—With the gradual lifting of the influenza ban in many parts of the district, reports from all sections indicate a renewal of interest. In Montrose and Olathe under the fine leadership of the Rev. W. M. Ford the "Community Prayer League" is taking real hold of the minds of the people. This league counts in its membership an increasing number both in and outside the membership of the Church. In Gunnison where the Rev. P. C. Bissell was installed early in November the report shows a desire to build up the work as soon as the ban is removed. Ever since Mr. Bissell came the town has been under the strictest quarantine, but as in so many places this has added at least negatively to an interest in rising to renewed standards of activity and advance. In Delta County the missions under the care of the Rev. Hugh D. Wilson are rallying to his leadership. In Paonia and Delta the duplex envelope has been inaugurated and in Hotchkiss, pending the definite organization of the parish work, individuals are taking sets of envelopes and making returns directly to the missionary for transmission to the district, and the Board of Missions.

KENTUCKY

A $100,000 Campaign.—A campaign to raise $100,000 which will increase the Bishop Dudley Memorial Fund of the Diocese of Kentucky from $35,000 to $135,000, will start Monday, December 17. Thirty-five of the leading churchmen of the diocese, headed by S. Thurston Ballard, a prominent Louisville business man, the Rev. J. M. Maxon, rector of St. Mark's Church, Louisville and Gilmer S. Adams, H. D. Ormsby, and L. D. Wallace, also Louisville business men, will see that every communicant in the diocese has an opportunity to contribute. It is said that nearly half of the amount has been promised already by the wealthy churchmen of Louisville.

The Bishop Dudley Memorial fund will be used as an endowment for the support of the Kentucky Episcopate. The interest will be used to pay the salary of the bishop and other expenses of the administration of the diocese. A portion of it will be set aside each year so that gradually the amount of the endowment will increase. The fund will be handled by trustees and every effort will be made to safeguard it against speculative and unwise investments which diminish it.

The memorial fund was started during the life of the late Bishop Dudley when the Diocese of Kentucky comprised its present area and also that of the Diocese of Kentucky.

Bishop at Transportation Club.—Even in a city where the Church ranks first in influence it is an unusual tribute to have the bishop of the diocese chosen as the toastmaster for the biggest business men's banquet of the season. But the Transportation Club of Louisville following the example of numerous other social organizations who have found Bishop Woodcock to be an excellent toastmaster, not only chose the bishop, but as a subtle compliment to him, made the affair a "dry" one for the first time in the club's long history. B. L. Winchell, southern regional director of the U. S. Railroad Administration and John J. Arnold, a Chicago banker, were the principal speakers at the banquet which was attended by all of the leading railway men of the south.

RHODE ISLAND

Sunday School Association.—The mid-winter meeting of the Providence District Sunday School Association was held at St. John's Church parish house, Providence, February 17, with a fair attendance of teachers from the parishes of Providence and vicinity. Mr. George W. Dover presided, and an inspiring address, illustrated by stereopticon slides, was given by the Rev. Guy H. Madara, a returned missionary from Alaska.

Quiet Days.—At Trinity Church, Bristol, quiet days were observed under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Frank Damosch, Jr., on February 21 for women and February 22 for men. The addresses were made by the Rev. Spence Burton, S.S.J.E. Devotional reading was provided, and the rule of silence was observed.

Bishop Perry Sails.—Bishop Perry sailed for America on February 19. He is expected to preach at St. Martin's Church, Providence, on Sunday morning, March 2.

Largest Class in History.—Sunday evening, February 16, a class of seventy-one persons, the largest in the history of the parish, was confirmed by Bishop Bliss of Vermont at St. George's Church, Central Falls, the Rev. Willis B. Hawk, rector. Thirty-eight of the class were men and boys.

WEST TEXAS

Inter-Church World Movement.—A one-day conference was arranged at San Antonio, Texas, under the auspices of the Inter-Church World Movement, on February 17. Bishop Capers is the chairman of this movement. The subjects discussed at the conference were introduced by Dr. R. E. Vinson, president of the University of Texas; Mr. Raymond Robins, one of the greatest Christian sociologists of America, and Mr. Fred B. Smith of the Men and Religion Movement.

Killed in Action.—Private Porter Green, a devout member of St. Philip's Church, Uvalde, was killed in action on the western front just before the close of hostilities. He was a member of a British tank unit and was one of the first to offer himself after our declaration of war. After a few weeks' training in England he was sent to the front, where he saw several months of the most intense fighting of the war, and died the death of a hero.

Teacher Training Course.—An excellent course of teacher training is now being given at San Antonio under the Diocesan Board of Religious Education under three different headings: (1) The Gospels and the Life of Christ, by the Rev. L. B. Richards; (2) The Catechism and Church Doctrine, by the Rev. Benjamin Bean; (3) Social Service, by Deaconess Affleck. Those who register and take the full courses, passing the examinations, will be given credits towards the diploma of the general board.

"Friends of France."—Madame Fortier, instructor in French at St. Mary's Hall, the diocesan school at San Antonio, has formed a club of friends of France, of her language and of her literature, called "Les Causeries du Lundi." It meets weekly at St. Mary's Hall. Twenty ladies have already been enrolled and the club is growing rapidly both in numbers and enthusiasm.

An Ace at Church Dinner.—The Sunday dinners to the soldiers at the San Antonio camps are still continued successfully. At a recent dinner at St. Mark's parish house Captain Edgar Tobin, the San Antonio ace and just returned from France, was the speaker. Captain Tobin is a communicant of St. Mark's parish.

Jubilee of Dr. Bates.—Early in February Dr. L. S. Bates of San Antonio celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as a priest of the Church. He was ordained priest in St. Mark's Church, and has spent his twenty-five years of service at various points in Texas and Mexico, being for several years Archdeacon of North Mexico and having a territory of half a million square miles. Dr. Bates will be 72 years of age on May 12, and, though now superannuated, he is still actively serving the weaker churches in and around the see city.

ALASKA

Progress at St. Matthew's.—During the past year the Guild of St. Matthew's, Fairbanks, has purchased and installed a new organ, has made and presented new felt altar hangings for the different church seasons, and very handsome Communion veils and burses. The service flag in St. Matthew's now has nineteen stars, a splendid record for a mission church far away from the excitement of war.

Still Free from Epidemic.—Nenana is rejoicing that the influenza has not yet made its appearance in the interior. All the trails from the coast are carefully guarded and strict quarantine maintained. It is reported that at some places on the coast all but a small percentage of the native population was wiped out by this epidemic. The influenza scare kept the Indians of Nenana out in their hunting grounds; this being anticipated, their priest visited them and held services in their camps the Sunday before Christmas.

Christmas.—At St. Mark's Mission the Christmas offering was made for the Armenian and Syrian Relief and a total of $50 was given. Of this amount at least $33.50 came from the children of this school, who had saved their summer earnings made by selling fish and berries. The Christmas spirit of generosity was very evident, in that each child asked permission to give all that had been saved.

One pleasing feature of the Christmas services and festivals in the native villages is that the whole population attends as one man. This was true at Nenana, at St. Barnabas', Chena Native Village, and almost true at Chena town, when almost every white person in the place attended the Christmas services and festival held at St. Paul's Chapel. It is a pleasure to minister where there are no competitive bids for a congregation.

CONNECTICUT

Gifts.—The parish of Grace Church, Old Saybrook, received a gift of one thousand dollars in memory of Mary A. Hart, and the Rev. Dr. Samuel Hart, the interest to be used for the current expenses of the parish. The parish also received a gift of one hundred and fifty dollars in memory of Mary Witter Bailey, wife of the Rev. Paul Humphrey Barbour, the interest to be used for the purchase of bread and wine for the Communion. The capital of both funds was placed in the hands of the Society for Donations and Bequests.

MINNESOTA

Church School Institute.—The annual institute of the Church School Association of the diocese was held at St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, on February 6. Two resolutions of importance were passed unanimously. The first provided for holding the institute at the time of the council and the other for employing a paid church school secretary. The speakers at the institute were: Rev. E. M. Cross, Rev. F. L. Palmer, Miss E. R. McBride, Rev. Frederick D. Tyner, Miss Nettie Waite and Mr. W. T. White. In the evening the addresses were made by the Rev. George S. Keller of Winona and Miss Sleppy of St. Paul. Mr. W. T. White was elected president of the association for the ensuing year and Miss E. Yardley and the Rev. E. R. Todd were elected secretaries.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Religious Education.—The Diocesan Board of Religious Education, the Rev. E. R. Carter, rector of St. John's Church, Hampton, Virginia, president, met in Petersburg, Friday, February 7. Matters of general interest were taken up, especially the training of teachers, which was the program of the board for this season, but owing to the scourge of influenza little headway has been made. No institutes had been held during the fall and winter.

Report was made from the southwest convocation that the summer school for Sunday School workers would be held in June at Wytheville. Movement was also put on foot to work up a summer school of like nature to be held in the city of Petersburg this coming summer.

LONG ISLAND

Community Lenten Services and Greek Services.—A number of Brooklyn clergymen are planning to hold a series of daily community services during Lent, and the Rev. Mr. Melish has offered the Church of the Holy Trinity for this purpose; the best speakers possible have been secured.

At this church on Sunday, February 16, Greek Day was observed, the speakers being, Dr. Calapothakis, a member of the staff of the American Legation at Athens, and the Rt. Rev. A. Rodostolow, Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Churches in America. There were present also delegations from the Panhellenic Union of America, the Society of the Lacedemonians and of Greek Veterans.

Bishop Sage Speaks.—Bishop Sage, of Salina, was the speaker at the monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary and on Sunday morning, February 16, preached at St. James Church, Brooklyn, and in the evening was the speaker at a patriotic service held at the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn.

A Progressive Parish.—Archdeacon Spurr of Moundville, West Virginia, was the speaker at a recent service, held at the Church of St. Mark, Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. This parish, and especially the Sunday School, is increasing in numbers steadily, the latter having added ten new teachers in the last year. They are studying the Christian Nature Series. The memorial service Sunday night was attended by the Boy Scouts in a body. The Rev. A. L. Charles is the rector.

Social Service.—The Social Service Committee of the Diocese of Long Island, held a meeting at the Diocesan House on Friday evening, February 7. Bishop Burgess presided, and the speakers were Mrs. John Glenn, Mrs. Haley Fiske, Mrs. L. F. Pease, of the New York Mission of Help, Miss Clawson, a trained social worker, and Mrs. Merchant, a parole officer.

Dr. Nichols Ill.—The Rev. R. S. Nichols, vicar of St. Luke's, Forest Hills Gardens, has been very ill and is now in the hospital at Morristown, New Jersey. Dr. Nichols has had charge of St. Luke's for the past three years, going there from St. Peter's, Bay Shore. Last summer he devoted much time to the soldiers at Camp Upton.

The Cleveland City Mission.—The Cleveland City Mission, which carries on religious work in twenty-five hospitals, charity and correctional institutions in the city of Cleveland, having a daily average population of over 6,000 people, has as its staff of workers, two clergymen, one layman, and one trained woman-worker. Volunteer workers average about thirty hours each week. These are the rectors of our own Church, pastors of other churches, students in missionary training schools, and lay men and women.

The fourth paid worker was added in December, Mr. Albert Grady, who has had a special training in work among the type of men who make up the population of the work-house and jail. In these two institutions he has an average population of 1,000, and already his work is showing excellent results.

Recently the city government designated our organization, as having the care of the non-Roman Catholic inmates of its institutions under the Public Welfare Department, and granted a few hundred dollars a year toward the work.

The total attendance at the services, Sunday Schools, and Bible classes, not including ward services in hospitals, was over 80,000 people last year.

St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses.—The war work of the Cleveland branch of the St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses of which the Rev. L. E. Sunderland, superintendent of the City Mission, is chaplain, was the sending out of a specially prepared book of devotions for nurses in army hospital work. It reached over 1300 nurses in war service in this country and in Europe. The letters of acknowledgment which have been received during the last few weeks, indicate that the book filled a very definite need in the lives of these busy people.

KANSAS

Cited for Bravery.—Friends of Chaplain Evan A. Edwards, rector of Trinity Church, Lawrence, Kansas, have received an extract of a general order issued by Major General Peter E. Traub, citing Chaplain Evan A. Edwards of the 140th Regiment for bravery and devotion to duty as displayed when that unit went into action September 26.

Memorial at Bethany College.—Special services were recently held at Bethany College, at the regular chapel hour, in connection with the placing of a memorial tablet in the chapel for Emma Frances Root, who spent thirty-two years in Bethany as a student and teacher. The memorial tablet has been placed on the back of the chapel seat occupied by Miss Root during the chapel services for many years. The tablet bears the following inscription: "In Memoriam, Emma Frances Root, A. M., 1852-1918, Bethany 1868-1900." Bishop Wise, president of Bethany College, had charge of the ceremonies, assisted by the Rev. Chester Wood, chaplain.

The tablet was presented to the school by Mrs. Annie Hooley Todd of Howe, Indiana, and other alumni of Bethany College.

NORTH CAROLINA

Death of Priest and Notable Layman.—At Chapel Hill, the seat of the University of North Carolina, Dr. Kemp Plummer Battle, died February 4. In December last he celebrated his 87th birthday.

For fifteen years Dr. Battle was president of the University, retiring in 1891; he then became professor of history, retiring from this position in 1907. He continued his residence at Chapel Hill, deeply interested in the university, and the idol of the students. They called him "the grand old man of the hill." His radiant smile and cheerful disposition invariably won the hearts of the boys. He was a devoted Christian and a deep student of the Bible. He was buried from Christ Church, Raleigh, of which he was once senior warden. Many alumni from all over the state attended his funeral; and both houses of the General Assembly adjourned in respect to his memory, and appointed special committees to attend the funeral.

The Rev. Samuel M. Hanff Dies.—The Rev. Samuel M. Hanff, rector of All Saints Church, Concord, died on February 13 at Dr. Long's Hospital, Statesville, to which he had been taken several days before for an operation. His death came as a great shock to his many friends in the diocese. He was only thirty-eight years old, and had been at Concord only a year and a half. In that time he had greatly endeared himself to the whole community. The people of the town insisted that his body be brought back there for a service before it was taken to Raleigh, where he was born and reared. The cotton mills and stores all closed in Concord for the memorial service, at which the local Presbyterian pastor delivered a beautiful eulogy. The people of Concord wanted his body buried there, and the people of Wadesboro (where he was rector before he went to Concord) asked that his body be brought back and laid to rest in their midst.

The funeral was held at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, of which his parents are members.

MILTON A. BARBER.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Daily Bible Reading for Lent.—Bishop Davies is urging that every communicant in the diocese should devote the season of Lent in a special way to the increase and development of personal religion. To this end he has suggested a devotional practice for Lent which includes daily Bible reading, meditation and prayer. The general subject is Galatians 5:22,23. The bishop sees a danger to the home-coming boys from overseas in that many men who have had a real and deep spiritual experience at the front might be pulled down by their families on their return. It is to avoid this possible "pulling down" as well as to make our own religion real that the "Devotional Practice for Lent" is set forth.

New Parish Property.—St. Paul's Parish, Stockbridge, has acquired the property known as "The Old Union Chapel" property in South Lee, which includes a valuable piece of land. The old building will probably be sold. This is the second piece of property secured by this parish within a comparatively short time, the other being the Post Office Block adjoining the St. Paul's property on Main Street, Stockbridge.

JOHN H. ROSEBAUGH.

PORTO RICO

Meeting With the Bishop.—A very important and helpful meeting of the bishop and clergy was held at Aibonito, in the mountains recently. The bishop invited the clergy to a "quiet day" and during the course of the day, brought out the discussion of the purpose for which the Church was in Porto Rico. On the second day of the conference, opinions were asked from each one.

Plans were laid also to make a second "call" for funds to build a house at El Coto; the Rev. Mr. Droste and wife have lived in the old shack so long, that it will no longer serve as a home for themselves and for a teacher whoever may be sent to help them.

The bishop asked for the prayers of the district on his behalf, in his work throughout Santo Domingo and Hayti, and especially in the new care which has come to him in the Virgin Islands. He left for St. Thomas, Thursday, January 23, intending to inform himself of conditions there, and then to sail for New York, in order to get to Santo Domingo.

Mayaguez.—The new buildings at Mayaguez are almost complete, and by the time this news is read, the buildings will be occupied. There are two large school rooms, a chapel, temporarily placed in one section, a large office and store room; a wash room for the industrial department, and living quarters upstairs for the priest in charge and the teachers. This is the beginning of the building work in Porto Rico, and is the first respectable building which the Church has outside of San Juan. A great deal of the difficulty in the Island has been the lack of proper equipment.

Ponce.—The rector of the church in Ponce has been extra busy these last few weeks caring for the Red Cross work in helping the influenza sufferers. The entire city was districted and special nurses sent out to school houses as centers of Red Cross activity. The results reported are most satisfactory.

St. Luke's Hospital which was damaged in the earthquake of October, is being thoroughly repaired and will be in working order in a few weeks. It was found necessary to replace the cement between the stone, and to replaster the inside, as all the walls were badly damaged.

VIRGINIA

Colored Welfare Work.—The recent opening of the Colored Community House in Richmond marks a new step in charitable social uplift work among the colored people. The purpose of this organization, which is known as the Community House for Colored People, is to be a headquarters and clearing house for every sort of dispensation of charity among the colored people. Although it is not an organization of our Church it has a special interest for our church people in view of the fact that a vestryman of one of our churches has donated the house for a year and Dr. W. H. Hughes, vestryman of St. Philip's (colored) Church, is secretary. The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Episcopal city missionary, is a member of the executive committee. The most encouraging feature of the work that is being undertaken is the interest shown in it by the colored people themselves. In raising of funds necessary to start this enterprise certain sums were apportioned to various organizations and the colored people were the first to subscribe the amounts called for from them. Persons who have attended the meetings of the directors and executive committee are enthusiastically optimistic over the results expected from this effort.

City Missions and Theological Students.

—The Rev. R. Cary Montague, city missionary of Richmond, addressed the students of the Theological Seminary in Virginia on the evening of February 4, on the subject of city missions. Besides urging the students to take a lively interest in this rapidly broadening line of ministerial work, Mr. Montague especially urged them to inform themselves in the duties of probation officers, so that they could act as volunteers in these positions in the smaller towns and rural districts. He also suggested to the faculty the possibility of having students do a certain amount of active work with city missionaries as a part of their training for the ministry in the same way that young doctors are given hospital service, and social workers are required to do field work before being allowed to graduate in these prospective professions.

WEST MISSOURI

Auxiliary Meets.—The mid-winter meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary of West Missouri was held at St. Mark's Church, Kansas City, on Thursday, February 5. The auxiliary sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. H. S. Longley, Bishop Coadjutor of Iowa and was full of good cheer and hopefulness. Bishop Demby, recently consecrated for the colored work in the Province of the Southwest and formerly in charge of St. Augustine's, Kansas City, was a welcome guest of the occasion.

Bishop's Anniversary.—Sunday, February 2, was the nineteenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Partridge and he commemorated it as the guest of St. Paul's Church, Kansas City.

Parish Work Centralized.—St. Paul's, Kansas City, has just unified the work of the women of the church by gathering up all of the lines of woman's church activities under one head with various committees. The work henceforth will be under St. Paul's Guild. The following are the four general committees: Parish Work, Social Service, Diocesan, and General Missions.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Archdeacon Mitchell Holds Mission.—The Rev. A. R. Mitchell, archdeacon of the Charleston Convocation, conducted a very successful mission at St. Timothy's Church, Columbia, South Carolina, during the week of January 26-31. The mission was well advertised. Archdeacon Mitchell preached daily to large and appreciative congregations. He is well known in Columbia as the former rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. Mr. Mitchell began his series of sermons on Sunday morning by speaking to the children of the Sunday School on "The History of St. Timothy's Church." The present church is the outcome of the Sunday School that Mr. Mitchell began in the northwestern section of the city in 1892 while rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The following are a few of the subjects that he preached on during the week: "Faith in God's Call to Duty," "The Temple of God," "Temptation," "Seeking," "Youth, the Crisis of Character." A great deal of good was accomplished by his earnest and timely messages.

The mission was brought to a close on Friday night, January 31, by a Confirmation service and sermon by the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D.D., Bishop of Georgia. A class of ten was presented for Confirmation by the minister in charge, the Rev. Joseph R. Walker. Immediately after the service an informal reception was held in the new parish house in honor of Bishop Reese, Archdeacon Mitchell and the confirmation class. Light refreshments were served by the Ladies Guild. Bishop Reese gave a talk at the close of the evening entertainment at which time he spoke in a very complimentary manner of the splendid work which had been accomplished in the parish during the past few months.

OREGON

Bishop Rowe Preaches in Portland Churches.—On January 26th, the Third Sunday after the Epiphany, Bishop Rowe of Alaska, was in Portland and spoke at the Church of the Good Shepherd in the morning, and in the evening at St. Mark's, when several congregations united in order to hear him. On Monday he attended the clericus, when nearly all the clergy of the city and vicinity were present, and spoke of the present conditions and needs of Alaska and its prospects. Mr. E. A. McIntosh, of Tanana Crossing, addressed the quarterly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on the work under his care.

Notes.—The Rev. J. E. H. Simpson, rector emeritus of St. Mark, is just recovering from a serious illness.

Grace Memorial Parish has begun to raise funds for a church to be built next to the parish house, which has served as a church for several years. Through the gift of Mrs. Frederick Berry $9,000 is available provided a like amount be raised. Plans are drawn for a building costing about $20,000, and the rector, the Rev. O. W. Taylor, reports good progress in securing the necessary funds.

The congregation of St. Michael and All Angels, the first mission begun by Bishop Scadding, is building a church as a memorial to the late bishop. Both these structures are on the east side of Portland in a section which has been rapidly filling up with people in comfortable circumstances.

Successful Canvass Follows Advent Call.—As a result of the Advent Call, some of the women of St. David's made quite a successful canvass of a district on the east side where a branch school is located. As it is some two miles or more from any other mission, or the mother parish, it seems to be a desirable point for beginning a new work.

Problems of a Diocese of Vast Dimensions.—As Portland is a city of great distances there are three or four other points where the Church ought to make a beginning so as to provide not only for her own, but for many who are quite removed from any church privileges.

Very few persons realize the size of the Diocese of Oregon and the great difficulty of providing services at distant points, too far apart to be readily worked together, and too feeble at present to support a resident clergymen—in short, the problems which face the Church.

In anticipation of the home-coming of the soldiers the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is making a special endeavor to organize new chapters and revive old ones, and several meetings have been held at the cathedral for this purpose.

NEW JERSEY

Convocation Meeting.—The regular meeting of the convocation of Burlington occurred recently in the Church of the Ascension, Gloucester City, the Rev. Carroll M. Burck, rector. There was an important conference led by the Rev. Charles S. Lewis of Burlington on a proposal to have a diocesan educational secretary and the campaign for the spiritual advance of the diocese. A significant resolution was adopted, requesting the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese to act for the guidance of the clergy upon the matter of the closing of churches as in the recent epidemic by boards of health. An address was made by Canon Welles, institutional chaplain of the diocese. The next meeting of the convocation is appointed to be held at Penn's Grove.

The Church's Call.—Under this title the bishop of the diocese, with the co-operation of a diocesan committee, has issued a call for a diocesan campaign "for the re-enlistment of every baptized man, woman and child throughout the diocese in loyalty to and service for Christ and His Church." The plan covers the time from Septuagesima to Easter. It includes a personal letter from the bishop for general distribution; special sermons, for which themes are given, from February 16 to March 9; a scheme of prayer and Bible reading; a week of intensive work in the respective parishes and missions, which will include a general visitation, and a pledge to be made, differing in form, for children and adults. The headquarters of the diocesan committee, from which the whole movement will be directed, is the Diocesan House, 307 Hamilton avenue, Trenton.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.—The upper division of the Woman's Auxiliary met recently in St. Michael's Church, Trenton, the Rev. William B. Eddy, rector. The bishop of the diocese was present and made an address. An address was made by Miss Hopwood, the newly engaged educational secretary of the diocese.

NORTH DAKOTA

Effect of Influenza.—The fall work in the District of North Dakota had just gotten under way when the influenza made its appearance among us, first in the large towns and then later in the smaller places and rural districts. During October all of our churches and chapels were closed and quite a number even through November. All of our congregations have sustained losses from this terrible scourge.

Our Indian helper in the Indian work at St. James', Cannon Ball, Mr. Frank Fourswords and his wife died November 14, of influenza, just three hours apart. They left three little girls, who will be taken care of by Frank's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Fourswords were among our most earnest workers at St. James', and will be much missed. Frank was much interested in the missionary apportionment, and his watch is to be sold and the proceeds to be given for this object. His household furniture has already been sold and the proceeds, $36.00, given for this same purpose. Owing to the epidemic the plans made by the Woman's Auxiliary for the Advent Call, could not be fully carried out. The institute that was to have been held in Fargo, October 23 and 24 had to be given up. During the first week in Advent, however, a number of the parishes and missions held special services and many women were visited, and prayer meetings were held in the homes of many,

English Church News

The New Bishop of Worcester.—There is no particular enthusiasm over the appointment of Canon Pearce to succeed Dr. Yeatman-Biggs at Worcester. His record has been uneventful, but there are indications, particularly in his work of the last three years, that he will do well. He is a modern scholar, of the liberal evangelical school, and in many ways a contrast to his two immediate predecessors in the see. In his younger days he did some educational work, and the Times has reason to approve his selection, as he was for many years its ecclesiastical editor. Just lately he has won favor in the popular press, as he has been in khaki for three years, and the picture of "the canon in khaki" had some piquancy. The Church Times is probably right in regarding his administrative work as assistant chaplain-general as the reason for his selection. He has done some solid work during the war in a department where it was badly needed. His gifts of organization will now stand him in good stead.

Death of Bishop Earle.—It is curious how often one has to record the death of church veterans very soon after their retirement from active work. I have frequently had occasion to mention the late Dean of Exeter, Dr. Earle. He continued a vigorous ministry to an extreme age, and his friends hoped that the quiet of Torquay would prolong his already long life. But he has succumbed within a few months. His death recalls memory of Bishop Temple. He was Archdeacon of Totnes, Devon, when Temple was appointed, and he was one of those who strongly opposed that appointment, for in those far-off days Dr. Temple was suspect, as one of the contributors to Essays and Reviews. But the new Bishop of Exeter bore no malice, and formed so high an opinion of Dr. Earle, that when he became Bishop of London a few years later, he took an early opportunity of getting his old opponent transferred to London as suffragan bishop. Right through the "nineties" Dr. Earle was a familiar figure in London. Curiously enough, he was in bad health most of the time, and it was supposed that his retirement to his old diocese as Dean of Exeter in 1900 was the beginning of the end. But the end was eighteen years in coming. When in London, he used to complain of the absurd law which at that time prevented the taking of new titles by suffragan bishops. They had to take certain specified titles, however inappropriate locally. This law has fortunately been altered, but in his day, Dr. Earle had to groan under the title of "Bishop of Marlborough." "If only it had something to do with London," I once heard him say, "even Bishop of Seven Dials would be better than Marlborough." (Seven Dials is a slum district which had at one time an unsavory repute.)

Peterborough, Bristol and Carlisle.—The respective bishops of these three cities are all in the news this week in connection with what the Church Times describes as fraternization—with the implication of the same disastrous consequences which followed in the military sphere before the peace of Brest-Litovsk. The Church Times contends that there is a danger of sacrificing the truth, in our endeavors to achieve unity. Nobody, however, has a good word for the Peterborough clergyman, who persisted in exchanging pulpits with a Baptist minister in spite of the strong disapproval of his bishop. Dr. Woods is no pedantic catholic, but a devout evangelical. He maintained the unexceptional position that the bishop alone has the right to say who shall preach in Church of England pulpits. The general opinion seems to be that sporadic acts of defiance, and breaches of the vow of canonical obedience, will not advance the cause of unity. But in the cases of Bristol and Carlisle, the remainder of the church press does not agree with the Church Times. The Bishop of Bristol replied to thirty clergy who protested against the invitation given to a non-conformist minister, Dr. Thomas, to take part in the armistice thanksgiving, that there is a great difference between an exchange of pulpits, and the participation of non-conformists on great national occasions. The Guardian also defends on similar grounds the action of the Bishop of Carlisle, who, as he could not have an opportunity of welcoming President Wilson in his own cathedral, did not hesitate to take part in the service at the Congregational Church. The Guardian indeed goes on to express its fears that the movement towards unity is in danger of becoming a party matter, just at the time when we are rejoicing that we have been delivered from party politics by the results of the Coalition election. There is no fear, it holds, that catholic heritage will be endangered by the eager desire for unity. The movement is really a catholic movement, or it is nothing. "To endeavor to reunite the sundered elements of the Church Universal is so clearly the duty of all of us, that a heavy responsibility will rest upon those who allow too great a place to their fears. It would be impossible for a divided Church to preach unity to those at present separated from it."

where it was not possible to hold the services. All taking part in the work felt that it was well worth while and many blessings will result.

A Postulant.—The Rev. Frederick L. Rice, a minister of the Methodist Church for several years, has been admitted as postulant for holy orders. Mr. Rice was temporarily in charge of the mission at Linton, as lay reader, but has now taken up the work at Grafton, which had been without service since the death of Mr. Sockett.

Death of Mr. Frank Lord.—The sympathy of our people goes out to Mr. C. D. Lord, who has been treasurer of the District of North Dakota for over twenty years, in the death of his son, Mr. Frank Lord. Mr. Lord was one of our rising young business men, a splendid type of Christian manhood in every way.

Mortgage Paid Off.—The mortgage of $1500.00 on the episcopal residence in Fargo has been paid off. The property is now entirely free from debt.

RECENT BOOKS ON THEOLOGY AND BIBLICAL CRITICISM

Guide Posts in Eschatology

THE WORLD TO COME AND FINAL DESTINY. By J. H. Leckie, D.D. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1918. $4.50.

This volume contains the Kerr Lectures for 1917-18. And these lectures are nine in number, divided into two parts, of four lectures each, and a conclusion.

The first part occupies pp. 3-130, and is entitled "Apocalyptic Forms." This title may well deter some students from investigating the contents, for in the past two decades the subject of Apocalypses has become almost worn threadbare. Dr. Leckie, however, avoids needless repetition by spending little time on the technical aspect of the subject; he states just enough for purposes of orientation, and then investigates the underlying philosophy of the movement. Why did the Jews believe in a coming Kingdom? What religious impulses made them picture it as they did? What was the essential element in their belief in the Resurrection? And so on, in questions that go to the real heart of the matter.

In answering them, it is rightly argued that details should be allowed weight only in so far as they show the existence of a persistent religious impulse behind them, for endless harm can be wrought by the contrary method; "the wild horses of apocalypse were never meant to be yoked to the heavy chariot of dogma" (p. 128). Formal Christian eschatology has suffered much through overlooking this principle, and many "classical" theologians have built systems on statements that were little more than decoration; "throughout many ages the minds of theologians were in a state of chronic eschatological intoxication" (p. 118). As this method was fundamentally wrong, conclusions so reached cannot be conceived to have value for Christian thought of today, even when defended by scholars of such weight as Newman or Pusey (pp. 126-7).

Part II of the book is longer (pp. 133-290). An interesting introductory note on "Jewish Opinion" emphasizes that there is no such unity in Jewish thought as various modern writers (Pusey, Edersheim, etc.) have claimed; it is even possible to maintain (with Emmanuel Deutsch) that the idea of eternal punishment is unknown to rabbinical literature. The first lecture of this part then examines the evidence of the New Testament. Dr. Leckie does not hesitate to say that this evidence is not wholly self consistent, there are "on the one hand, predictions of immeasurable doom; and, on the other, great assertions regarding the mind and purpose of God which encourage the widest hope. It is the harmonizing of these two that constitutes the problem of apostolic eschatology" (p. 160). And this problem does not seem capable of complete solution, and, in the case of St. Paul, for instance, it is best to admit "that he had not attained to the goal of his thinking on this subject" (p. 181). The final appeal, consequently, must lie to the New Testament doctrine of God; he who knows the essential character of God will have the surest guide towards determining the eventual fate of man. As regards the ultimate fate of the righteous, then, there can be no real problem. As regards those indifferently righteous but not wholly evil, the solution must be sought in an intermediate purgatorial state (prayers for the dead are earnestly commended). But as regards those who are truly unrighteous, there are three possible answers, each of which can claim some measure of New Testament support, and each of which is examined in a separate lecture.

The first is the doctrine of eternal punishment. Dr. Leckie, however, objects to this term as superficial, and heads his chapter with "Everlasting Evil (Dualistic Solution)." That this has been the ruling doctrine in Christian history is admitted freely, even among writers who are not controlled by mere apocalypticism. But, as it involves an eternal dualism is it reconcilable with the Christian (monistic) doctrine of God? Three typical affirmative answers, those of Aquinas, Swedenborg and Salmond, are subjected to a most interesting analysis (pp. 200-205); the contention that Aquinas' system really leads to "happiness in hell" is extremely acute. The chapter closes with an appreciation of the value of the moral sanction of eternal punishment, which stands "for realities which no sound theory of the future state can ever neglect or ignore" (p. 217).

The second theory is that of Conditional Immortality, which receives a rather full historical exposition, which reviews A. Sabatier, Rothe, Lotze, Tyrrell and Edward White at some length. The brief summary and criticism are largely unfavorable.

The remaining alternative is Universalism, and the historical survey pauses especially over Erigena and Eckhardt. Most Unitarians are acquitted of mere facile optimism, which reduces salvation to an idyll. "An idyll has no tragedy or stress in it; and I am not aware of any important teacher of the optimistic school whose view of things is wanting in these elements" (p. 279). The extended systematic discussion that follows is as many sided as possible, and it closes with a note of indecision. "The main weakness" of Universalism "is its failure to affirm that there is an ultimate peril in the spiritual life" (p. 290).

The concluding chapter is devoted particularly to the results as they bear on final beatitude; "Thus there remains two elements in the Christian hope of life everlasting, the one resting on the mystical side of faith, the other derived from the ancient belief in the Kingdom of God; these present the appearance of a logical opposition, but they are really only different aspects of one transcendent truth" (p. 323).

The great value of the book does not lie in the conclusions reached,—for Dr. Leckie has been chary in committing himself to conclusions,—but rather in the method employed. Eschatology is not an independent department of theology, at every point it is intimately involved with all other Christian doctrines, and it should be discussed only as a series of corollaries flowing from vital faith in God and in Christ. The lectures, consequently, form anything in the world rather than a digest to facilitate preparing for an examination; they are rather a series of guide posts to a road that each reader is asked to pursue for himself. There are occasional blemishes, no doubt. For instance, there is no canon of New Testament criticism that will enable us to reject Mt. 25:46 (p. 112), while retaining Mt. 16:16 (p. 56). The article "He descended into Hades" was certainly not in the fourth century form of the Apostles' Creed (p. 92). Too much weight is attached to Josephus' Hellenizing perversions of Jewish doctrine (p. 134).

The insistence on the continuity of Universalistic thought in Christianity is exaggerated (p. 265). The correct translation of Rev. 10:6 is "there shall be no further delay" (p. 313); the verse contains no hint of mysticism. But none of these has more than the most minor significance. The book, as a whole, ought to do for current Christian eschatological thinking what the most important works of the past did for their own generation; in its field it is quite the most important work we have had for thirty years or more.

The Atonement

THE PASSION AND EXALTATION OF CHRIST. By the Rev. Francis J. Hall, D.D. Longmans, Green and Company. New York and London. 1918. $2.00.

The war has brought home with drastic poignancy the necessity for, and a good deal of the significance of, vicarious sacrifice. It is opportune, therefore, that just at this time there should appear the clear presentation of what historic Christendom has meant and now means in its preaching of the Atonement. It is especially fortunate that this volume should come from the pen of Dr. Hall, whose theological work is ever marked by both careful analysis and fruitful synthesis. Even more important, in view of the recent clash of world ideas, is Dr. Hall's constant recognition of the vital connection between dogma and morality. It is hardly too much to say that Dr. Hall is one of the very few Anglican theologians who displays awareness of the fact that no dogma whatever is of value in itself, but has reason and necessity only as it forms the backbone for the morally alert Christian life.

Hence, after Dr. Hall has keenly eliminated from any suspicion of Church authority all imputation, substitution, and predestination doctrines of the Atonement as bluntly immoral, we find the eternal power of our Lord's action on Calvary placed in its moral appeal, together with the response to this. Then it is that the treatment catches up the early Christian note of triumphal joy, as the fruition of the Cross is realized in the glory of Easter. The whole presentation by Dr. Hall brings home to us with power that, if there be no Easter, the moral adventure is pathological. From the significance of Easter, there follows, in easy transition, the portrayal of the continued life of the Risen Sacrifice in Heaven, and then, very clearly and beautifully, the rationale of the Church's conviction as to the union of her Eucharistic sacrifice with her Lord's presentation in Heaven.

Altogether we most heartily commend this volume to all who have advanced so far as to have been interested in popular current perversions of Christian doctrine, such as are heralded, for instance, in the Open Court publications.

Christian Belief in God

CHRISTIAN BELIEF IN GOD. A German Criticism of German Philosophy by Georg Wobbermin, Ph.D., Professor of Dogmatics in the University of Heidelberg. Translated from the third German edition by Daniel Sommer Robinson, Ph.D. New Haven. Yale University Press. 1918. $1.25.

Dr. Wobbermin has long been known to students as a German theologian who opposes the Ritschlian separation between theology and metaphysics. In his Systematische Theologie, the first volume of which appeared in 1913, and of which we have heard nothing since, he does indeed use the psychological method, acknowledging especial indebtedness to Schleiermacher and William James. Yet he also believes that theology must concern itself with metaphysics, and in his Christian Belief in God, now translated into English, he seeks a scientific and metaphysical foundation for Christian faith. Having given a criticism of present philosophical tendencies, he then, as a result, attempts a new statement of the traditional arguments for belief in God.

His criticism of Nietzsche and of the materialism of Haeckel is interesting and searching. In his restatement of the argument from design, it is perhaps unfortunate that he lays so much emphasis on the weakness of the doctrine of natural selection. Would it not be a permanently stronger position to maintain that the design argument is not destroyed by that hypothesis, but only given a different form? But the work as a whole is excellently done. The writer fully emphasizes as a result the ethical personality of God, and the decisive importance of the personality of Jesus Christ. The book is not easy reading, but it may be heartily commended to serious students.

The translation is into excellent English. But why do the publishers put on the outside of the volume the name of the translator and not the name of the author?

Studies in the Epistles

A COMMENTARY ON ST. PAUL'S FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS. By Alfred Plummer, D.D., London. Robert Scott. 1918. 4s. 6d.

The list of commentaries by Dr. Plummer expands steadily, until it has almost covered every book of the New Testament. And this latest of his works has the characteristics of all the others. It is solidly conservative in its structure, without pretence to novelties in the critical discussions or the exegesis proper. In no sense can it possibly be called "brilliant," even when all allowance is made for the fact that brilliancy of treatment is difficult in handling First Thessalonians. But the workmanship is thoroughly conscientious, and the scholarship is (of course) entirely adequate. With this book and the commentaries of Findlay, Milligan, Moffatt and Frame the English literature on this epistle would appear to be ample.

THE SUPREME GOSPEL: A Study of the Epistle to the Hebrews. By Hugh Thompson Kerr, D.D., New York: The Womans Press. 1918. $1.00.

A devotional study of Hebrews, arranged in ten sections, each of which is divided into seven parts, with "memory verses" and a concluding prayer. The exposition is very skilfully done, in close accord with the wholly practical aim of the epistle, and the manual will be found really useful for Bible classes and personal study. The book, however, is neither adapted nor designed for exegetical purposes.

The Alexandrine Gospel

THE ALEXANDRINE GOSPEL. By A. Nairne, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co., London. 1917. Price, 1s. 6d.

This brochure contains three lectures delivered in Liverpool on Sirach, Wisdom, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews, which are bound together by the common theme of Alexandrianism. Dr. Nairne limits his discussion to the problem of God, and shows that the four works under consideration show a steady development in stating and solving the basic difficulty of religion, the reconciliation of a "philosophic" view of the universe with the needs of practical devotion.

In the brief space (120 small pages) at the writer's command no profound treatment was possible, but the limitation of the plan has produced a unified picture of a difficult period, and the book is very worth reading. Dr. Nairne, however, treats Sirach rather too sympathetically, for that esteemed sage certainly did not believe in immortality, and his religion had a very distinct eye on the good things of the present world. And to say that Philo's "figurative interpretations are reasonable on the whole" (pp. 73f) is decidedly optimistic.

Yonge's English translation of Philo, and Riggenbach's Hebräerbrief are unaccountably omitted from the bibliography.

Studies in Revelation

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF REVELATION. By the Rev. J. H. B. Masterman, M.A. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $1.60.

The purpose of this book is expository and devotional, rather than exegetical, but its author should have devoted a little more attention to modern research on the Apocalypse. If he had done so he would not have told his readers that "perhaps there is not one last judgment, but many" (p. 53), or that the seven horns of the beast in the seventeenth chapter represent seven world empires (p. 104). The moral tone is earnest, and the style is often attractive, but the book as a whole represents little real advance on (say) Milligan.

The Prophets

THE PROPHETS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Alex. R. Gordon. Hodder and Stoughton. London. 1916. $1.50.

The past two years have seen more books on the prophets than any similar period for many years. The prophets and their message are being re-discovered. Among recent writers on this subject no scholar has produced a more accurate and readable treatment than Dr. Gordon. He has issued a comprehensive study of the subject, which allows the prophets to speak for themselves. The course of prophecy is traced from its beginning until the rise of Apocalypse, each book being set on the historical and cultural background of its time. Emphasis is placed on the most significant utterances by translating the passages in question.

The author follows the generally accepted date of the different prophetic books, and handles the various difficult problems, such, for example, as Hosea's marriage, or the Emmanuel passage in chapter seven of Isaiah, with great skill and success. He interprets the "Servant of Jehovah" as "Israel" and not as the "Ideal Remnant" without giving sufficient reasons for his choice of interpretation. His discussions of moral questions (e. g., page 45) leaves much to be desired. The style is excellent, and the treatment is brilliant.

THE SOURCES OF THE HEXATEUCH. By Edgar Sheffield Brightman. The Abingdon Press. New York. 1918. $3.00.

Here is a work which ought to have been done long ago. The three great sources of the Hexateuch, which are interwoven with one another, are separated and printed in chronological order. The author, following the consensus of scholarly opinion, writes an introduction to each of the sources J, E, and P, describing their literary characteristics, their characteristic ideals, the home of their authors, and their date. He then reproduces the text of J, E, and P from the American Standard Edition of the Revised Bible, with footnotes and text divisions. Material which is not assigned to any one of the above named sources, but which is the work of the editor or redactor of all the sources, is indicated by the use of smaller type. In the introduction is found a brief but useful outline of the history of the criticism of the Hexateuch.

There are some infelicities, such as the author's statement that scholars and critics who have published standard works on the Hexateuch are confined to the ranks of Protestant Christianity, his constant spelling of Procksch by "Proksch," and his rendering of "Abraham" by father of a multitude; yet these are but minor blemishes in a very useful work. No student of Old Testament history, religion, and culture should be without this handy and time-saving volume.

More Early Documents

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES BOOKS III-V. By the Rev. H. N. Bate, M.A. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $1.50.

Still another volume of the Translations of Early Documents series, which now contains fifteen numbers. In this latest addition the editing is gratifyingly full; there are forty-three pages of Introduction and each page of the text is provided with rather full exegetical notes. The translation is in much smoother English than Lanchester's version in the Oxford Corpus, and the notes are very often more informing. This will doubtless become the standard edition in English.

Lay Theology

HUMAN NATURE AND ITS REMAKING. By William Ernest Hocking, Ph.D. Yale University Press, New Haven. 1918. $3.00 net.

Even if there were no theological schools, theology would not perish from off the earth. We suspect, on the other hand, that it might become the most fascinating of the electives. When one perceives the drift of emphasis of such a man as Royce, who was under no academic obligation to discuss the Trinity and the Atonement and yet clung like a moth to the tantalizing flame of the queen of sciences, we are persuaded that we are not, after all, so dependent as we had thought upon the professor of dogmatics to keep up our enthusiasm in our theology.

We are among those belated Christians who find theology an inspiration to faith. We recall a distinguished old divine of the past generation who read his Critique through once a year to keep the cobwebs from off his brain. We believe it would help every person to go through a volume of reputable theology once a year to give vertebrae to his teaching. The next best thing to out-and-out theology is a volume of near-theology such as Professor Hocking's Human Nature and Its Remaking.

The book deals with the instincts and innate capacities which seem to form the original endowment of our human nature; upon this raw material Professor Hocking shows the impact of the social, political and religious forces. For the preacher, the closing sections of the book beginning with the chapter on Christianity are rich in inspiration. Professor Hocking has a crisp and lucid style, brilliant in passages, with some of the daring that recalls the day when William James spread for us our feast in philosophy.

New Biography

An English Sister

THE STORY OF AN ENGLISH SISTER. By Ethel Romanes. Longmans, Green and Company. London and New York. 1919. $3.50.

Miss Palgrave is quite right in saying that Sister Etheldreda had a certain "Franciscan humaneness." She was one of the laughing saints; a quality which she inherited from her mother, Mrs. Romanes, who has an admirable distaste for unsmiling goodness. "I was terribly keen on education," says Mrs. Romanes of the days of her young motherhood. "I sat on the council of a society for promoting kindergarten discipline. We were all very earnest, and the members evidently thought salvation was to be found in the teachings of Froebel. With the exception of Mr. Claude Montefiore, and possibly myself, no one of the council ever smiled."

Ethel Romanes defied Froebel by learning to read when she was three years old. She also defied the conventional ideas which most people have about "Sisters" by being called Fritz; partly because her mother's name was Ethel, and two Ethels were confusing in the family; partly because of her liking for the Fritz of the Swiss Family Robinson. She was so good a swimmer that her parents called her the Sea Urchin. In her secular days she smoked cigarettes. She made little distinction, however, between secular days and holy days; they were all sacred and merry alike for her. She had a good honest pleasure in parties and in early Communion; she was presented at court and made the train of her dress into a frontal for an altar. She was an entirely natural, wholesome, fine, sweet young woman, and never affected an artificial emotion in her life. She allied religion with all the graces. The Bishop of London, writing to her on the day of her reception into the sisterhood, called her "Dearest Fritz." It was a privilege which every reader of this book will envy.

Her friends and acquaintance were those whom we have recently met so pleasantly in the Life of Illingworth, the Lux Mundi people, humane high churchmen. Out of this and other such material she liked to construct the society of an ideal city. "One of my people would be Socrates, only he would have to be a Christian, as, of course, he would have been if he had had the chance; and a very good one he would have made, too, though I think he would have had decidedly Protestant views, don't you? He'd be always quarreling with Mr. Keble." She looked somewhat askance at "Protestants," finding them lacking in so many of the inheritances and appreciations which filled her life with light and color.

She was fond of ghost stories and pretended to believe them all; even the one in which a grandmother in the Riviera wakes up in the middle of the night and says, "Someone has just thrown a doll at my arm," and finds afterward that just at that moment a little granddaughter, ill in England, being given a new doll, had cried, "You know I hate dolls dressed in green," and had flung it violently at the bedpost. She noted, however, that one of the Sisters was sceptical about ghosts who were reported to have appeared in armor, "because she says that ghosts of Middle Ages times don't ever come (it's a rule!), because they have worn out long before now." She herself was an argument for immortality, having the kind of soul which seems incapable of wearing out. She belonged to that exalted order of beings of whom Mr. Chesterton says that they are appropriately called High Spirits. To be admitted by these domestic letters into the company of her friends is a rare privilege.

GEORGE HODGES.

Joyce Kilmer

JOYCE KILMER. Edited with a memoir by Robert Cortes Holliday. Volume I, Memoir and Poems; Volume II, Prose works. New York. George H. Doran Company. 1914, 1917, 1918. Price, $5.00.

These beautifully bound and printed volumes are an appropriate memorial of the charming soul whose name they bear, and they will certainly be appreciated by any one who knew or admires Sergeant Kilmer. Joyce Kilmer was one of those rare personalities that charms all with whom it comes into contact, and the quality of that charm is evident from the poems that are here collected, from the delightful if somewhat inconsequential little essays that are here reprinted, from the selections of the easy intimate friendly letters here given. It was the charm of an innocent boyish gentle soul, rich in tenderness, pity, friendliness, good humor, and fun. It is also a charm enhanced by the pathos of an early and heroic death. Joyce Kilmer will be for those who care for him the Eternal Boy, one of the bright company of golden boys who have been the theme of poetry oftener than they have made it.

He was born in New Brunswick in 1886, graduated from Rutgers in 1904, and received his B. A. from Columbia in 1906. For a short time after graduation he was an instructor in the Morristown High School, but soon abandoned that for journalism, the first definite position in his adopted calling being that of literary editor of THE CHURCHMAN. He soon began contributing rather unusual and striking reviews to various periodicals, and became a regular reviewer for the New York Times Literary Supplement and a contributor to the Times Sunday Magazine. In the meanwhile he was becoming known for his frequent contributions of verse to various magazines and newspapers.

He had married soon after leaving college, and in 1913 in company with his wife he became a Roman Catholic.

In July, 1917 he enlisted in the New York Seventh, was transferred later to the 165th Infantry, Rainbow Division, and was sent overseas. He took part in the advance on the Marne in the early summer of 1918, and was killed in action on July 30 near the Wood of the Burned Bridge by the Ourcq.

Joyce Kilmer was a soul naturally Catholic, and though we are told little of the circumstances or reasons for his abandoning the Anglican Church of his Baptism, without doubt he found what he wanted and needed in Rome. Indeed, much of the significance of his poems and letters is the apologia for Roman Catholic religion to which, after his conversion, he devoted himself. He pleaded for Roman Catholicism, however, without a trace of sectarian or controversial bitterness.

There is so much that is wholesome and delightful in these two volumes, so much to give pleasure and inspiration to any reader, that it is with some regret that we qualify what we could wish were unstinted praise. Fitting a memorial as these two volumes are for that pleasant spirit Joyce Kilmer, they would have gained in force and appeal by ruthless repression. The memoir had much better have been omitted or reduced to the barest outline of events. It begins with a sentence that cannot fail to awaken prejudice, "It is the felicity of these pages that they cannot be dull." Men have written of the liveliest and sublimest of subjects and been deadly dull, and after that claim to immunity on the part of Mr. Holliday almost anything he might write would seem dull. Besides Joyce Kilmer tells his own story in his letters, much more to the point than does his biographer; and he reveals his own personality much more clearly in two or three little poems than Mr. Holliday does in a hundred pages. Furthermore, it is difficult for one who had not the pleasure of Kilmer's acquaintance to reconcile with the impression his own words give, the irrelevant details as to his personal habits that this dull memoir divulges.

The repression might have been happily applied also to some of the poems, some of the prose pieces, and some of the letters. Great talent and great charm Joyce Kilmer had, but he was not a genius; his poetry is not great; and his prose too often has the journalistic character that befitted its mode of publication. Many of the letters are really too banal, and their humor too ephemeral, to have deserved permanence in print. The briefest memoir, the bulk of the poems, and a very few of the letters, would have served to give a much clearer, stronger impression of the personality, and moreover would have so reduced the cost of the edition as to have rendered it accessible to a much larger number of readers. Kilmer's chance for permanent fame lies in popularity with the general reader rather than with the critic or student. Nor, finally, does it seem to the present reviewer to have been wise to publish the photographs selected.

These criticisms are not made in captious spirit, but rather with the hope that the publisher who has already done so well by Joyce Kilmer will in a subsequent edition do even better.

A Missionary Bishop

THOBURN. CALLED OF GOD. By William F. Oldham. The Methodist Book Concern. New York. 1918. $1.00.

Bishop Oldham's little book gives us a description of how God guided the life of James M. Thoburn, first missionary bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in southern Asia. In Bishop Thoburn is combined the mysticism of a Celtic ancestry with the hard, practical common-sense of an American education. Such a combination seems to have been wonderfully successful. Fifty years of Methodism in India and adjacent countries, most of it under the leadership of this able missionary bishop, has resulted in nearly half a million converts.

A typical illustration of Bishop Thoburn's method is his establishment of a mission in Rangoon, Burmah. He arrived in this important city absolutely without funds for carrying on any work. At the end of two weeks of missionary labor a church of fifty members had been founded. A quarterly conference duly organized. Three men licensed to exhort, a fund for the support of a pastor secured and a gift of land received for a church site at the junction of two important streets. After a life filled with such incidents, it is no wonder that the bishop could say: "My life furnishes a testimony to the fact that God has been with me, not only in a general way all the time, but especially at set times, and in distinctive ways his presence has been unmistakable."

YESTERDAYS IN A BUSY LIFE. By Candace Wheeler. Harper Brothers. 1918. $3.00.

To come to that point in life where "the years are unbelievably good," as Mrs. Wheeler declares them to be at ninety, is to reach an enviable state of mind and position. Her autobiography, for this is what Yesterdays in a Busy Life is, reveals the reason. Her life has been blessed to a marked degree with rare companionships and varied useful interests. Hers have always been the enthusiasms of a warm and affectionate kind, the sort that drew to her and her home the men and women who were doing things in a century noted for definite advances in several directions. She tells many a story about them, but none more self revealing than that of a visit once to Lowell's house in Cambridge, where she saw an old desk that charmed her greatly, and concerning which he remarked, that we all might have relics if we lived long enough. Certainly, Mrs. Wheeler has lived long enough and she has gathered relics, though of another kind. She has become possessed of memories of delightful friendships, rich human documents, mellowed by the busy years, spent in doing useful things; treasures they are to Mrs. Wheeler, well worth preserving and reminiscent of a long stretch of time, which begins early enough in the nineteenth century (in the central part of New York State), to be shadowed by savage Indian tragedies and to end when the world is entering into a new day.

It is a happy choice in the title of Mrs. Wheeler's book. She has been busy throughout her full life with an incurable enthusiasm for art, music, culture, travel, common things, and for women and their work. The last must have been her supreme interest always. It would seem unnecessary for her to have told us "when brought to the verge of the meagerly peopled land of old age I was much in love with women as ever and cared much for what should befall them." Her whole life story is marked by an alert interest in the practical concerns of women and their tasks. She herself was born at a time when a girl must either marry or enter the only two pursuits opened to single women, "school teaching or giving inadequate lessons on the piano." She tells us that "the career of a powerful and competent single woman as we know it was an unheralded dream." All the more outstanding was her own development and keen interest in those she remarks the discerning called, "working women." Her appointment as the director of the Woman's Building at the Columbia Exposition (1893) registers an advance in her own life, and the story of what was accomplished there, the people associated with her and those whom she met and the forward step this exhibition marked, are all full of intimate human touches that make delightful reading.

Mrs. Wheeler was a pioneer in applied textile arts, especially in connection with domestic processes. "To invest fibres, of whatever origin, with the bliss of color and subject them to the magic of machinery and the manipulation of living fingers, became a constant and insistent challenge to my powers of invention and co-ordination." Hence hers was a very real contribution when she wrote and lectured on "farm house industries and domestic weavings." She also published a book on The Principles of Decoration. Friend and comrade of authors, editors, writers, artists, of men and women who were alive to advancing human interests, her story fairly revels in the delightful intimacies of a host of famous people: Peter Cooper, William Cullen Bryant, Lowell, LaFarge, Browning, Mark Twain, Anders Zorn, Stedman, and many others. We may understand something of the backgrounds of her early life when she says her parents were fun loving, possessed of a rugged piety and lofty ideals, who exalted the home to a high degree. This influence passed on to her own home of which she writes: "We were fortunate enough to make a home while we were still young and enthusiastic, and it interests me now to see that it was the quality of it which drew around us the friends whose companionship and influence made life worth living." To her now they "are the shadowy men and women, who were some of them beautiful and some of them brilliant, and all of them well beloved friends of my dear man and me." Beside these are chapters about Onteora Park in the Catskills, the work of the "Associated Artists" and others full of human interests.

A Forthright Gentleman

THOMAS CORAM. Churchman, Empire-builder and Philanthropist. By H. F. B. Compton. New York. The Macmillan Company. London. S.P.C.K. Price, $1.50.

When Thomas Coram was asked to contribute to the building fund of the church in Taunton, Massachusetts, he replied that he would not give a penny even though he were requested so to do by a committee consisting of the twelve apostles. "Whereupon," says the vestryman, to whom this reply was made, "I thought this a definite answer, and so took my leave." The truth is that Coram had already made a gift to the town of Taunton under conditions which had not been fulfilled. "If ever hereafter [this was in 1703] the inhabitants of the town of Taunton should be more civilized than they are now, and if they should incline to have a Church of England built amongst them, or in their town, then upon application of the inhabitants of the said town, that is to say, forty ratable men of them, upon their application to the said vestry—a tract of neighboring land, forty-nine acres in extent, was to be put in their possession. This was "in consideration of the love and respect which the donor hath and doth bear unto the said Church," and in disregard of the fact that his fellow-townsmen had treated him, he said, in the manner of a "generation of vipers." Unhappily, the forty ratable men could not be found and the property was made over to King's Chapel, Boston, the proceeds of the sale of it being afterwards used in the erection of the present structure.

The biography of Captain Coram bears out the impression which these quotations convey, of a generous and quarrelsome gentleman, benevolent and irritable. He spent ten years in this country, mostly in Taunton, where he was "a staunch Churchman in an almost entirely Nonconformist environment." The qualities of "asperity and forthrightness," which his discriminating biographer finds in his character, made his sojourn here anything but serene and tranquil. When he returned to England he established in London the Foundling Hospital, from whose governing board he was presently dismissed, probably by reason of the forthrightness which had distinguished him in Taunton, but in front of which his statue still stands, one hand holding the charter of his charity, and the other extended as if for contributions.

An accompanying inscription notes that Coram died at a good old age, "poor in worldly estate, rich in good works," and there is an admonition to the passer-by: "Reader, thy actions will show whether thou art sincere in the praises thou may'st bestow upon him; if thou hast virtue enough to commend his virtues, forget not to add also the imitation of them." All of which is kept in memory in the parish of St. Thomas, Taunton, by the Coram Society. GEORGE HODGES.

In the Argentine Pampas

FAR AWAY AND LONG AGO: A HISTORY OF MY EARLY LIFE. By W. H. Hudson. New York. E. P. Dutton and Company. 1918. $2.50.

This is one of those rare books of sheer delight which charm from every point of view. It is a history of the author-naturalist's daily life "Far Away" in the Argentine pampas under conditions "long ago" changed. The account of how these memories came flooding back in a time of serious illness is strikingly given in the first chapter and is only the first of some very fascinating psychological studies scattered through the book, especially noteworthy being the chapters on "The Serpent Mystery" and "A Boy's Animism." The description of the re-action of the child's and boy's mind to the wild animals, the trees, the beauty of the country and the few strange human neighbors and especially the fact of death, are given with absolute clearness and simplicity so that we feel their truth. With almost too much self-effacement for an autobiography, the author yet gives us such glimpses through the objective eyes of boyhood that we seem to know the quiet shrinking mystical yet observant and active child and probably learn as much as we were meant to of his life up to the age of sixteen. He has a delightful way of letting us know without telling us. He tells us more directly and with keen insight about the people whom he knew. His schoolmasters, Mr. Trigg and Father O'Keefe, are drawn with much humor and we get vivid glimpses of his neighbors, the strange Barboza family.

But his main interests as those of us know who have read Green Mansions and The Purple Land is with nature. He is half-brother to Blackwood and could almost have written The Promise of Air, so one is he with the spirit of the birds. You can see their flight and hear their song as he describes them. The trees and flowers, the changing seasons, the storms of wind and hail, the pampas fires, pass before us and are less described by him than seen with him. The style is so simple and so perfect that it is not noticed; passages of pure poetry in prose abound and one is tempted many times to quote or find someone to whom to read just one more. And then the climax of the boy's life appears in the last chapters called "A Darkened Life" and "Loss and Gain," when in the fear of death and the unknown future life he is made to face the loss of his mother whose religious spirit had passed into him but could not bear the strain. He tells us of the dark night of his soul, out of which he came into a joyous absorption in nature, a mystical union which must be the secret of the charm he exercises over us and yet which still awaits the completion which his mother and his mother's God mean to give him.

The Teaching Church

IT was the author of The Reproach of the Gospel (Bampton Lectures, 1907), Dr. Peile, who declared a little over ten years ago that the "Church seems to have lost the right and power to teach the world and now has to learn from it, if nothing else at least, how to become its teacher again." It is one of the surprising things of the past decade how truly we have come to see the value of the latter half of this remark. A score of facts have convinced us of a demand, a pretty insistent demand it is, that the Church fully live up to and assume more boldly the teaching function of the Great Commission given her by our Blessed Lord. The present war, for example, so forceful in its estimate concerning institutions and things, has borne in upon religious leaders the supreme necessity for the Church to have a more definite program and a more definite religious training as related to that program, both for the individual and society, regarded as a sphere in which the Church is most vitally concerned. The chaplain who wrote from the front, "the boys are interested in religion but they know nothing of it. Teach them, teach them," voices what to many was a revelation. Much that had seemed effective in the past had failed to train the individual definitely. In the hour of great need there was lacking a conciseness to religious experience and hence an indecision as to religious action. The upheaval of the past four years has also done something more than ask the rather common question, "Has the Church failed?" It has framed the further queries: What is the real function of the Church? For what well defined field is she responsible? Has she a clearly apprehended program that will in the stress of re-adjustment and re-construction, prevent her from entering into competition with many social agencies better fitted to meet specific needs and with which needs the Church has struggled for generations?

Some vigorous answers have been made to these questions of late. Now comes another, in the work of Dr. Henry F. Cope, who is general secretary of the Religious Education Association, in his Religious Education in the Church (Charles Scribner's Sons, 1918, $1.25). Dr. Cope declares that the testing time of a real spiritual renaissance has come. The jack of all trades is out of date. The Church must like many another institution learn to know just what is her specialty. The wise observer discerns that in the stress of social adjustment the Church may have to struggle even for her own particular field. All the more will she need a clearly apprehended program. The mere suggestion of Dr. Cope's theme will interest churchmen. It has always been our boast that one of the Church's chief and distinctive characteristics was to be found in her teaching function. It gave her place and power. Whenever criticism raised itself against too much teaching, it was believed that indirectly the importance of that work was emphasized.

Quite naturally Dr. Cope's book is replete with information relative to the whole subject of religious education. But it would be a mistake to think of it as a plea only for the greater stressing of the Church's work as a moral and religious teacher. It is a call for her to do nothing without an educational aim, an aim however as related to the main purpose of her existence. Once and for all she must "cease to carry on traditional activities without regard to whether they are better done elsewhere or are needed at all." The very program upon which our own General Board of Religious Education has laid such insistence is here directly and indirectly emphasized. The Church's program is a "program of life," a serious, continuous program holding the supreme solution of the problems of living because she touches the springs of human life in motives, ideals and the wills of men. Churchmen will appreciate to the full the manner in which Dr. Cope analyzes and examines the educational opportunities of the agencies and channels under the Church's control and influence. Worship, preaching, evangelism, missions, social service, institutional activities, family life, community life; these are just so many via media rich with educational opportunities to visualize and realize the special message of the Church. And her message will be through these as related to a recognized program. In the future the Church will not be supported, says Dr. Cope, "to play at instruction, relief, social amusement and recreation." She has a particular business and is competent for the task assigned her if she will stick to it.

Of course he does not think of the Church living in "cloistered separation." She is no longer "a little garden walled round about," much rather is she in the hurried, tossing stream of human affairs, and because of the pressing need there, will she do her best work as a teaching Church. One cannot help but link this book with the two other splendid contributions to the same subject, coming from the press this year, viz., Dr. Coe's A Social Theory of Religious Education and Dr. Athearn's Religious Education and American Democracy. All three should be studied by those interested in the educational aim of the Church's program. Dr. Cope has done much if he only provokes students of religious education to examine the worth of many of the efforts of the Church. But he does more, in that he will bestir the practical pastor of souls to ask "is the intricate organization and elaborate mechanization of the work of which I am the guide and director, touching men as religious persons to the end that they and the world may be saved and a Godlike life developed in them according to the laws of that life revealed by Jesus Christ?"

THERE is indeed an abundance of excellent and helpful material coming from the publishers to aid Sunday School teachers and others interested in advancing the forward movement in the whole field of religious education. Take that sturdy annual, Peloubet's Selected Notes for 1919 (International Sunday School Lessons, by F. N. Peloubet, D.D., and Amos R. Wells, D.D. W. A. Wilde Company). This is the forty-fifth year of its appearance, holding a record only with Government publications. The notes are intended to aid teachers of all grades in the Sunday School using the lessons, having a wealth of explanatory material, critical selections, illustrations, hints for teaching, library references with additional helps of all kinds. A generous bibliography covers well chosen books of topics akin to the year's lessons. The Selected Notes are always a happy combination of exposition and commentary. From January to March the lessons are for the "Era of Moses and Joshua." April to September, "Some Great Teachings of the Bible." October to December, "Studies in the Lives of Peter and John."

From the University Press of Chicago a new hand book has been received, the seventh promised in the series on Principles and Methods of Religious Education, The Church School of Citizenship (by Allen Hoben, Associate Professor of Homiletics, Chicago, University Press, $1.00). It contains suggestive programs for the training of children and the adolescent youth in the application of Christianity to social behavior. It is designed especially for teacher training classes and thoughtful parents. It declares frankly for what has hitherto been considered impossible, viz., the correlation with the Church of the high minded and aggressive service which has been more active away from than a part of the Church's life. Professor Hoben's plea is this: "Democracy calls for sound timber" and presumably some of the very best quality will be found in the "uplands of the Church's domain." To make this "timber" fit we must begin in the Church School where the full impulse for righteousness may get proper stimulus and direction. The Church must no longer lay an emphasis on what may be called "ambulance service." She must plan for the training and exercising of a citizenship which by its clear perception of justice and its tenacious demand for Christian standards gradually christianizes all public relationships. Little book as it is, it is to be commended to the clergy for thoughtful reading.

With plans afoot for a larger place to be given the Church School in the program of religious education, a second edition of The Sunday School in the Development of the American Church (by the Rev. Oscar S. Michael, The Morehouse Publishing Company, 50c.) will make its contribution by showing what is the actual history of the Sunday School. To possess in brief form the past experience of men who did pioneer work in this field aids materially in the solution of our present day problems. In this connection must be mentioned the two little books prepared by the General Board of Religious Education for the Standard Course in Teacher Training. They are standard in themselves and have proved their worth before. They are old friends. One is The Pupil (by Luther A. Weigle, Ph.D., D.D. The Morehouse Company, 35c.), the other is The Teacher, by the same author. An appendix has been especially designed to aid church teachers to secure certificates from the parochial department of the general board.

A recent book from London is How to Read the Bible in the Twentieth Century (by Sophie Bryant, Head Mistress of North London Collegiate School, published by J. M. Dent & Sons, $1.60). It is a very intelligent up-to-date arrangement whereby the Bible may be read progressively and in ordered fashion in school assemblies, families or even in classes or in private study. There is much information in a running commentary upon the sequence of the Gospels, the Old Testament, etc., so that he who reads the Scriptures historically understands that he is entering into a form of communion with the saints of old as well as with God. The readings are carefully classified and by following the comment in the notes of the author wide acquaintance with the Bible is made possible within a period of three years.

Dr. Galloway, who writes The Use of Motives in Teaching Morals and Religion. (The Pilgrim Press, $1.25) is professor of Zoology in Beloit College and comes to the task involved in the subject of this book as a teacher acquainted with the fundamentals of secular education. What he has attempted is a well thought out and scholarly presentation, first, of the relation of pedagogical principles to that religious teaching and training which equip the individual for making right choices and executing them; and then the further application of these principles in the search for the proper motives in Sunday School work. In brief, he shows the success which has come to general education in the thoughtful use of motivation and the resultant increase of a right attitude of the young for the work of the school, enlarging their capacity to receive, to think and to respond rightly. Then, he pleads for the application of the same principles to the Sunday school as a special field of religious education. He thus hopes to save moral and religious teaching from much of the artificiality found in it.

There is a fear that in spite of its excellencies this is a book to be read by the few and not the many Sunday school teachers who need (of that there is no question) all the good things Dr. Gallo-ray says. It is not difficult to imagine the utter sense of failure with which many a godly and even above the average, Sunday School teacher would be overwhelmed when confronted with such a word as "motivation." We want it, but put in the simplest fashion for all who run to read. For leaders of teacher training classes there are valuable suggestions to be translated into the more common terms of daily life.

WHEN Dr. Coe writes an introduction to any book, as he has done for The Social Emphasis in Religious Education (by William Irvin Lawrence, Th.D., The Beacon Press, Boston, 90c.), that book invites serious reading. All the more so when the subject concerns the field of religious education where it deals with social interpretations and implications. He says that the point of view taken by Dr. Lawrence may "jolt us somewhat," but that after all, it will better both our metaphysics and our Sunday School practices. Perhaps the "jolt" will not be as severe as even Dr. Coe imagines, for the number indeed not small who believe that to socialize all our relations is the all controlling purpose in religious education. Dr. Lawrence, who is editor of the new Beacon Course now coming from the press, declares that not only must the aim and content in religious education be socialized, but the methods and the organization must be socialized. By this he means that the materials to be used in teaching, the right atmosphere to be secured, the graded study, must all bend to one unifying purpose, viz., to bring all individuals, whatever their limitations and capacities, into one cooperative whole, socialized by a bond of fellowship through mutual understanding, animated by love and whose unity is that of sons and daughters of one Father.

In the last of the four chapters, one on the minister's preparation," he shows in how large degree religious education is a peculiar responsibility of the clergy. The urgent cry of the hour being for human ministers, the theological schools must become thoroughly socialized and teach, that the essential equipment of a successful minister is that he be sympathetically drawn to others, yearning to enter helpfully into all life. Dr. Lawrence presented his dissertation in candidacy for the degree of Doctor of Theology to the Meadville Theological School. He is now secretary of the Department of Religious Education of the American Unitarian Association. ROBERT P. KREITLER.

THE DIOCESE OF GIBRALTAR: A Sketch of Its History, Work and Tasks. By Henry J. C. Knight, Bishop of Gibraltar. S.P.C.K. London. 1918. 7s. 6d.

Few English and fewer American churchmen have any adequate idea of the extent and importance of the Diocese of Gibraltar and it is therefore especially fortunate that there is now available so clear and compelling an account of its history, its many spiritual activities and the various tasks which lie before it as that which has lately come from the pen of its present bishop. The story is told in such a way as to arrest and hold the attention and make one deeply grateful for the statesmanship in which we have sometimes been told the Church of England is conspicuously lacking—and for the zeal, if not always adequate care, which that Church has manifested towards its scattered children.

As far back as the sixteenth century chaplains had been sent to the various mercantile communities constituting the outposts of British trade in southern Europe and the Levant but it was not until 1842 that these communities were linked together by the action of the Church at home through the formation of the Diocese of Gibraltar and the consecration of the Rev. George Tomlinson to be its first bishop. This action was inspired by a twofold purpose, first that Church people abroad might not be without the religious ministrations to which they were accustomed and secondly in order to encourage friendly intercourse with and to bring about a clearer understanding of the Eastern Church with which the bishop and many of his clergy are in constant contact. The diocese extends from Oporto and Lisbon in Portugal to the shores of the Caspian Sea, and the traveling which devolves upon the bishop is almost appalling in its extent. The following quotation fills one with wonder and admiration and indicates something of what it means to occupy so extensive and important a see. "The bishop was by the mercy of God and the kindness of innumerable friends, enabled to make three protracted tours before the war, and one of five months in the course of it (total mileage 54,290), in which he visited all the permanent chaplaincies, the great majority of the winter and season chaplaincies, and all colonies numbering ten and upwards in South Russia, the Caucasus, and Spain (save one) of which he knew at the time. He had interviews with the Patriarch Joachim III, the Metropolitan of Kieff, the Archbishops of Smyrna and Odessa, the Bishops of Kharkoff and Tiflis, and the Armenian Bishop of Tiflis." When it is remembered that the communities within the diocese represent not only the English Church but the English nation as well and that they therefore inevitably form this standard by which to a large extent the English character is judged it is easy to see how strategically important the work is as well from an international as from an ecclesiastical standpoint. The value put upon it by the authorities in England may be judged by the names of the men who have in succession been appointed Bishops, Tomlinson, Trower, Harris, Sanford, Collins and now Knight. J. The Supreme Food Delight

Grains Puffed to Bubbles—Eight Times Normal Size

Among all the grain-food dainties, Puffed Grains surely hold first place.

First in their flimsy, flaky texture—
First in their exquisite nut-like flavor—

First as scientific foods.

Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are whole grains steam-exploded. They are made by Prof. Anderson's process—by shooting the grains from guns.

Every food cell is blasted for easy digestion. Over 100 million steam explosions occur in every kernel.

They come as airy, toasted bubbles, eight times normal size. They taste like food confections.

Children revel in them.

Yet they are whole grains, so prepared that every atom feeds. Served at any hour, they never tax the stomach.

Not Occasional Foods

Don't serve Puffed Grains in small amounts and rarely. They seem like tidbits, but they are superlative foods.

They supply three major grain foods in the most hygienic form. One of them—Puffed Wheat—makes whole wheat fascinating. And children need the minerals in whole wheat.

A Grave Question

Just a line of hearty congratulation upon the admirable editorial on "Chastity" in this week's issue of THE CHURCHMAN.

All through the war the Government has made great use of the Christian Churches and to the Churches, more than any other agency, is due the magnificent spirit with which the people have supported the Government. Most of the things that the Government has asked the Church to do it has done gladly and with a good conscience, but to me the wisdom of this last request from the Treasury Department to the Churches of America on the subject of venereal diseases is open to grave question. That is why I welcome your vigorous and illuminating editorial.

Disappointed

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It was a painful surprise to see the comment in THE CHURCHMAN yesterday with regard to Cardinal Gibbons. You think Mr. Anderson's language is strong, but what is that compared to the stand taken by an ecclesiastic in favor of liquor—for that is what all this camouflage about personal liberty amounts to. The shocking influence of the platform of the Maryland Anti-Prohibition League sounds as though it may have come from a similar source. It describes the Almighty as producing stimulant and creating a desire to enjoy it. It may take as long to free our country from the curse of drunkenness as it did to free it from the curse of slavery—but at least we may hope that our Church will be found squarely on the right side of the struggle.

Education in Labrador

THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Knowing of the keen interest that your readers have in missionary work in Labrador I am sending you the following letter:

CARTWRIGHT, LABRADOR, Jan. 2, 1918.

DEAR MRS. GRENFELL:

There is no need for me to explain at any length the scheme of education for Labrador, which we all have at heart, and which we have already discussed.

Briefly stated, the proposed scheme is as follows: To concentrate the forces of the various agencies that are today employed in the uplift of Labrador in one combined effort for improved education. At present we have the very sad spectacle of several organizations apparently competing with one another in a fruitless attempt to tackle a problem that is too big for any single body. The Anglican and Methodist Churches, feebly supported as they have been, have for several years employed the "itinerant" system of education. Many splendid young teachers have traveled the bleak coast, spending a few weeks at different homesteads, but very few results can be expected from such a system as this. In my mission alone there are over seventy settlements, and the average number of families in each is only three. During the summer months Dr. Grenfell's able helper, Miss Muir, has lately been carrying on a most excellent series of summer schools; but the time at her disposal is necessarily short. The net result of all these efforts seems to be—exhaustion of personnel and very little permanent good.

Our new scheme aims at the creation of one or more (non-sectarian) boarding schools, to which the children may be brought and housed and educated. As you may imagine, our idea will be more than merely to impart head-knowledge; we hope to develop a strong industrial side and inculcate habits that will tend to the formation of character and esprit-de-corps.

This effort is not meeting with that universal sympathy and support which one would expect for it—much of the old prejudice and narrowness of sectarian education still remains in the colony. It is particularly encouraging to find our own Labrador people so keen on the idea, and it is for their sakes that we are appealing for that help and assistance which this effort needs.

If you can in any way create an interest in this work and put us in touch with that wide-hearted American public, which has already shown such a real sense of missionary responsibility, you will be helping on a movement which may one day revolutionize the whole system of education in this colony.

We wish to raise the sum of $5,000 by next July, which should be sufficient to build and equip our first school. This we will run on a "trial trip" and watch its success before extending the movement.

I remain, yours sincerely,

HENRY GORDON.

The Rev. Henry Gordon, the Church of England clergyman in Labrador, has somehow obtained permission to have an undenominational boarding-school in his bay in Labrador. It sounds like a miracle, but the fact remains that he has done it. He is doing his best in this uphill work in the colony, and thoroughly deserves any support that may be given him from the outside.

Diocesan Committees on Church Building

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In your issue of February 8 in speaking of diocesan committees on church building, you say "unfortunately in most cases beneficial results have stopped with the appointment of the committee."

As one who is intensely interested in this subject, and who has had some experience, let me give you the reason for the stoppage you speak of. It is simply the failure in getting the necessary diocesan legislation requiring vestries to submit their plans for churches to a commission on church architecture and to be guided by its counsel and advice.

We have tried to get a canon to this effect in the Diocese of Los Angeles and have failed. The committee on canons was willing to make it mandatory in the case of missions, but not of parishes, and such a canon is now on our books. What is the result? We are able to be of some service to little mission churches, but we are not consulted by vestries who have a building project on hand. They go on in the same old blundering way entrusting their fortunes to some architect or engineer or builder who happens to be in the parish or is the friend of some one on the vestry, and who has not the slightest hesitation about venturing upon the difficult and untried field of ecclesiastical architecture. The result is no progress is made in raising the standard of church architecture or cultivating a higher taste in all those things which go to make up the church arts.

Unless architectural commissions are clothed with proper authority, it is useless to attempt to help out present conditions. The average clergyman and vestryman may know nothing about church building, yet when the opportunity presents itself for planning a new church they are not apt to seek out expert advice, but consider any architect competent to undertake the work. The responsibility for our low standards in church building lies in the unreasoning attitude of vestries to the whole subject, and any reform must have its beginning there.

CHARLES H. HIBBARD.

Chairman of the Commission on Church Architecture of the Diocese of Los Angeles.

Canons on Church Architecture

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The Church at large is greatly indebted to you and your contributors for the Architectural Number of February 8. With an experience of twelve years as chairman of the Commission on Church Architecture in the Diocese of Newark, the first of its kind on the American continent, my chief purpose in writing is to emphasize two axioms admirably expressed by Mr. Cram and Dr. Gates with special reference to small churches. Here is the greatest need of guidance, partly because the authorities of a mission or small parish, both clerical and lay, are almost always unfamiliar, not only with correct principles of church building, the fruit of a glorious history of two thousand years, but also are apt to have imperfect ideas of finance and economy.

Axiom number 1 is,—That it is supremely folly of the authorities in these weak parishes to fancy that they are going to save money by accepting the offer of free plans from an engineer, or a builder, or even an architect of domestic or business houses, or a clerk in some house-decorating establishment. If some of the monstrosities presented with pride to our commission had been framed and preserved, they would have constituted a veritable rogues' gallery of architecture, queer and costly. Parish committees have yet to learn that a fee to a church architect who understands his business is not a luxury but an economy.

Axiom number 2 is,—That good architecture is actually much less costly than bad. I know an old building on which some $70,000 was wasted in gorgeous ornamentation suggestive only of oriental luxury, when the same sum would have given the parish a new church which would have been an inspiration to true religion for centuries. On the other hand, I know a little old church in the same city that is barren of all ornament except its altar and its reredos, and also a little new church in a village, and similarly devoid of ornament, yet both are gems of art and inspirers of devout religious feeling.

I am enclosing a copy of the Newark canon. Following this lead, eight other dioceses have adopted similar canons with good results, namely, New York, Pennsylvania, Bethlehem, New Jersey, Michigan, Maine, Los Angeles and Oregon. Surely there is great need in every diocese. I shall be glad to assist any one desirous of helping on the good work. One fact as to the right of the diocese to control should be clearly kept in mind. It is this, that no parish or smallest mission can be a law unto itself, though it may be providing all the money needful. It is only part of a great whole in which every other part has a share, and it is not building for the present generation alone.

CANON 10, OF THE COMMISSION ON CHURCH

ARCHITECTURE

Section 1. There shall be a commission of the diocese, to be known as the Commission on Church Architecture, which shall consist of the bishop, the bishop coadjutor and the suffragan bishop, if there be one, together with two clergymen and two laymen, to be appointed annually by the bishop.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of every mission or parish receiving aid from the diocese to lay before this commission the preliminary sketches of any new church, chapel, parish house, or rectory, or of proposed changes in any such existent buildings, and no such work of erection or change shall be undertaken until the plans have received the approval of the commission.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of every parish, by its rector, wardens and vestrymen, to lay before this commission the preliminary sketches of any new church, chapel, parish house or rectory, for their counsel and advice; which counsel and advice shall be given in writing within one calendar month after the receipt of the sketches.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the commission, when requested by any parish or mission, to give counsel and advice in regard to the furnishings and pictured windows of any church or chapel.

The Communion Cup

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have read with great interest the letters which you have recently printed concerning the administration of the cup in the celebration of the Holy Communion. The subject is most important and calls for thought followed by legislation. Very properly the idea of any change whatever is unwelcome to all communicants. I was myself annoyed ("annoyed" is a mild word) when lately I was refused the cup altogether at my Christmas Communion. I have received from the individual cup, but never, as yet, by intinction.

It is useless to deny that there is great and increasing aversion, on the part of many of the laity, to the common cup. Every clergyman who administers the chalice is familiar with the twisting of the lips whereby some communicants seek a dry spot across which to receive. And every such clergyman knows that too frequently things happen to the contents of the cup which cannot be remedied by wiping the cup itself.

I do not believe that the present situation arises altogether from fear of actual infection. The thought may be present in some minds, but it has been abundantly demonstrated that such danger is so remote as to be negligible, and sensible people do not worry about it.

Probably the real cause of objection to the common cup is the growing and commendable fastidiousness which marks these late years. This feeling is manifest in many directions. Old people can well remember when the butter-knife was not invariably a part of table furniture, when the individual butter-ball was unknown, and when ordinary eatables and drinkables were distributed with less heed to personal delicacy than now prevails. The abolition of the public drinking cup and of the roller towel are further instances in point.

It is quite likely that our changed practice in these and similar matters may have originated in hygienic considerations, but Chartered by the State of New York in 1842, was preceded by a stock company of a similar name. The latter company was liquidated and part of its capital, to the extent of $100,000, was used, with consent of the stockholders, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and repaid with a bonus and interest at the expiration of two years.

During its existence the company has insured property to the value of $31,728,420,851.00. Received premiums thereon to the extent of $319,356,442.45. Paid losses during that period $157,034,362.32. Issued certificates of profits to dealers $100,230,470.00. Of which there have been redeemed $94,086,050.00. Leaving outstanding at present time $6,144,420.00. Interest paid on certificates amounts to $24,838,024.95. On December 31, 1918, the assets of the company amounted to $16,823,491.34.

The profits of the company revert to the assured and are divided annually upon the premiums terminated during the year, thereby reducing the cost of insurance.

For such dividends, certificates are issued subject to dividends of interest until ordered to be redeemed, in accordance with the charter.

our present ways are now a simple necessity, essential to ordinary cleanliness. We do not like to use another man's fork, until it has been thoroughly washed, even if the other man can produce a certificate that he has no communicable disease.

Now, however deep and sincere the devout preoccupation of the communicant at the altar-rail, he cannot always drive out of himself this modern, human instinct of delicacy. He does not wish to moisten his lips with another person's saliva, and he is only partially reassured by anything that the administrator may do. Moreover, these suggested and often practised acts by the administrator, the wiping and revolving of the cup, serve to re-enforce the recipient's aversion and to lessen that earnestness of soul proper to this highest act of worship.

It seems to me that we must recognize existing facts in human life and human thought; that whether we like it or not (and I myself do not like it at all) we must presently change our method of administration even though it be hallowed by centuries of sacred association.

I make no recommendation as to details. Withholding the cup altogether and its rejection by the supersensitive seem to me alike unwarranted. The individual cup is practicable at least. Perhaps there is something better. Some years ago, while thinking on this subject, I undertook to find a capsule, easily filled by the inexpert, which would not dissolve within some hours while containing wine. But my search was unsuccessful, though inquiry was made of several prominent manufacturers of druggists' supplies. F. S. LUTHER, Trinity College, President's Office, Hartford, Connecticut.

Send Their Bodies Home

"Let them remain in France." If I were a betting man I would risk a bet that this parson has no very near relative buried in France as a result of having fallen in battle over there. I am glad to note too, however, that the War Department will not be guided in this matter by the desires of these chaplains of the First Division that as per a circular issued by the War Department of January 24, representatives of the deceased will be called upon for an expression of their desires regarding the final disposition of the bodies of their loved ones sacrificed upon the fields of battle on the other side. While I understand and appreciate that the French Government would prefer to have these remains left in France for their care, my wife and I would never consent to such an arrangement, and will oppose and fight such a proposition to a finish. We had the misfortune to lose our only boy on the fifteenth of July last. He was a corporal in Company B, 151 Machine Gun Battalion, 42nd Division, having enlisted in this, his home town, during the early part of April, 1917, and not being of age until August 10 of that year. He went from Macon to Camp Mills, Mineola, Long Island, remaining there until the latter part of October, and went across with the Rainbow Division. My dear parson, just reflect a moment, and surely you will feel just as we do about it, and also insist upon the War Department's living up to their pre-war promises and returning these remains to their native land. There is surely a great deal more sanity in returning their remains here to be buried with those of their near relatives, such as their mothers and fathers, and it is to be hoped that the opinions and desires of those of us who were so unfortunate as to be called upon to make such sacrifices will be respected.

The surrounding country is full of splendid propositions for the home-seeker. The south has nothing better to offer. Of course, the rector and congregation of St. John's Church want to locate churchmen here. Why not? If you are going to move and want better climate and a better agricultural future why not make a church community your new home? We want to get home-seekers who are churchmen headed this way. APPEAL

The Sisters of St. John Baptist (of the Episcopal Church) are carrying on charitable works of various kinds, but they need immediate help in meeting the expenses of three of these works.

St. Marguerite's Home for orphan children, at Ralston, New Jersey, supports thirty-three children from four to eighteen years of age. Unless we can get help from friends and those interested in poor children, this house will have to be closed.

St. Anna's, Ralston, New Jersey, for wayward girls, teaches and trains twenty-nine girls from fourteen to twenty-one years of age. Few of these girls have anyone who can contribute towards their support.

Holy Cross House in New York City, 300 East 4th Street, a Boarding House for working girls, undertakes to give a refined and good home to the lesser wage earners at $5.00 a week.

Each of these houses is full, but we shall have to close one of them at least immediately, unless financial assistance is given us at once.

Will you help us? This letter goes out with the earnest prayer that God will move you and other friends to help us of your charity. Contributions may be sent to

ELEANOR K. HOLMES

On Tuesday, February 4, at midnight, Al mighty God called the spirit of Eleanor K. Holmes, and leaving her mortal tenement, she passed peacefully into the glory of eternal life.

The daughter and youngest child of the late Nathaniel and Susan Grier Holmes and granddaughter of Nathaniel Holmes, founder of the well known firm of bankers, she had lived a tranquil life in her own home, and in the society of her family and her intimate friends, sheltered from the usual cares and anxieties of the world, and yet not untouched by great sorrows.

But the severe losses and unusually great strain incident to them, only deepened and enriched all that was tenderest and strongest in an affectionate and strong character.

While still a young girl death claimed her parents, brothers and sisters, one by one, leaving her with one brother, the only representatives of a once large family and family connection. Endowed with unusual charms of person and an intensely sympathetic nature, she rose above and out of the dark shadows that had fallen upon her youth, and with unfaltering courage met her own failing health and became the life and light of her home.

She was a member of Calvary Episcopal Church, treasurer and member of the Board of the Protestant Home for Aged Women, and in that institution her executive ability and wise counsel were invaluable. Her loss will be felt by all her co-workers. She also took a great interest in the Western Penna Institute for the Blind, and served as a member of the Board, and her private charities and contributions to Church work were generous and without number.

A keen sense of humor, a charming voice and an unfeigned interest in the joys and sorrows of her friends, made her a rare companion.

Devotion to her brother, splendid generosity, loyalty to her old friends, were her distinctive characteristics, and from the retired life, which was her choice, she shed far and wide a radiant influence which will never be forgotten.

"Rise," said the Master, "Come unto the feast."

She heard the call, and rose with willing feet."

? Is the Soldier Accountable to God ? for His Individual Share in the War ?

—a question, the answer for which, many Christians are seeking today, is only a part of the age-long problem which

Prof. Loring W. Batten of General Theological Seminary, New York
treats and discusses in his new book, entitled GOOD AND EVIL

Prof. Batten's new book is recommended strongly to "Churchman" readers. The author is well known to many through his distinguished success of a quarter century at the General Theological Seminary, and his book is a fresh, broad, satisfying study—"the import of which," The Boston Transcript says, "no review can express."

THE LIVING CHURCH SAYS:

"The problem of evil in the world has always been the great stumbling block to faith. If God is a God of love, why did He not make the world good and keep it good? If evil is the result of sin, and sin a necessary possibility if man were to be given free will, why is not evil restrained? Why does suffering come alike to the just and the unjust? What shall we say of vicarious suffering? All these are problems we have always had with us; the great war has but brought them out into sharper outline."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN SAYS:

"Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read."

This is a clear, pointed, pithy, and, in my opinion, a very delightful little book. The theme is, God is trying to fulfil Himself. The book provides us with a noble thought, so also it does with a searching Lenten question, Am I growing? This book will be a help to all of us to try and answer that searching question this Lent.

THE PRICE OF VICTORY

THE Creighton Lecture on the Contemporary Criticism of the Peloponnesian War, which was given recently by Professor Gilbert Murray, concluded with the following paragraphs:

"The Peace of Nicias failed. The impetus of the war was too great; the natural drift of affairs was in Cleon's direction, and the farther Athens was carried the harder it became for any human wisdom or authority to check the rush of the infuriated herd. And since Nicias was too moderate and high-minded and law-abiding to fight Cleon with his own weapons, he lost hold on the more extreme spirits of his own party; so that at the end of the war the informers had created the very thing they had dreamed about and had turned their own lies into truth. There was at last an actual pro-Spartan group; there were real secret societies, real conspiracies, and a party that was ready to join hands with the enemy in order to be delivered from the corrupted and war-maddened mob that governed them.

"One is tempted in a case like this to pass no judgment on men or policies, but merely record the actual course of history, and try to understand the conflicting policies and ideals instead of judgment taking refuge in the lacrime rerum—the eternal pity that springs from the eternal tragedy of human endeavor. When the soldiers of Nicias in Sicily, mad with thirst, pressed on to drink the water, full of blood and mud, of the little stream where the enemy archers shot them down at leisure, it was not only an army that perished but a nation, and a nation that held the hopes of the world. When we read that immortal praise of Athens which our historian puts into the mouth of Pericles, the city of law and freedom, of simplicity and beauty, the beloved city in whose service men live and die rejoicing as a lover in his mistress, we should notice that the words are spoken in a Funeral Speech. The thing so praised, so beloved, is dead; and the haunting beauty of the words is in part merely the well-known magic of memory and of longing. For Thucydides the dream of a regenerated life for mankind has vanished out of the future, and he rebuilds it in his memory out of the past. The Peloponnesian War had ended wrong; and whatever the end might have been, it had already wrecked Hellas.

"Our war has at last ended right; and, one may hope, not too late for the recovery of civilization. In spite of the vast material destruction, in spite of the blotting out from the book of life of practically one whole generation of men, in spite of the unmeasured misery which has reigned and reigns still over the greater part of Europe, in spite of the gigantic difficulties of the task before us, in spite of the great war-harvest of evil, and the exhaustion of brain and spirit in most of the victorious nations as well as in the vanquished, our war has ended right; and we have such an opportunity as no generation of mankind has ever had of building out of these ruins a better international life and concomitantly a better life within each nation. I know not which thought is the more solemn, the more awful in its responsibility: the thought of the sacrifice we survivors have asked or exacted from our fellow-men, or the thought of the task that now lies upon us if we are not to make that sacrifice a crime and a mockery. Blood and tears to which we had some right, for we loved those who suffered and they loved us; blood and tears to which we had no right, for those who suffered knew nothing of us nor we of them; misery of the innocent beyond measure or understanding and hitherto without recompense; that is the price that has been paid, and it lies on us who live to see to it that the price is not paid in vain. By some spirit of co-operation instead of strife, by sobriety instead of madness, by resolute sincerity in public and private things and surely by some self-consecration to the great hope for which those who loved us gave their lives.

"A city where rich and poor, man and woman, Athenian and Spartan, are all equal and all free; where there are no false accusers and where men, or at least the souls of men, 'have wings.' That was the old dream that failed. Is it to fail always and forever?"—The Challenge.

The British Navy in Battle

By ARTHUR H. POLLEN

A RECOGNIZED authority on naval affairs, Mr. Pollen is exceptionally well qualified to tell this vivid story of the British Navy's marvellous success in sweeping the enemy from the high seas. He has had access to the official reports, and many of the statements of the fighting commanders are included in the volume.

The London Times says:

"Pollen is to be congratulated. The best and foremost important book written about the war."

The subject of England's dependence on her navy—a topic which interests us all—is treated at length.

Ambassador Morgenthau's Story

By HENRY MORGENTHAU

TURKEY, throughout the whole war, has been the tool of Germany. Every dastardly crime she has committed—every innocent Christian she has tortured—Germany is directly responsible for.

Representing neutral America, Mr. Morgenthau stood many times between Turkish-Hun atrocities and their threatened victims. He was the confidant of the Turk and courted by the German agent.

This is a story for now and for all time. History, swift-running narrative and graphic description are all in this book.

12mo. 275 pages. Cloth. Price, $1.75

A serious attempt to examine the various offices and rites, and to ascertain if possible just what kind of a religion the Prayer Book teaches. This is a subject of prime importance to all Churchmen in view of the revision of the Prayer Book that is now under way. It is also a subject that must interest all those who are perplexed by the various pronouncements of bishops and priests on matters of faith. For it cannot be insisted on too strongly that the Book of Common Prayer is for Anglicans, the authoritative expression of the mind of the Church.

THE CHALLENGE

CHRISTIAN education is the great, the only hope of the world. The men who do not see this in the face of present world conditions are blind. By Christian education we do not mean that every boy and girl should have a college education. We might set up a college on every street corner in the country; we might open its opportunities to every child of the nation, but we should not have taken one step towards making the nation Christian. We should be a shrewder people than we are today, but we should not be a people informed by the spirit of the Christ.

It is imperative that our civilization become Christian within the next quarter of a century if that civilization is to be saved. The people who think that they have most at stake in the present order would do well to face this fact. By a civilization becoming Christian we do not mean that people individually shall have turned from being bad to good, from being pretty good into being very good. Something radically different from that transformation is involved. What is involved is the spirit which dominates the civilization. That the spirit has something radically wrong and perverse in it, the war has revealed. That, unless the spirit is changed, anarchy awaits the world has also been revealed. We Christians ought to examine these facts and measure their consequence.

It would pay the men of wealth and the men and women of moderate wealth to pour into the Christian experiment half of the money they possess in order that their children and their children's children may be saved from the ghastly experiences of evolution by revolution. The practical men, the men of large affairs, the statesmen and those who appear to take counsel of prudence, could make no finer use of their genius and their priceless moments than to sit upon the boards of religious education in America and vote budgets of billions to redeem the American slums, to reach out into villages, the countryside and the cities for every boy and girl in the land, so that before these boys and girls take their places of responsibility in the community life they may have had the opportunity of knowing what Christ has pronounced to be the meaning, the end of life.

This is a challenge which the Church makes in the year 1919. Will the men of wealth and the men of good-will heed the challenge? They must heed it now or it will soon be too late. It may be too late, perhaps, a year or five years hence. The Church which makes this challenge does so in all humility. We, we say it to our shame, have never seen the vision straight. We have never taken Christ for our Master. We have not trusted the world to Him. But at last He has made His meaning clear. We must let Him solve our problems or we must go on trusting it to that hellish shrewdness of self-interest that has laid ten million boys in their graves and filled the air of four continents with shrieks of hate and anguish.

The war has solved no problems; the treaty of peace will solve no problems. But they will have done something infinitely better than solving problems of statesmanship if they reveal to us the hopelessness, the hollowness of every solution that does not include a will redeemed by Christ. The pacifist is right in his single-minded insistence on love as the only healing force that finally can end war. He is right in demanding that Christendom in a mighty act of faith bow to its Lord. We gave our bodies and our wealth into our country's hand, believing it to be God's will that by force we should end the reign of force. Let us now declare the war of love. It will be a war on greed, on cruelty practised on the helpless, on every intrigue of the strong to exploit the weak. It will be a war on philistinism, on luxury and idleness, on the insolent strong of every class. It will be a war without the demagogue's shibboleths, one class hurling accusations at another. It will be a war different from any yet espoused by social enthusiasts, for it will be waged without pride of opinion or prejudice. It will chant, as it fights, a great prayer to God, a prayer for that spirit of fellowship in the world's work which is the only spirit of reasonableness. There is only one flag to be carried in such a war; it is the flag with a cross on it. We appeal to the geniuses of the nation, to the educators, to our multi-millionaires, to the statesmen, to come and reason together with the Christ. The challenge is made in the spirit of humility, of penitence, and a great yearning; but it carries with it a harsh warning. The strong of the earth have never given their strength to Christ. They know it. Now they must stop and consider. The Church of Christ must be made to conquer the world. It will conquer it in due time; we never doubt that. But those that we call the mighty will have no share in the victory unless they relinquish the privileges of power for the crusader's vow.

RECEIVERS OF GRACE

ST. PAUL in his care of the Churches had two tremendous anxieties; it was hard to convert people, but it was harder to keep them converted. When he wrote to the Church in Corinth, "We then as workers together with him beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain," he was doubtless turning over in his mind what it meant to keep the receivers of grace—that is, converted people—converted. He had preached the unsearchable riches of Christ to men. He had taught them the ineffable meaning of the Christian miracle of Love, and he had bound them together for service into the fellowship of the Church, and then when it seemed that the task was completed and that converted Christians by a spontaneous and original life ought to go on and up into higher loyalties, he found that he must begin over again and convince them that it is worth while to be a Christian.

But that is what usually happens. Those who have been receivers of grace, who once have been thrilled by the new life, fall back a dead weight upon the men who have the care of the Churches. St. Paul was not railing against the weakness of men nor complaining because human nature is what it is; for he knew that what had happened in Corinth must happen again and again, namely, that people would not stay good merely because at a certain hour in their lives they had wanted to be good—wanted it wonderfully. What were the facts in the case? A group of people in the city of Corinth had heard the Gospel from the lips of St. Paul. They had “joined the Church;” they had become receivers of grace. Then a few months went by and they began to act, speak and live pretty much as pagans all around them were living. If receivers of grace are to continue to receive grace, they must be different from the people who do not care to receive grace. In other words, St. Paul knew that staying good, becoming better, are estates of character which require watchfulness and a special environment.

There is not a man among us who once at least in his life has not stood upon the heights, very near to reality. No man can pass through life without having had that experience. The best of men and the worst of men have known such high moments of privilege. Those are times of grace. They come after the manner of St. John’s marvelous definition of the birth of religion in the soul: “The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every man that is born of the Spirit.” But why can’t we keep those trysts more often? If strong once, why not always strong? Once decent and chivalrous, why not clean and true forever? Once living daily with the grace of God, why ever willing to live the chill existence without Him? This is the problem uppermost in our mind and heart whenever we stand at the baptismal font and place the sign of the cross on the forehead of the little child. It is the problem of bishop, rector and parent whenever a Confirmation class is presented for the laying on of hands. The conservation of spiritual resources, keeping the grace we have, going on and up, is the insistent problem of those who have the care of the Churches.

How did St. Paul propose to guard his converts? Why, he put them in a Church, an artificial environment, selected and fashioned for a purpose just as the school is selected and informed for a definite purpose. There was not much prejudice against Churches in those days, so that St. Paul need not waste effort in defending them. The gospels and the epistles contain no reference to what men have so abundantly discussed in modern days—whether people cannot be just as good outside as inside a Church, whether a creed hurts or helps, whether a concert or a walk in the woods may not be as inspiring as a sacrament in a hallowed place where men feel the fellowship of Christ. St. Paul does not argue these matters. He merely says you can’t live the life of a pagan and continue to receive the grace of God. Then he offers his converts the Church. There is nothing better we can offer any man today who wants to lift his soul godward. The Church, with all its imperfections and its chill loyalties, offers more effective means of grace to men than does any other institution, human or divine, upon the planet. It offers this because of what it is, a fellowship of men organized to receive the grace of God.

Churchmen throughout the world are beginning together another Lent. No one compels us to set aside these forty days in the interest of Christian character. It is purely a voluntary act, done in conformity to a venerable tradition. It is merely an effort to become receptive, to let God help us, to learn new ways of helping ourselves. Lent proclaims to the whole world the need of God’s help. There is nothing sentimental or pietistic about such a proclamation. It is exceedingly practical and matter of fact. But any man has gone a long way forward into life when he honestly confesses that he needs help. If a whole parish could be got sincerely to acknowledge the need of God’s help, that parish would have begun the most wonderful Lent it has ever known. For then the grace that is there to be used would be sought and found. Christ we are told said to Pascal in a vision: “Thou wouldst not search for me if thou hadst not already found me.” How true of life! The spiritual universe hurls back to us in fulfilled desire the wish we make. We really get what we ask in life. The needs we express to God are evidence of our character. Given a boy or girl hungry for learning and we have the making of a scholar. Given a man or woman zealous for God’s help and we have the making of a saint. It is not more means of light and grace that our worn and disillusioned world needs today. What we lack is the willingness of men and women to be recipients of the grace that is all around us waiting to be used.

There is one marvelous experience which anyone who loves his Church would like to share at least once in his life. He would like to belong to a Church expanded to its full power of usefulness by the willing loyalty of its members. Such a Church would need no arguments to defend its creed.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

A FINANCIAL REPORT AND THE MORAL

THE report of the Church Pension Fund, published in our news columns, is one which every churchman should read with pride. That the pension system, devised by the Church, has proved 99 per cent efficient as regards payment of assessments during the first two years of its operation indicates success startling in its approach to perfection. The system itself and its administrators are richly deserving of commendation, but so, also, are the hundreds of parishes throughout the country who have been faithful to their pledges and are backing up the pension system in deed as well as in word.

There is one striking moral to be attached to this brilliant record of the Church Pension Fund. If the enterprise of pensioning the clergy can be put through with such success, why may not other church agencies, some of them presenting a much stronger emotional appeal, be put upon their feet once for all time? The Church can do anything that it chooses to do and that is its duty to see done, if it sets about it in the right way. The money is here. The war drives have demonstrated that people, if the appeal is properly organized, can be induced to give. We are starving our missionary programs. To be sure the missionary work of the Church sadly needs reorganization. Why not reorganize it and then make a drive for the funds? If the Board of Missions would seize the present psychological moment for an appeal for home missions, make it an appeal for Christianizing the nation, they could get any sum they asked for. All that is required is imagination and organization. The Board sees this. We are likely to see results.

EDITORS, TOO

THE New York Times in a lengthy editorial on the death of Senator Edmunds of Vermont laments the declining glory of the United States Senate. The Times recalls the days when there were giants in the upper chamber. Some of the giants were mentioned by name. But some of us lament the passing of editors, too. It used to be: "Dana says," "Greeley says," "Raymond says," but who cares what any editor says today—editors of the daily press we mean.

A COOL WAVE

OUR English correspondent reported last week a refreshingly cool wave from the Diocese of Hereford. Dr. Hensley Henson after having expressed full appreciation of the work of the chaplains suggests that there was nothing in their experiences which qualifies them in any extraordinary degree for the task (which some of them seem inclined to take up) of dictating the policy of the Church of England. These experiences "have always been too remote from normal conditions to be practically illuminating, when these have to be reckoned with."

Our American chaplains have been exceedingly modest in their reconstructive programs. In America we are suffering not at all from any exuberant proposals from the front, but rather from the enthusiasm with which the clergy at home look to the war to supply every spiritual lack.

SURE TO FAIL

A SEDITION law has been introduced into the United States Senate. The bill has been drafted by the Judiciary Committee and has been ordered favorably reported by unanimous vote. The bill, which carries a penalty of five years' imprisonment and $5000 fine, makes it a crime to advocate or incite or to print, publish, sell or distribute any written or printed communication in which there is advocated or incited the overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to personal property, or by the general cessation of industry of the government, of the United States or all government.

The difficulty with this kind of repressive legislation is that, generally speaking, it is impotent to attain its purpose. Also it places in the hands of certain officials powers that are likely to be abused.

We contend that what America needs just now is not a nervous, irritable propagandum against political heretics, but an enthusiastic constructive program for Christianizing America.

HOLDING THE CONFIRMED

ONE way to recall to the people who have been confirmed their Confirmation vows is to invite them to some special service, a corporate Communion preferably.

This was tried with marked success in the Twenty Weeks in Massachusetts. The bishop sent letters to everybody who had been confirmed during the last five years, inviting them to attend its service especially arranged for them. It is important to present classes for Confirmation, but it is also important to hold those who have been confirmed.

THE PAGEANTRY COUNCIL

SO much interesting business was transacted at the annual meeting of the General Board of Religious Education a month ago that the little sentence in the long report recording the establishment of a Council on the Use of the Dramatic Art in the Church passed almost unheeded. Nevertheless the action of the board in establishing that council has possibilities of large usefulness. A great deal of good work has been done both in the American and the English Church along the lines of religious drama. A great deal of very second rate work has also been done. Pageants (so-called), wretchedly constructed plays, allegories with symbolism so muddled that the brain aches in contemplating them, have been rushed into print at the slightest provocation. Sunday Schools have been allowed to present deeply solemn mystery plays with neither religious nor dramatic preparation sufficient to save them from being hopelessly ridiculous and irreverent. It is time that something were done to weed out the bad plays and make the good ones available. There are beautiful mystery plays published in England but quite unknown here; for example, The Mirror of Souls, presented with such marked success during the National Mission. (On the other hand, we have heard that The Great Trail is being presented all over England from one tattered copy in the possession of an arch-deacon in the Midlands.) In the second place, advice and patterns for costumes and scenery emanating from some one who is professionally trained should be at the disposal of parish dramatic committees. If possible, the new council should have a field worker to stage model productions of mystery plays and religious pageants. This has already been tried by the Educational Department of the Church Missions House and by the Woman's Auxiliary in at least one diocese in the Middle West. Finally, a high ideal of religious and artistic excellence should be maintained; simplicity in ideas, purity in diction, richness in imagination, truth in color and line, correctness in historical and allegorical detail, fervor in piety, should be set as the standard for every production. And here the new council can take a leaf out of the book of the Y. W. C. A. They have started a department of pageantry. They have engaged a woman high in her profession as the director of the department, Hazel Mackaye, the sister of Percy Mackaye. Miss Mackaye's two assistants are also women of professional standing and of religious conviction. It is interesting to know that both of them are members of the Episcopal Church and that they have both had considerable experience in producing and acting the St. Agnes' Mystery Plays. The Y. W. C. A. has engaged the best talent available to carry out their plans for religious and educational drama. If the new council is able to do the same, it will prove one of the most useful agencies developed by the General Board of Religious Education.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Dignifying of Undignified Duties

"And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them." St. Luke, 11-15.

WHO? The Christ. Remember that. And when? When, at twelve years of age He had been discussing profound questions in the great Temple in Jerusalem, the metropolis of His country; when He had been confounding the learned doctors of the Law, so that we are told, "all were astonished at His understanding and His answers." Remember that. Nevertheless, when the time came, He just as willingly left it all behind and descended to the petty routine of the insignificant affairs of His daily life in an obscure village. And He was just as great when He was going down to Nazareth as He was when He was seated in the Temple.

Do you begin to sense why I have chosen this text? Jesus never looked to the position to ennoble the man. He taught that it is within the power of every man to ennoble his position. His whole life was spent in taking the raindrops which had fallen into the gutter, and making them beautiful; turning them into a rainbow by lifting them to the throne; in making sublime the dignity of undignified duties.

He took a well-side and He turned it into a pulpit. He took one lone woman of ill-repute, and so inspired her with aspiration for something better that she became His consecrated disciple, and as His messenger, brought to His feet a multitude from that same city in which she had been living a life of sin. And with that well-side for a pulpit, and with that one woman for a congregation, He preached a sermon which has gone on blessing the world for twenty hundred years.

He took twelve unlearned peasants and by the uplift of His association He turned them into Apostles, inspired by the God Whom they had learned to see in Him. He took a gibbet and by the spirit which He showed while He was being crucified upon it He turned it into a throne. "Lifted up," it is true that as the Scriptures express it He is "drawing all men unto Him;" but the very reason for it is, that His throne was a cross. Thus He was ever going down into some unheard-of Nazareth, and being obedient to some unappreciated duties and so crowning them with immortality.

And we may do the same. Others have done it, many are doing it now, and so may you and I. In fact, for most of us, this is the only way we can do, if we are to do anything. Occasionally, very occasionally, there is born a real genius; a man who can light his own fires, who kindles quickly, and who can illuminate the world. But even then, such a quality is a questionable gift, because abnormal precocity in one direction so frequently carries with it abnormal deficiency in every other. As Abraham Lincoln remarked, "The genius is a man with one bump; all the rest—dent."

Fortunately for the world, occasionally there is a genius; but also fortunately for the world, only occasionally. It is well to have one Niagara; but one is enough. Humanity is better served by a hundred million insignificant rills, than a thousand stupendous cata-racts.

The truth is that most of those people of whom we speak as geniuses are people who, whatever their natural gifts, have mastered the faithful accomplishment of insignificant duties; people who have learned to go down to Nazareth and, for the time at least, to be patiently subject to conditions which they know to be inferior to their possibilities.

Study the biographies of great men. Who was it said, "Genius is patience"? Sir Isaac Newton. Who was it said, "Genius is an infinite ability for taking pains"? George Eliot. And who was it wrote, "My imagination would never have served me as it has, but for the habit of commonplace, humble, patient, daily, toiling, drudging attention"? Charles Dickens. Even he could not develop into a master, until he had gone down into Nazareth. And if it was true of these, how much more true it must be, of us. The only possible way for most of us to make life great, is to perform little things greatly.

Now the overlooking of this fundamental fact is that which frequently constitutes the difference between a mere workman and a master workman; an artisan and an artist. The artisan seeks merely to get his work done; the artist seeks, at whatever cost, to get his work finished; perfected,—complete. And if he has to go down to Nazareth to learn how you seldom find him whining that he must go. He goes, gladly, as Jesus went.

Thus it does not matter what our work is: whether it be that of the clergyman leaving his study to go out to call upon some little sick child when he would rather be busy with his sermon; or whether, darning the children's stockings, when the mother would prefer to play bridge, or patiently attending to his customer, when the clerk would prefer discussing with his fellow clerks why it happened that Jenkins was batted out at the last baseball match, it is within the power of every one of us, whatever our sphere, to determine whether we shall become a mere workman or a master workman, an artisan or an artist.

It does not depend upon the work we do. We can dignify the undignified. It depends upon the way we do it. "How do you know you are a Christian?" someone asked a poor, ignorant servant maid; and she answered, "I sweeps under the sofa, now." That girl had become an artist. She had learned the secret of dignifying her work. You cannot realize your ideal; idealize the real. You cannot become the President of the United States, and instead, are compelled to measure tape behind the counter of a country store. Then measure that tape just as magnificently as you think you would act if you were the President of the United States. Be sure that there are thirty-six inches to the yard, and that in the quality of the goods you are selling the goods, and not the customer.

Then, whatever our work may be, it will be possible for us to take our place among the great ones of the world, when at the last we lift up honest hands to Him, and say, "I have finished,—according to my little ability, I have made beautiful and complete—the work which Thou gavest me to do." That is all we can give. That is all He will ask. The smallest pool by the wayside can reflect the stars.

WHAT THIS LENT SHOULD MEAN

BY THE RT. REV. CHARLES FISKE, D.D., LL.D.

THIS Lent finds the nation entering upon those great tasks which are challenging all democratic peoples, now that the war is over. The new tasks call for even more difficult and trying service than was given during the stress of war. Then we were sustained by the courage of the crisis. Some of the nations were compelled to their sacrifice by the fact that it was clearly and evidently demanded for self-preservation. No less does the new day demand such service, if free, democratic institutions are to live and develop; but the service must now be given without the same compelling impetus and the duties to be performed are much more complicated and call for greater patience, steadfastness, loyalty, faith.

What the nation now discovers to be the most important half of its great task is in line with what has always been the Church's work. It is not at all surprising that the Church should often fail in its task, because its service must be rendered continuously and unceasingly, without the courage which comes to those who hear the high call insistently and clamorously, without the plain challenge of evident disaster should we fail, without the inspiration of a task single, simple, with lines clear and clean-cut.

America went into the war sustained by the sense of a great moral purpose. The danger now, is that we shall forget our professions and drop back to the old levels, contented, seemingly safe and secure, unafraid, with no real understanding of the movements (economic, industrial, social, political) which are changing the world and with no feeling of our responsibility for guiding these movements and contributing our share towards their embodiment in a lasting world peace resting upon a world order of justice and brotherhood.

The clergy have always preached and Christians have long listened to a message which includes everything the world now longs for. Bishop Gore points out that the dominant moral ideas of liberty, the brotherhood of service and the catholicism of a world community, which recently (and with increasing force and rapidity during the war) have been possessing the minds of men, are fundamental Christian ideas; only we have preached them academically and the mass of Christian people have not seized upon them as living motives. We have often left it to others fully to proclaim these principles and yet more often have left it to those outside the Christian Church to vindicate them.

Our call this Lent, therefore, is to try to make real and vital the splendid ideals which the prophets of today have been proclaiming as the impelling motives of war service and to carry them over into an after-the-war program—to prove that they are really a part of the Gospel of Christ, to show that we really mean to make them the springs of our own conduct. In a special way, this Lent is a call to renewal and re-consecration. We have been asking what changes of religious faith and practice we shall find in the boys when they come home. It is immensely more important to ask, What religious change will the boys find in us?

Lent is a season of penitence, prayer and service.

Penitence comes first, and never has it been more necessary than in these judgment days of God, when we have discovered how "the moral witness of the Christian Church has been, if not extinguished, yet lamentably dimmed." Out of penitence should come prayer and worship and new consecration. Then, with these as a preparation, there should be a serious consideration of the real significance of the Christian faith, especially in its social applications, and an earnest endeavor to discover its meaning for the new era. That sounds like a large program, but practically we may make a beginning of it in a very simple way.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has recently summoned the Church to an intensive effort in a great forward movement. It is significant that this summons comes from laymen. It is even more significant that it comes from laymen who have been doing particularly effective work in camp and field. Some of the clergy have not heeded the call because they have looked upon it merely as a campaign for Brotherhood membership. It is not that. It is a call to self-consecration and evangelistic effort as laymen, plain, simple, faithful laymen, whether Brotherhood men or not.

It does seem that a practical way for the clergy to make this Lent count in their several parishes would be to undertake with their laymen some such definite service as this call suggests. The plan proposed is very simple. It contemplates the organization of a small group of lay people, after the method pursued in the camps of choosing "key men" for interesting other men in religion. These groups could set before themselves for Lent one or more of three tasks:

(1) A campaign for church attendance, preferably for the rescue of the evening service from its present slump. In many parishes the evening service is simply ghastly. Make it human, helpful, congregational. Set the men to work to give it warmth and life (some of the suggestions of the Bishop of Massachusetts for his "Twenty Weeks" will help here) and build up the attendance so that the service may catch vitality. Don't be satisfied merely with getting people to come for a few weeks. Give them something to come for and they will want to keep up their attendance.

(2) An effort to get into touch with all the registered communicants (special meetings for those confirmed under certain rectorships or during different periods—the last five years, etc.—will help) and to make them regular and faithful in Communion. Especially try to have every communicant come to the Lord's Table at least once between now and Easter; or seek to have on Easter Day a Communion of all entitled to come. Come as near as possible to a hundred per cent attendance.

(3) Either during Lent, or as a result of this Lenten work, the formation of classes for the study of Christian truth. These classes would be held only after a careful preparatory organization, which might well be a part of the Lenten program of work. They can be periodic classes—that is, group meetings for a definite period, six or eight weeks. They should be study classes; not the conventional Bible class, which has a reputation for deadly dullness hard to overcome, but meetings for full and free discussion of the problems and questions of today and of the answer of Christian faith to such problems. This would mean that men (and women) were reading and digesting books which deal with the essentials of religion in a live and interesting way. St. Andrew's Cross has suggested some titles. The war time charge by Bishop Gore on Dominant Ideas and Corrective Principles might supply work for a six weeks' course. Certain chapters of The War and the Soul by R. J. Campbell could be used, even though the book was published back in 1917. If it would not be too stiff a program, it might be possible to discuss the application to American religious life of some of the suggestions of the authors of The Church in the Furnace. With the right kind of a leader there might be a symposium of some current literature on the Church after the war. Dean Hodge's new book on the Bible or Dr. Batten's recent lectures on Good and Evil would also furnish a program, with interesting side reading for other aspects of the subject.

Here, then, is a definite aim towards which Lenten effort could be directed. We shall miss a real opportunity, if we do not respond to the call and do something. The effort will bring to the Church new knowledge, new zeal, new consecration. And, after all, is not this what we need first, if the Church is to meet the new obligations of the new day?

The program given here is not strikingly new or original. But I wonder if others have been discovering in these days, as I have, that the things we used to do have not lost their value; they have gained a new importance. I wonder if the clergy are learning, not that they can no longer preach the old faith, but that they can preach nothing else. I wonder if we see that the content of that faith is bigger and more profoundly significant than we had ever guessed.

A REAL HOUSE OF PRAYER

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

YOU may see it on any Friday morning at eleven o'clock, if you happen to be in Boston, and are in search of reality. You may see it, that is, if you have eyes to see. Like all great realities it is quite intangible. It is not a thing you can touch with your hands. It is not a thing you can sense with your physical eyes, though if behind your physical eye the eye of the spirit is alive you will discern this reality at work.

You are one of the crowd on Tremont Street on this Friday morning. As you approach the grim facade of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, your heart a bit heavy with the pressure of the daily grind, your spirit sagging a bit, perhaps, with a recent sorrow, your steps turn instinctively towards the open door. As you enter you are grateful for the quiet of the fine old edifice, a quiet so in contrast to the clamor of the street. As you sit there watching unconsciously the few people scattered about, you recall the days when you once lived in Boston before St. Paul's was the cathedral church. You remember dropping in on many occasions on a week day or a Sunday morning. And you recall the impatience with which you considered the potentialities of this downtown parish, and its seeming inadequacy.

As the hour draws on towards eleven the doors begin swinging ceaselessly. People are coming quietly in, walking up the aisles and gathering near the chancel. There is no talking, no whispering, even when two hundred or more have grouped themselves in the front of the church. As you watch the faces you see that most of the people are mature. On some there is the distinct impress of sorrow. But you see quite plainly that these people have come with a purpose defined; that they expect to receive something.

At eleven o'clock the dean comes and kneels at the head of the nave, in the center of the group. You hear the words, "Let us quiet ourselves in the presence of God," and then two or three familiar Bible verses, "Underneath are the Everlasting Arms"; "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." There are a few prayers, both ancient and modern,* a few intercessions for which people have asked, and there are periods of silence. There are ten or twelve minutes in which the dean speaks very simply, very intimately on personal religion.

As the people go slowly out you are quite sure that they have received that for which they came. For a few moments they have been near to the Great Companion. The burden is lighter as He goes with them out into the crowded street, into the life of every day with its queer hurry and monotony, its sorrow and laughter.

When I talked with Dean Rousmaniere about this Class in Personal Religion, as it is called for want of a better name, I found, as I suspected I would, that it was a difficult thing to put into black and white. It is elusive, as all things of the spirit are elusive. The dean acknowledged that he himself had put off many an invitation to write about the class. But there are certain facts connected with it which one may record.

I wanted to know, for example, what sort of people were among those who came, people numbering anywhere from one hundred and twenty-five to two hundred or more. I wanted to know whether they were all connected with St. Paul's, whether they were all Episcopalians, whether the same people came more or less regularly.

Perhaps fifty per cent of them, said the dean, have no connection with St. Paul's. A good many people are members of other parishes. They feel free to come to the cathedral, as they would not feel free to go to some parish other than their own, because the cathedral belongs to all the people. Some people come regularly who are members of other communions; some come who have no church connection. And the majority of those who come do so with a good deal of regularity.

"I make no endeavor to know those who attend the class," said the dean. "I don't want to give the impression that we are trying to attract them to the cathedral. Everybody knows that I can be seen in the office after each class. But often I don't know the names of even the people who come to see me."

I wondered how many people came to the dean after the classes and the sort of problems with which they came.

Perhaps one-fourth of those who attended the class during the year sought him out, the dean thought.

Some are people who have dropped out of the habit of churchgoing for one reason or another. Others have broken their church relation because, in some crisis of life the church failed to provide the help of which they felt great need. It was evident during the days of war that many people came to the class who had suffered the loss of those dear to them. Perhaps fifty per cent of the requests for special intercessions were for those who had been killed or wounded. But the intercessions are for all sorts of human need. They are in behalf of husbands or wives or friends, or sons or daughters, who are estranged; in behalf of a man or woman mentally or spiritually depressed; in behalf of those struggling with a definite bad habit; and, with very great frequency, in behalf of those about to undergo an operation. Dean Rousmaniere has been impressed, also, with the quite remarkable number of requests for thanksgiving. It ought to be recorded that sometimes these intercessions and thanksgivings are in the words of printed prayers, but sometimes also in the words of the dean, thus giving to the service an element of spontaneity.

There is silence in the service after each prayer in which the worshiper is asked to repeat, in his own thought and words, the prayer which has just been uttered. The dean is anxious that people should learn the secret of corporate prayer, as distinct from listening to prayers read by a leader. The prayers always close with the recitation by all present of the class prayer, which was written some years ago by the Rev. Charles Morris Addison, and which follows:

Almighty God, Who art the only source of health and healing, the spirit of calm and the central peace of the universe; grant to us, Thy children, such a consciousness of Thy indwelling presence as may give us utter confidence in Thee. In all pain and weariness and anxiety may we throw ourselves upon Thy besetting care, that knowing ourselves fenced about by Thy loving omnipotence, we may permit Thee to give us health and strength and peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Again, after the address, there is a period of silence in which the people are asked to think of the chief subject which the address has brought before them.

I asked the dean if he could tell me consisely what he considered to be the real purpose of the class. He answered at once: "To train men to know God. To teach them to say 'O God, thou art my God.'"

Such knowledge, said the dean, becomes to a man the real source of life. He then comes to all intellectual problems from a fresh viewpoint. He had seen the need of it, he said, in the cases of men who had been brought up to place their reliance in a theological proposition. Once that particular proposition had been invalidated in the man's mind, his whole religious life had come toppling to the ground.

The dean felt that much of the so-called loss of religious faith on the part of boys in school and college was due to a training which had put something else first and religion second. "It is not of first importance to teach boys in school a list of the Kings of Israel," he said, "but it is important to teach them to know God. After that they may be taught the kings of Israel. The headmaster of a boys' school said to me recently, 'Boys want preachers to talk who has succeeded in making the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, Boston, a real house of prayer.

about religion,' and I agree with him."

I suspect that in his class in personal religion the dean is doing much to overcome the twisted method of teaching, either in the home or the day or Sunday School, to which he referred.

Sometimes there is assigned for class reading a chapter in some book which will help its members in this search for a knowledge of God. This chapter then becomes the subject for the Friday address. Such books, for example, are Fosdick's The Meaning of Prayer, McNeil's Self-Training in Prayer, Carey's Prayer and Some of Its Difficulties, and Brother Lawrence's Practice of the Presence of God. At present the readings follow the subjects in the Twenty Weeks program.

It will be seen at once, of course, that the Class in Personal Religion is a class in prayer. To know God is to know Him as the Great Companion; to know Him as the Master taught us we should know Him, as Father.

How much such teaching is needed in the Episcopal Church, how much such knowledge is craved by people in all churches, and how effectively such knowledge can be given, becomes strikingly evident when one knows the inside story of Dean Rousmaniere's class. It is revealed in the faces of those who gather in the cathedral on Friday mornings, and have gathered there these nine years past. It is revealed in the stories of those who talk to the dean in his office. It is revealed by the fact that over one thousand people in all parts of the country receive each week, at their own request, the little four-page leaflet compiled by the dean with its quotations from men who can speak simply of real religion.

THE SECOND WORD

"Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

THOSE words point to the thief on the cross beside Christ as the first convert of Christ's cross. That miserable man hanging there, certainly in no condition to comprehend difficult meanings, yet saw in the dying Master something that made him believe He was the king of a kingdom. "Jesus, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom," he cried. And at once came the gracious answer, "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

Doesn't that question and answer tell us plainly that though the Cross has not given up its whole mystery to the profoundest thinker, yet it has a message everyone may understand? If it had not, how could we believe Christ died for all mankind?

There have been times when the necessity of simplicity in any message that is to be understood by all sorts and conditions of men seems to have been forgotten. Cloistered students have thought out what seemed to them the purpose and result of Christ's crucifixion. Other students have questioned their findings. The debate has been long, frequently heated. Fine distinctions have been drawn. At last it took a student to express the orthodox idea of the Atonement, and a scholar to understand it. What sort of message to mankind was this!

There is a story that early in the days of the Reformation one of the leaders of the Church of England was walking in a garden in a university town reflecting on the consummate industry and skilful logic of the theologians of the Middle Ages. Suddenly this point struck him. How absurd it was to suppose that even one man in a thousand could make himself even roughly familiar with the Church's elaborate statements of theology! And yet the Church was solemnly maintaining that only those could be saved who not only understood all these fine distinctions, but also upheld the Church's official interpretation of their truth. How many souls could be saved on such terms!

Let us frankly admit that we cannot get to the bottom of the mystery. Whoever comes and tells us, I have solved the riddle, seems to give proof by that very claim that he has not even discovered how complex it is. No one yet, I think, has explained to us why men and women must suffer; why a loving God sends suffering to men and women who are trying to serve him. Many helpful things have been said. Sometimes, when the world goes well with us, and suffering shrinks into something that we only see in other people, we may think we have found the key to the puzzle. We can explain everything just then to our satisfaction. But when suffering comes to us the mystery deepens again. When it takes hold of those dear to us, we find the explanation that seemed so perfect breaking under the strain. We still have faith that God is wise and loving, but we realize once more that our faith is not yet sight.

And if the questions that spring from human suffering are hard to answer, there is greater difficulty in answering the questions that spring out of Christ's suffering. Here we have the perfect man, trusting absolutely in His Father's love. And this man dies miserably at the hands of the wicked. How extraordinary! It helps, of course, to realize that our Lord went voluntarily to His death. It helps even more to get away from the idea, once so generally taught, that there was division between Father and Son: that the Father was angry with the human race, but that the Son loved it, and so placed Himself between His Father's wrath and sinful men. I don't see how Christ's cross can reconcile us to God until we realize that in all that He did and suffered, in life and in death, Jesus was expressing God's feeling for mankind. We must see in Christ's love and readiness to die for us, not qualities different from the Father's, which shall somehow win a reluctant God to tolerate His children, but the qualities, the very same eager, gladly suffering love of Almighty God Himself. All that helps, I say. Nevertheless, when all is said, we don't understand why love can gain its end only by suffering, why life can be reached only through death.

Still, if Christ died for all mankind, then the vital truth of the Cross must be so simple that all can grasp it. After all, the heart of a message may be expressed in many forms. It is that heart we want. The details are unessential. If we get the heart of the message, the most incongruous theory that we choose to weave about it will not take away the blessing it carries. "It is not the acceptance of a theory that is salvation, nor its rejection that is damnation."

And what is the heart of the message? That God loves the man; that God hates sin; that, in spite of all that bids us think the contrary, man is not the child of the devil, but the son of God. Humanity and divinity are not opposites; humanity at its best, when it is most truly human, is divine.

However you may explain what happened on Calvary, is not this the heart of its message to you? Perhaps you can't say why the Crucifixion helps you to believe God loves you, but it does. Perhaps you can't make it clear even to yourself why that scene on Calvary gives you a new horror of sin as something terrible in God's eyes; or why it touches your heart with the assurance that God is always seeking to save every human soul that has lost its way; or how it teaches you your own worth. But it does all this. And because it does, you rise above sins that before held you bound, and look into you heavenly Father's face unafraid, sure that it is the face of a friend.

That is the heart of the message. We read it in the features of the one perfect Son of Man, the Son of God, as he looks down upon us, undismayed and unvengeful, from the cross where wicked hands have nailed him. It was there the thief read it, and at death's very entrance found new hope.

"HELPING GOD" DURING LENT

BY ADELAIDE TEAGUE CASE

I REMEMBER reading about a little girl who came home from a new Sunday School one day and said to her mother: "Mother, I like this school better than the school I used to go to. There we learned all about God, here we learn how to help God."

One of the great values of the lenten season for our Church Schools is that then we usually do take time to stop and consider how our children can "help God" in his world-wide work of saving love—that work which is the Church's mission. Nearly all the parishes in the country plan some special activities for their children during Lent. As this is done with more careful organization and with stronger leadership, it will tend to raise the standard of the whole year's curriculum, so that it becomes one of self-initiated activity rather than mere "learning." "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only" might well be our motto for all the year, starting with this Lent.

The various forms of activity naturally group themselves under three headings:—Selling the Spirit of Missions, Earning Money, and actually Doing Things for Other People.

How many weekday worshipers have not been besieged at the church doors by eager little vendors of the annual children's number of our missionary magazine, resplendent in a colored cover and full of pictures. Sometimes classes or individual children compete to see which shall sell the greatest number of copies. Of course we are always reminded that half of the proceeds goes into the missionary offering. All this is good. It is better still if the children not only sell the magazines, but read them. There might well be pictures and excerpts cut out and posted on the school bulletin board the first Sunday in Lent, and notices of the most interesting features given by the superintendent or the teachers.

Most of our schools do not stop with the selling of the Spirit of Missions. Mite boxes have still to be filled. There are indeed ever so many ways of turning an honest penny. One kindergarten child that I know gets a cent every time he carries a package home from market for his mother. Older children run errands, sell papers, black boots, shovel snow, wash dishes—any form of honest toil! I know a group of little Italian girls in a Junior Auxiliary who last Lent patiently stitched on little articles for parish bazaars, hearing at the same time stories of the hospital in China to which the money which they earned in this way was to go. I went to the sale, and it was full of enthusiasm and of missionary spirit.

One of the very best ways to earn money in Lent is to give missionary or mystery plays, or a series of dialogues and impersonations. The children love it; they are instructing themselves; and they are instructing their audiences. A collection may be taken up, or, perhaps, a small admission fee charged at the door on the understanding that it is to go for missions. Mrs. Hobart's plays have been used all over the country with very remarkable results. One might mention The Sunset Hour; Lady Catechism; the presentation of the Prayer Book called The Little Pilgrims and the Book Beloved; The Great Trail, where the seasons of the Christian year are pictorially represented; and, most recent of all, Conquering and to Conquer, based on the Apostles' Creed. The Church Missions Publishing Company of Hartford has on sale a large number of short plays easy to give. Then there is that very useful collection entitled Voices from Everywhere, which may be obtained from the Educational Department of the Board of Missions. As the legend on one of the posters runs, "These Plays Educate, Propagate, and Stimulate." They are thoroughly worth while. During Lent, the children in Sunday School can come to know children elsewhere. One school in New York has adopted another school in Canton, China, and the children correspond and exchange cards and little gifts. In our large cities there are day nurseries or other institutions for children near all of our Church Schools. Lent gives us an opportunity for making possible a personal contact, which might last throughout the whole year.

Children enjoy thinking of other children wherever they are, and for many years the Junior Auxiliaries have been accustomed to make and give Christmas presents—"joyful gifts" and "useful gifts"—for other children in the mission field. This is usually done during Lent. The boys make dolls' furniture, cut out picture puzzles and construct simple wooden toys, etc., etc.; and the girls knit and sew and cover boxes, dress dolls, and fill stockings. Younger children paste pictures in scrap books and construct Christmas tree ornaments. Sometimes these gifts are displayed before the whole school on a "spring Christmas tree" before they are packed up and sent away.

I couldn't help wondering whether a little girl whom I met the other day on Amsterdam Avenue has any of these activities in connection with the Church School where she goes. She walked by my side for several blocks, and (slightly stimulated by two pieces of molasses candy), told me about her last Sunday's experiences. With much enjoyment she recounted the story of Moses on the mountain, the worship of the golden calf, and the breaking of the tablets of stone. As far as I could observe these incidents were quite innocent of any moral implications, and she had no other associations in her mind with the life of the school. Perhaps during this Lent she may be given some definite suggestions for practising the Christian religion of love and helpfulness. I hope so.

LIKE old and delicate stitchery laid
In lavender and sandal wood
I leave the past when you my heaven made.

Daily I gather a fresh rose for you
Although it wither leaving but the thorn,
Its petals keep their fragrance the year through.

I shed no tear—why should I fret?
Because the Hand that shut the past away,
My feet within a wider heaven has set.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

BY JOHN JAY CHAPMAN

THE draft constitution reported by President Wilson is valuable as a summary of things to be desired; but as an instrument of government it will be a failure.

If the Peace Conference now in session at Paris will simply adopt the draft league constitution as their declaration of general principles, and then take the responsibility of acting upon those principles as far as possible, and of calling upon the governments and peoples of the world to support them, this will give the maximum of efficiency and the maximum of popular support to the new world-order. The draft constitution is itself a mere series of suggestions to be adopted as far as possible. In aim it is excellent, in practice it will not work. There is not time for any of these legal procedures to work.

Europe is today filled with questions of a practical kind which cannot be settled by arbitration. You cannot arbitrate between Turkey and Greece or between the Jugo-Slavs and Italy, or between the Serbians and the Bulgarians. The very elements out of which governments arise are still in the flux. The parties to your arbitrations have not yet emerged from chaos. The peace conferees at Paris are being forced day by day to exert influence of an arbitrary sort upon the destinies of Europe, because there is no other way to settle pressing questions, and the peace of the world depends upon immediate decisions. How long this state of things may continue we do not know; but the conditions will not be altered by the adoption of a league of nations. The entente between England, France, Italy and the United States will still be obliged to take in hand these controversies, because these nations represent the combined force of military and moral power that won the war.

If a league is called into existence it will be a fifth wheel to a coach, because it cannot deal with the executive or administrative problems of the times. The powers and modes of procedure in any league must be vague, complex, dilatory. The draft constitution shows us the sort of machine it must be. Any reader of this draft will ask questions about it which not Solon himself could answer. The new machine will not work quickly. The result will be that the Allies will continue to do just what they are doing now—exert such influence as they can to do justice and keep the peace in Europe. The new league will become dead letter.

In other words we now have the beginning of a league: we have an international vigilance committee that is fitted to deal with the most pressing questions before us.

It deals with them clumsily, but they are clumsy questions. They cannot be codified. But nobody seems to believe this. People want a legal document; and the belief in documents is so strong in the human breast that the average American will tell you that he knows the document will be disregarded. The will of the Great Powers will prevail, of course, and things will go on as before. "But," he adds, "the world will have been through a great public oath-taking."

It is as a sacrificial declaration that most people want the league. They feel that a dramatic moment is at hand and must be utilized.

Well, so be it. I do not myself believe that the world is now in a condition to be governed by a written constitution: but if the peoples insist on trying the experiment, no doubt the experiment is a fated necessity. Perhaps it will accomplish something in world-education that nothing else can accomplish. Perhaps it will teach men the truth that leagues do not increase virtue, and that the multiplication of formal agencies does not increase efficiency. Perhaps the League of Nations is a gate of disillusionment through which the civilized world must pass. All I say is that you must not expect those who are not suffering from these particular illusions to vote for the league.

An idea seems to be prevalent that free government is a thing that can be handed out to backward and oppressed nations, and that we, having ourselves enough and to spare, ought to give a largesse of liberty to Poland and Bohemia, etc. It seems to be true that America can protect some weak and meritorious foreign nation during a crisis. By advice and encouragement, and perhaps by an occasional subsidy or even by armed intervention we may be useful to the oppressed peoples of Europe. The thing will, however, prove exceedingly difficult in practice; and our experiments ought to be begun on a small scale. Mr. Wilson is in favor of beginning with Poland and Armenia, and as he knows a good deal about the subject, we may very well trust him. Let our peace delegates at Paris, in conjunction with the rest of the Allies adopt a policy of assistance toward Poland and Armenia, which policy shall be explained to the country and, as it were, expounded by the general principles that are announced in the draft constitution of the league. The working out of one such practical undertaking will advance our knowledge of Europe and fit us to assist Europe more than a hundred signatures to paper documents. And by such a course we shall not be committed to the settlement of European boundaries in the gross, but only to such boundaries as we know something about.

Nothing in the draft surprises me more than the idea that the United States must guarantee all the European boundaries. Those boundaries may be all wrong for Ought I know. Really this is quixotry.

What the world needs is an international police force. We must work towards this idea. The nations at present distrust each other too much to put certain of their troops at the disposition of the central authority. As time goes on, however, and experience proves that such a police force is necessary, and that the Allies can be trusted, an international police force will probably be established.

As an instrument of government the league draft errs in trying to do too much. We must work with the outfit we have, and make changes gradually.

LET us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure—reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.—Washington.

THE LORD PASSED BY

BY LEIGHTON ROLLINS

IN Lent it was,
When mourning worshipers
Followed the Pilgrimage of the Lord,
The Journey of the Cross.
The priest blest us and sent us forth
Into a March night
Windy and black;
The snow fell in gusts
And whirled round our heads,
To wander 'mong the trees
Lamenting Winter's end.

We slept,
To wake in the early morn,
Listening to creakings, strange groanings,
That were gone as swiftly as they came.
We leap from the luxurious warmth
Of our soft, comforting beds,

And look out into the day
And behold the trees covered with ice,
A living glory,
For while we slept,
The Lord passed by Transforming our everyday world
Into a kingdom of the Beautiful;
For every tree and every bush,
And every blade of grass,
Was covered with God's gems,
Laughter from the sky.
And every minute,
Like the swift flying swallow,
Was twice as precious,
As when God blest the world.

The holy damosels,
The silver birches,
Fell adoring to the earth,

As the Lord walked by.
Now in the radiance of the sun
They stand bowing low,
Where Christ did walk;
Casting ever and anon,
Pale gems of blue, and limpid
Green, and darts of shining red,
Upon the sacred ground.
So Christ clothed the trees,
In raiment like His own,
So priceless, purified.

Now as the setting sun
Touches the topmost boughs
With a living crimson,
Scattering, it seemed, human drops
Of blood upon the trees,
He reminds us of the daily Sacrifice,
That Beauty lives in pain.

BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN

WHEN we think of the mourning mothers of all the nations at this time of chaos in the world's history, and see sorrow and grief on the faces of so many whom we meet, do we think of them as "blessed"? Hardly. Yet our Lord did. Why? Because He Himself, "acquainted with grief," felt a special kinship with sorrowing hearts, and because he had the means of giving them a joy greater than any happiness the world could give, a joy that "could not be taken away from them." What was that joy, and what is it today? A real sense of His indwelling presence to supply every need, whether of courage or wisdom or faith or any lack whatsoever. One who is passing through deep waters is peculiarly open to His influence unless wilfully he shuts himself away from divine help.

Such comforting verses as "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end," "Underneath are the everlasting arms," "The Eternal God is thy dwelling place," "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee" and many others bring us into close touch with God if only we will take them into our hearts and feel their message. This is indeed living the life of the Spirit, putting us in touch with the vital spiritual force that is real life. God gives Himself to us in our grief if we will let Him, and also through Him we come into close touch with our dear ones who are in glory.

We know what an inspiration Beatrice was to Dante after she passed from his sight. She was the guiding star of his existence. At her death one of his friends thus voiced the imperishable love between Dante and his lady:

God hath her with Himself eternally,
Yet she inhabits every hour with thee.

Wordsworth speaks thus of a dear friend who has passed on: "Who ever dwells with me, whom I have loved with such communion that no place on earth can ever be a solitude for me."

Zahn, in speaking of Jerome to whom we owe the translation of the Scriptures from the ancient Hebrew, says of him after the death of Paula, whose name will ever be associated with Jerome in his great work, "His was the life of the spirit—a life which was blessed by the ever-present image and by the unfailing care of one who he felt was to him both inspirer and guardian angel."

What a new and wonderful meaning is given to life in this vision of the spiritual companionship of our beloved! That our dear ones, husband, mother, friend, clothed in glory, surround us constantly with a wealth of love and sympathy and understanding not possible when they were with us in the body!

Of course there are other helps. We all know the healing power of work, the dear sympathy of friends, the value and inspiration of books, and the great comfort that our friends in Heaven are enjoying the glorious liberty of children of God set free from human ills of every kind. But the real joy that transcends grief and gives dignity and solemnity to our life comes from living in the faith that day by day we and our dear ones are consciously together in God.

When we come to a realization of that we take unto ourselves "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

PHENOMENAL RECORD MADE IN PENSION FUND PAYMENT

First Two Years Shows Parishes 99½% Paid Up

In a report just issued by the Church Pension Fund the amazing statement is made that "ninety-eight and one-half per cent of all possible assessments for the two years of the fund's operation have been paid," a record for the Church which puts most business organizations to shame. The report says in part:

On March 1, 1917, the Church Pension Fund began the administration of the pension system of the Church. Today (February 28, 1919) therefore completes the second year of administration.

The salaries of all of the clergy in the United States and foreign mission fields (including an allowance of one-sixth of the money salary as the rental value of a rectory) are $8,000,000 a year (actually $7,855,000). The pension assessment of 7½ per cent on salaries is therefore $600,000 a year. For two years the pension assessments would be $1,200,000.

The assessments received in this office between March 1, 1917, and the business day of February 28, 1919, inclusive, amount to $1,181,207.76. This is 98.4 per cent of all assessments. Allowing for assessments in transit from diocesan treasurers, 98½ per cent of all possible assessments for the two years of the Fund's operation have been paid. Most non-payments occurred in the first calendar year. The Church supported the pension system during the second year at the rate of 99 per cent.

There is also added, as a matter of interest, the pension grants of the Church Pension Fund as they stand on this day. This amount of annual grants makes the Church Pension Fund, in point of size, at present one of the half-dozen or so largest pension granting corporations of the world, and by far the greatest that the Episcopal Church has ever maintained, the largest yearly distribution of the former national relief society of the Church having been $115,000.

Board Commends Brazil Fund

At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Boards of Missions a resolution commending the action of the Brazil Committee in New York was passed as follows:

RESOLVED: That the board has heard with great interest the desire of the Brazil Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of New York to raise a special fund to present to the Bishop of Brazil in commemoration of his twenty years' work in that country. The board most cordially approves this endeavor and wishes the members of the committee great success in their effort.

Contributions to this fund may be sent through Mrs. J. N. Blanchard, 1109 Madison avenue, New York.

WORLD CONFERENCE MEN OFF TO EUROPE AND EAST

A deputation of the World Conference on Faith and Order left Thursday for Europe and the Near East to make plans for a world-wide conference of all Christian Churches of all countries. The committee includes Bishop Anderson of Chicago, Bishop Brent, Bishop Weller, of Fond du Lac, Bishop Vincent of Southern Ohio, the Rev. Edward Parsons of California, and the Rev. B. T. Rogers of Racine, Wisconsin. Bishop Anderson said to the New York Times before sailing:

"A deputation was about to visit Europe and the Near East when the war broke out. This stopped proceedings in the meantime, but while the war has delayed the work it has created an atmosphere which brings it more nearly within the bounds of practicability.

"This deputation is now about to proceed to Europe and the Near East to take the matter up where it was left off in 1910. At a time when nations are discussing a League of Nations the Christian Churches may well consider ways and means of closer co-ordination and co-operation and of giving utterance to the international Christian conscience."

In a sermon at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin on Sunday last Bishop Weller outlined the forming of the Church League along lines similar to those embodied in the proposed League of Nations, in which Roman Catholic, Greek, Russian, and Protestant "might get together and co-operate in Christian work as brethren."

Unity Foundation Extends Membership

At a meeting held at the New York Clergy Club the Christian Unity Foundation passed a resolution extending membership privileges to members of all Christian Churches. The first meeting under the new arrangement was held in the rooms of the Merchants' Association on February 28. At this meeting arrangements were made for a definite propaganda of education on Christian Unity. The organization is the only one in existence for educational research along the lines of the principles for unity. The acting president is Bishop Lines.

Program on Americanization Developing

Definite steps towards a program for Americanization have been taken by the provinces of New England, New York and New Jersey, and Washington, through a joint commission, the personnel of which is as follows: New England, the Rev. Thomas Burgess, the Rev. B. Keating Smith; New York and New Jersey, Bishop Burch, the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey; Washington, Bishop Harding, the Rev. W. C. Emhardt.

PROHIBITION IS BREEDING MANY LIARS IN CANADA

Wave of Petty Crime Is Giving Good Citizens Anxiety

Special Correspondence

TORONTO, CANADA.—Churchmen are feeling very anxious over the present operation of prohibition in this country. Never until prohibition was advocated as a war measure, has the Anglican Church in Canada taken a definite and unequivocal stand in its favor. Many advantages have manifestly followed in the general sobriety of the people. It has been particularly effective in protecting the returned soldiers from a kind of hospitality that would certainly be freely tendered by his friends. As a result our heroes have had a fair chance to wear their laurels of victory with dignity in the eyes of the people. At the same time a wave of petty crime, theft, perjury, lying, malingering, and many forms of contemptible conduct has broken out throughout the country. Citizens are dishonoring their good names by seeking prescriptions of liquor for mythical ailments. Doctors are dishonoring their profession by issuing these prescriptions for a consideration. Railway operatives laughingly steal shipments of liquors knowing that they are not likely to be investigated as the shipments are illegal. Witnesses in court brazenly perjure themselves. A pious prohibitionist charged with enforcing the law is discovered shipping liquors to himself in carload lots, under the name of other commodities. Thus everywhere this canker of deceit and falsehood is spreading. Thinking men realize that it is impossible to become a systematic liar on one subject and possess a high sense of integrity on all others. St. Paul labelled the Cretans for all time as liars, and the fear is lest the phrase "to lie like a Canadian" may come to designate our national character if this sort of thing continues. Sobriety is not the only virtue. Unless this condition of things can be limited to a passing phase of national life the outlook is very serious. In the meantime those who desire to promote national sobriety with national honor are feeling extremely anxious.

Good Work Done

WASHINGTON.—Bishop Harding paid high tribute to the work of rector and people in his address to the congregation of Grace Church at the Confirmation service there recently.

The bishop called attention to the fact that two years ago the church was so deeply in debt that its doors were about to be closed and the property to be sold to pay the mortgage upon it. Within his rectorate of eighteen months, the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde and his congregation have not only rehabilitated the church and parish hall buildings but they have placed the church on a satisfactory financial basis, with a fair proportion of the $3,500 debt paid off.

At a meeting of the commission held in New York last Saturday plans for developing a concrete program on Christian Americanization were discussed. The purpose of this program is to enable the Board of Missions to create a department for work with immigrants.

SYNOD WANTS IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT STARTED

WOULD REDUCE BURDENS OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION

Washington Synod Endorses Move for Increased Provincial Powers

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—The fourth meeting of the Synod of the Province of Washington, held in Baltimore, February 24 to 27, was preceded by a dinner generously provided by the Churchman Club and the Cathedral League of Maryland. Two after-dinner speeches were made, one by Archdeacon Greig of Worcester, England, and one, a description of the heroism of our boys in France by the Bishop of Erie.

Bishop Murray presided over the session. One of the most important subjects brought up was increased powers of the synod. The memorial of the Province of New England to the General Convention was endorsed, which provides for the election of a missionary bishop by the synod of the province in which he is to serve, subject to the confirmation of the House of Bishops at a regular meeting, if held within six months and, if not, at a special meeting called for that purpose within that time, urging that the provinces be fairly represented upon the Social Service Commission as are other boards, and asking that the several provincial synods be given the right to require an annual appropriation from the Board of Missions to be made in gross for subdivision by the synods as now allowed in the matter of apportionments. The synod also endorsed the memorial of the Province of New York and New Jersey as to its general tenor and urged its serious consideration by the General Convention. It recommended that some way be found for reducing the burdens of the General Convention and at the same time increasing the responsibilities of the provincial synods.

The synod made provision for the appointment of an executive secretary of the province, whose salary should be paid by the province.⁹ It also arranged for the appointment of a field secretary of social service and authorized the Commission upon Social Service to print and circulate the address made by Archdeacon Greig upon the unrest in England. A memorial was addressed to the General Convention asking for some modification of the rubric at the close of the Confirmation office. Three mass meetings were held at Emmanuel Church, upon religious education, social service and missions.

AMERICANIZATION

The following important report on Americanization was presented by Bishop Harding for the Committee on Various Races:

"The Committee on Various Races respectfully reports that in its humble judgment this province has done everything in its power to awaken the Church to our great responsibility to the aliens in our land and by constructive effort to give them the ideals of Christian citizenship. Since the meeting of our last General Convention, we have had an object lesson of the imperative need of the Americanization of foreigners, and we feel sure that it is the profound conviction of every member of this synod that democracy cannot be made safe for the world and will not long continue safe even in our own land, unless the Church fulfills its responsibilities and duties toward our alien races. In the lands from which they came, many of these people have been deprived of the advantages of education or of any training in citizenship and in our own land they have been shamefully neglected by the Church. Our province have steadily presented this need to the Church; but without much attention being paid to our appeal until 1916, when in response to a memorial from this province, the General Convention adopted a resolution recommending to the Board of Missions the establishment of a Department of Immigration. This was reported to the last meeting of our synod in 1917, and as the Department of Immigration has not been established by the Board of Missions, we again adopted a resolution requesting action.

IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS

Since that time nothing has been done to put the resolution into effect, although during the war we have passed through a crisis which has shown the fruits of our neglect. It is therefore with great reluctance and at the same time, with great earnestness that your committee feels constrained to offer the following resolutions:

RESOLVED:—That the Provincial Synod of Washington again memorialize the General Convention, calling its attention to the great needs of the ministrations of the Church to millions of people in our land who constitute a menace to the future of our nation unless we recognize our duty to them as brethren and share with them the blessings of our Christian civilization.

RESOLVED:—That the Provincial Synod of Washington requests the General Convention to take more explicit action than that taken in 1916 and to pass a definite resolution instructing the Board of Missions to establish at once a department for work among the alien races of our land in accordance with the recommendations adopted by the General Convention of 1916.

Americanization of the alien is being brought forcibly to our attention as an important part in the program of reconstruction, and the responsibility was especially stressed in a letter addressed to the chairman of this committee by Secretary Lane, as one especially binding upon the Christian Church. Your committee would therefore also submit the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, Popular attention has been directed to the need of Americanization of aliens, because of the social, moral and political dangers fostered by migratory and transient population, and,

WHEREAS, The National Government and the government of many states are asking general co-operation in this work of Americanization, and

WHEREAS, The difficulties to a work of Americanization, arising from segregation in masses, are not as a rule found in this province, thereby affording an almost unparalleled opportunity for moulding the ideals of the immigrant, and

WHEREAS, The type of immigrant recently arriving in this country from the near east, is accustomed to find inspiration to social and moral, as well as ecclesiastical stability in a church which he has been taught is closely related to the Episcopal Church, and

WHEREAS, It is impossible to quicken in the foreign born a recognition of the high value of American citizenship, by combining with the formal act of naturalization such religious and social observances as conditions warrant, and

WHEREAS, There exists a great opportunity for the laity to perform a high social duty, and, at the same time, enlarge their own ethnic social and moral horizon, by acts of fraternization with those whom we have been content to view as "strangers within our gates"

BE IT RESOLVED: That we commend to the clergy and laity of Churches which have an immigrant population the need of co-operation in the efforts put forth by the National and several state governments to make citizenship a sign of honorable progress in American life, and

BE IT RESOLVED: That, for the purpose of information and of mutual helpfulness, the clergy, and others interested, in the work of Americanization of the alien, report to the secretary of the Committee on Various Races, such work as they may have undertaken, and the opportunities for such work that are opening, and

BE IT RESOLVED: That, for the guidance of those desiring to assist in the work of Americanization, that the committee issue such informative and instructive literature as may be required."

A communication from the Synod of New England urging the establishment of a Department of Immigration was presented to the synod and referred to the committee by the Rev. Thomas J. Lacy and the Rev. Robert Keating Smith, who have attended the Synod as representing respectively the Province of New York and the Province of New England.

The following telegram was sent to the Convention of the Russian Orthodox Church meeting in Cleveland:

The Anglican and Eastern Association greets the convention of Russian Orthodox Church and expresses sympathy for the trials of Russian Church and people. We wish you God speed in your work in America, assuring you of the fraternal interest of the Episcopal Church and pledging co-operation to the fullest extent.

It was decided to hold the next meeting of the Synod at Norfolk, Virginia. Elections resulted as follows: Standing committee on missions, the Bishop of Virginia, the Rev. Messrs. David Howard, B. M. Spurr, and D. W. Curran, Majors John W. Reynolds, and W. R. Coyle and Mr. Stephen E. Cramer; commission on religious education, the Rev. G. Otis Meade, Dudley G. Roe, and Commodore C. T. Jewell; members of the general board of missions, the Bishop of Pennsylvania, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, and Oliver J. Sands; member of the board of religious education, the Rev. Dr. W. L. DeVries; lay member of the executive committee, Mr. John Stewart Bryan.

Chaplain Shows War Photographs

CAMP GRANT.—An exhibition of photographs of and by members of the 14th Infantry has attracted unusual interest at Camp Grant, Illinois, where that regiment is stationed. The 14th Infantry is one of the oldest regiments in the regular service and it has done duty all over the world. Its different tours were well illustrated by this exhibition which was arranged for that purpose by Chaplain Gabriel Farrell, formerly of Trinity Church, Boston. Views of the men in China, the Philippines, Hawaii, Panama, Mexico, Alaska and at various posts in the northwest were included in the exhibition.

Before members of this regiment and as part of its educational program Chaplain C. B. Ackley, formerly of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, is giving a course of historical lectures on "The Rise of Democracy." Chaplain Farrell is also giving a course on "The History of the Labor Problem."

NO LEADER WILL CONDUCT UNION LENTEN SERVICES

Praise and Silent Prayer Will Follow Unique Method in New York

Unique union lenten services are being held this year in Greater New York.

On the morning of Washington's birthday the pastors and rectors of parishes received the following letter:

TO THE CLERGY OF NEW YORK

Gentlemen:

As a committee appointed by various representative bodies in Communions which give allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as our Divine Master, we are suggesting a plan for union meetings in each section of the City of New York for the six weeks of Lent.

We suggest, first, that each Tuesday evening at 8, from March 11 to April 7, in each section of the city in a church which will be chosen by the ministers of the section, the people of the neighborhood meet for the singing of hymns and for silent prayer. By the help of leaflets (copies of this service may be obtained from Dr. C. L. Goodell, 289 Fourth avenue, New York, at the rate of two dollars a hundred) distributed in the pews on the night of the service, the people will easily follow the service without further direction, provided the person playing the organ for the hymns shall begin promptly at the time indicated.

It is suggested that the chancel or pulpit remain empty, that all may feel that the service is being led by the invisible Christ, in Whom is our unity, and Who will guide us to larger freedom and joy in the expression of it.

By this means the same hymns will be sung all over the city, and we shall all together be awaiting God's guidance concerning the same great needs and aspirations of our lives.

We enclose a list of Bible readings for Lent, which may be copied as widely as may be thought convenient, in parish papers or in church journals, or even in secular papers. It is hoped that in this way, too, we may be united in a common fellowship. We hope that each minister will point out to his congregation the advantage of this common effort to study together the Word of God.

At the Marble Collegiate Church, at Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, on March 17, at half-past two, there will be a joint service of representatives from many congregations to sing, to pray, and to listen to addresses by Dr. W. D. Mackenzie of Hartford, and by Bishop Luther B. Wilson of New York, that we may know the need of a common effort and may be quickened to find a way towards deeper unity.

During Holy Week Bishop Greer has asked the Christian people of New York to use the Cathedral of St. John the Divine as their own. At the afternoon service each day ministers of various Communions will preach. And the prayers which we have said in silence will find part of their answer, we trust, in the words which God shall give them to say to us.

Charles Lewis Slattery, chairman; H. G. Mendenhall, Wallace MacMullen, Milo H. Gates, Edgar Tilton, Jr., A. H. McKinney, Cornelius Woolfkin, William T. McElveen, I. H. Berg, Harold Pattison, C. L. Goodell, secretary.

The committee signing the letter have secured a "keyman" in each district, who either has gathered, or will gather, the clergy of that district for cooperation in the plan. It is hoped that shortly the churches where these "services of praise and silent prayer" are to be held will be announced.

The list of Bible readings from the words of Christ cover largely the Sermon on the Mount, the Parables, and, in Holy Week, the Farewell Words in St. John.

The service is so planned as to render all notices and directions unnecessary.

The service form is as follows, with the exception that the words of each hymn are printed in full:

Promptly at eight o'clock the congregation shall rise and sing: "Oh, for a closer walk with God."

During a silence, which shall continue until ten minutes after eight, the congregation (each member sitting or kneeling as may be more convenient) is urged to meditate or pray concerning the unity of all Christian people in the fellowship of the Church of Christ. We shall try to be quiet within our hearts, that God may speak to us, and show us a way.

At ten minutes after eight the congregation shall rise and sing: "The Church's one foundation."

Thereafter each member of the congregation is urged to ask God to show to him or to her his or her selfishness, hardness of heart, or other sin, and to discover wherein this sin has stood in the way of making Christ known and loved; whereupon let each one most sincerely ask God's forgiveness.

At twenty minutes after eight the congregation shall rise and sing: "My faith looks up to Thee."

Then the congregation, again keeping silence, are bidden to think upon the task which awaits each one of us in helping to make our nation a happy and righteous home for returning soldiers and for all others.

At half-past eight the congregation shall sing: "Blest be the tie that binds."

Then during the silence the congregation shall ask God's comfort for those whose beloved have died in the war or at home; that He may be revealed to them as their Father, caring for all His children, in this life and in the life to come.

Thereafter, at twenty minutes before nine, shall be sung: "Jesus, lover of my soul."

The hymn having been sung, the congregation is asked to give thanks, each in his own heart, silently, for all the mercies which God has shown to us as a people, for giving us brave men willing to die that the world might be free, for the noble women who bade them go, for little children, the consolation of all who love them, and for God Himself, that He has revealed Himself to us in our Saviour Jesus Christ.

At ten minutes before nine, the congregation, standing, shall sing: "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

Immediately after which the congregation, still standing, shall say together, the Lord's Prayer.

After a brief period of stillness, in which the people remain standing in their places, the congregation shall depart as quietly as possible.

Bishop Guerry Home from France

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.—Bishop Guerry has returned to his diocese after an absence of six months in Europe where the bishop was special preacher to the American troops. President Wilson was present when Bishop Guerry preached in Holy Trinity Church, Paris. The bishop was welcomed back to his diocese at a united service of all of the Episcopal Churches held in St. Paul's Church.

INTERVIEWS WITH PLATO, LINCOLN AND ROOSEVELT

Canadian Doctor Writes of Talks with Those in "Twentieth Plane"

By James A. Elliott

PORT HOPE, ONTARIO.—A ripple of interest has been aroused in Canada over certain spiritualistic revelations, published in a book by a Toronto doctor, entitled The Twentieth Plane. It purports to contain revelations from spirits that have reached a high state of advancement in the other world, and includes interviews with Plato, Matthew Arnold, Abraham Lincoln, Robert Ingersoll, and even Christ Himself. Associated with Dr. Watson, the author, is a professor of philosophy in Toronto University. The medium, or "instrument," as he is called, through whom these extraordinary interviews have been held is a young Jewish commercial traveller. The interested parties seemed very much excited over their revelations, but in spite of wide newspaper exploitation the general public has refused to take it seriously. The reputed spirits as usual complain of the difficulty of conveying their deeper thoughts to mortals, but many of the terrestrials feel that too low an estimate is entertained of their intellectual capacity. They also marvel that mediums of such manifest limitations should be selected to convey messages from the elect of another world.

An interview with Theodore Roosevelt—but a few days after his death—revealed that he had reached the twentieth plane almost overnight, and his fellow countrymen will be reassured to learn that he is still a militant American.

While a newspaper effort has been made to create a theological discussion, few have risen to the suggestion, and the ebb and flow of spiritualist speculation will alternate as of old.

BISHOP TUTTLE WRITES APPEAL TO THE CHILDREN

Calls His Headquarters "Camp Thankful" This Year

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The Presiding Bishop has sent a stirring message to the children of the Church, as follows:

Camp Thankful, St. Louis.

Dear Boys and Girls of All the Sunday Schools:

All Hail!

How do you do?

You are a year older. My, how you grow! How big you are!

We call our headquarters "Thankful" this year. You know why. Last year we were at war. Every boy was aching to be old enough to go into it. How splendidly our boys and young men gathered to the colors! They made us proud. This year Peace has come. The sad things of death and wounds are put away. Oughtn't we to write from Camp Thankful then? And with hearts most thankful to God?

But our missionary army keeps in the field, you are its young soldiers. And your Quartermaster's Department wants clothing and shoes. And your Commissary Department wants biscuits, bacon, beans and coffee. And $200,000 are wanted from you for these supplies. Please give it, dear fellow soldiers, next Lent, and go over the top with it, begs

Your General,

DANIEL S. TUTTLE.

NEARLY TWO MILLION MITE BOXES HAVE BEEN IN USE

Here's a Little Story About the Man Who Made Them

Everybody has heard of the mite box; everybody has heard of Mr. E. Walter Roberts; but everyone does not connect the two, says the current Spirit of Missions. For forty-two years Mr. Roberts has been one of the officers of the Board of Missions, retiring from active service on December 31 last. In all of these years Mr. Roberts has been an especial friend of the children and has been keenly interested in the work which they are doing for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. When the Lenten offering for missions was begun very soon the problem presented itself as to how best have it collected. It was necessary for the society to buy mite boxes and send them out to the children, so back in 1891 Mr. Roberts patented the "pyramid" mite box, which soon became known all over the Church and was a yearly fascination to the boy or girl who had to "blow up" his mite box. Later on it was thought wiser to use the "keystone" mite box, and still later the present shape, both of which have been patented by Mr. Roberts and the use extended to the society without profit to himself. In this way, while occupied with the exacting duties of the treasurer's office in the Church Missions House, for all of these years Mr. Roberts has had a very personal interest in the hundreds of thousands of mite boxes which have been used by succeeding generations of Sunday School children. Since he devised the "pyramid" box more than one million, nine hundred thousand mite boxes have been sent out to the children of the Church. In this same period the Lenten offering has grown from $42,000 to nearly $2,000,000.

MARQUIS OKUMA TELLS OF INTEREST IN ST. LUKE'S

Dr. Wood Finds Japanese Statesmen Loyal to Hospital

From aboard the S. S. Shinyo Maru, Mr. John W. Wood has written a description of his stay in Japan. Of his visit to St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, he says, in part:

If you could have seen what I saw one morning at the hospital dispensary about seven o'clock, you would never forget it. From far and near there came men and women and children in all sorts of physical trouble to find the relief which St. Luke's so generously dispenses to those in need. Soon after seven a crowd of one hundred or more had collected. When the dispensary doors were opened, they thronged into the waiting room. Here while waiting their turn to see the doctor, they were taught simple hymns and given some elementary Christian instruction. This goes on for a good part of the morning.

One evening the doctors and nurses at St. Luke's gave me a "Kangei" or welcome meeting. The sun parlor of the hospital was tastefully decorated in Japanese fashion. I was surprised and delighted to find that we had a staff of about twenty Japanese doctors and more than fifty nurses. They look like a most capable and efficient group. Six or seven doctors and about a dozen of the nurses have accompanied Dr. Teusler to Siberia.

During one of my days in Tokyo I had an interview with Marquis Okuma, who you will remember is often spoken of as the "Gladstone of Japan." I thanked him for what he and his associates had done in giving 100,000 yen for the new St. Luke's Hospital and asked whether I might have the privilege of conveying from him a message to the friends of St. Luke's in the United States. He replied that it would give him great pleasure to do this and proceeded at once to say that he had considered it an honor and a privilege to serve on the Japanese Council on behalf of St. Luke's and to assist Dr. Teusler in any way in his power. He expressed the wish that he and his associates might have been able to make a larger contribution to the hospital fund and assured me that what had been done expressed the cordial good will of himself and his associates. He said he was most anxious to see St. Luke's erected as soon as possible upon the new site and suitably equipped. He knew that it was doing excellent and needed work and was grateful for its existence. He asked that the friends of the hospital in the United States might be assured of his unfailing interest and good will.

A few days later, at a dinner given by one of my Japanese friends, I had the pleasure of a long conversation with Baron Shibusawa. I thanked him for what he had done. He asked me also to tell the friends of St. Luke's in the United States that it had been a great privilege to do anything he could to help on the work of Dr. Teusler, for whom he has real affection and in whom he has the highest confidence. A few days later still at luncheon, Baron Kaneko referred to the admirable work that had been done by the American Church along educational and medical lines and spoke feelingly of the fine service St. Luke's is rendering to the people of Japan.

You will see that St. Luke's is doing most important work in the present and that it seems to have a future of almost unlimited usefulness opening before it. Every one of us, who is privileged to see the vision of what may be, will want to stand behind Bishop McKim and Dr. Teusler in all their plans for the future development of the hospital.

The Rev. C. H. Tindell Dies

WILLIAMSPORT, PENNSYLVANIA. — The Rev. Charles Henry Tindell died suddenly as the result of a cerebral hemorrhage on the night of February 17. He had been an invalid for twenty years, fifteen of which were passed in a hospital at Waverley, Massachusetts, where he died. Mr. Tindell, who was born in New Brunswick, New Jersey, October 17, 1841, was graduated from the Harvard Divinity School in 1872, and after serving in the ministry of the Unitarian Society, was ordered deacon in the Church in 1881 and priest the following year by the Late Rt. Rev. Dr. Huntington, Bishop of Central New York, in which diocese most of his ministry was spent.

Mr. Tindell was for several years rector of St. Peter's-by-the-Sea, Narragansett Pier, Rhode Island, and of St. Paul's, Portland, Maine. He was buried in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge, Massachusetts, February 20, the Very Rev. George Hodges officiating. Beside his son, the Rev. Charles Noyes Tyndell, rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, he is survived by two brothers and two sisters.

Archdeacon Appointed

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—The vestry of St. John's Parish has called Chaplain Winfred H. Ziegler, U. S. A., as rector, and having received his discharge at Camp Custer he enters upon his new duties at once. Bishop Howden has appointed him Archdeacon of New Mexico.

MOTHERS OF SICK SOLDIERS CARED FOR IN NEW YORK

Seabury Hostess House the Scene of Appealing Work

The Seabury Society, which established the Cambridge Summer School, and whose record to date is the furnishing of volunteer lay readers for the founding of twenty-four churches in and near New York, has maintained for a year past a Seabury Hostess House, in Madison Square, New York, between Fourth and Madison avenues. Out of the work of the Society there is growing an Institute of Applied Christianity, a school to teach laymen to do church work and put scientific management into such work, and in order to get office at low rental and a hall for meetings, the one-time home in Madison Square was secured at nominal rental. The parlors were intended to serve as office and hall.

About a year ago the Red Cross, Woman's Auxiliaries in the Church, and the Women's Mission Board for the Methodist Church, appealed to the society for room and board at low cost for mothers of sick enlisted men coming to New York to be with sons. The upper part of the house was thereupon furnished, the Red Cross and some business men of Madison Square assisting, and since then mothers and other relatives of sick men in hospitals have been entertained to the number of more than 300, coming from many states. Only those of moderate means are received, and very low rates are charged, sometimes no rates at all.

MANY TOUCHING EXPERIENCES

The kitchen of the Hostess House has been used almost daily by mothers to prepare delicacies which sick men thought they could eat—because mother made them. In some weeks as many as three men have died in hospitals whose mothers or wives were staying at the house. The house has been and still is a Christian home, with telephone, guides and every hospitality comfort one can think of. In cases of deaths borrowed automobiles have been placed at the disposal of these mothers. Letters to the society, expressive of gratitude, have been received by the score. There have been wedding receptions, funeral parties, searches for lost boys, reunions of separated families—a wonderful work unlike almost any other in all New York.

A second work grew up, nobody knows quite how. Soldier and sailor mothers, staying at the house, their own sons sick or perhaps still in France, wanted to do something for sick men in the hospitals, already home from the front. Women in prominent New York churches were appealed to for money with which to buy meat, flour and fruits, and these soldier and sailor mothers have for months been preparing home dinners once a week, and inviting to eat them convalescent boys from Debarkation Hospital No. 3 for soldiers, and from two of the New York City hospitals for sailors. Twenty-five to thirty-five a week are thus entertained, and after dinner, in the parlors, there is dancing—by those able to dance, and games by those who are not able to. Young ladies from the churches come, and there are many forms of home entertainment.

Large numbers of men have been entertained from the Middle West, Iowa, Michigan, Illinois and Ohio, but boys from every state, Canada, Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand have been present.

INDUSTRIAL UNREST MEANS NEW LIFE FOR ENGLAND

Influence of Maurice and Kingsley
Now Felt, Says Archdeacon Greig

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—At the opening dinner of the Washington Provincial Synod given by the Church Club and Cathedral League in this city, the Archdeacon of Worcester, England, who is now visiting us, spoke of the industrial unrest in England and its deeper causes.

The speaker attributed the present state of things to two chief factors. First, the fact that the workers do not get a fair share or even a sufficient share of life's opportunities and privileges and, secondly, to the fact that they are now aware of this and that they have the power to improve their condition.

It was impossible not to sympathize with them in this conviction, and those who knew them best and knew their character and history must not only sympathize but feel bound to support them in every legitimate effort which they might make to achieve their object.

"The story of the wage-earning class in England is very little known and a sad story it is," said the speaker. "Up to about 1760, England was mainly an agricultural nation with few big towns and a vast majority of her people living in rural communities. This peasantry was among the most prosperous that the world has even seen and the foundation of that prosperity was two-fold. First the people had common rights, that is to say the right to feed a few cattle, sheep or geese on the common land and even in a great many places to plow and sow a certain area, so that they were compelled to grow enough to feed themselves and their stock and, secondly, they had all kinds of cottage industries. They wove the cloth and spun the linen and made the lace for the whole nation, and these two sources of income made them in part independent of the farmers for whom they worked and enabled them to command decent wages which they were compelled to supplement by their common rights and their industry.

A NEW MOVEMENT

"But about 1760, a movement began which in a very few years deprived them of their common rights for quite an adequate compensation, and they sank and sank until about the close of the Napoleonic wars, their condition was so deplorable that Acts of Parliament passed for their relief only aggravated the horror of their conditions. In the same period also there came the great industrial discoveries which began to cover England with factories, and the dispirited and broken-down laborers began to flock to the manufacturing centres. There they were ready to accept any sort of terms, hours, houses, wages, conditions of work which were offered them and no man cared for them. The current political economy accepted by every one, not only permitted, but encouraged as a law of nature and of God 'freedom'—freedom of contract, freedom to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market everything that man handled, labor included, and as things then were this freedom meant the ruthless exploitation of labor by capital.

"Having once established this condition of affairs every effort was made to make the process as absolute as possible and thereout sprang the marvellous extension of British trade, commerce and wealth, and that unexampled prosperity which mocked her life in the middle of the nineteenth century. It was wealth, freedom, privilege for the middle classes at the cost of the multitude below them. Those who want to read this tragic but most instructive story, should get Mr. and Mrs. Hammond's book, The Town Laborer. There they will see the historic basis of the present industrial conditions and the root causes of the present unrest.

OTHER FORCES AT WORK

"From the first there were other and better forces at work. The factory acts and truck acts, forced through Parliament in spite of the fierce opposition of Manchester politicians, like Cobden and Bright, were perpetually nibbling at the men's position. Trade Unions early began their beneficent work, and in the face of amazing opposition established their right to exist and protect the workers. There were always individual employers who remembered that they were Christians and refused to act on the sacred political economy which permitted unchristian iniquities, and this same political economy and all its works were constantly assailed on the spiritual side by such Christian leaders as Frederick Dennison Maurice and Charles Kingsley, who denounced it as contrary to God's Fatherhood and the Incarnation, while the poets, William Morris and Matthew Arnold, undermined its authority, denounced it as hideous and unhuman, and the last quarter of the nineteenth century saw very considerable improvements in the condition of the workers carried out. But the long leeway is still to be made up before conditions are tolerable and until a much higher level is reached every right thinking Christian must sympathize with the aspirations of the Labor Party and support its endeavors.

"The speech from the throne at the recent opening of Parliament marks an epoch and is probably the most kingly utterance that ever came from a throne. Its results ought to be far-reaching and go far towards settling the present unrest into a steady hope and confident expectation that the needed improvements will be carried out by the goodwill of everyone and without any revolution or discussion. And if this means, as it almost certainly does, that in the future or for a long time to come, the privileged classes in England will have to forgo a great deal, which in recent years they have enjoyed, that even that which may rightly be welcomed by all those who believe as well as profess a vital Christianity provided that it means that the conditions of life for the vast majority of English people will be found better and more wholesome for mind and body and soul than they have been for many generations."

G. F. S. Continues Definite Policy

The Girls' Friendly Society through its War Emergency Committee has issued a definite program for after-war work which will continue the magnificent work done by the society during the war.

It will continue its definite policy of: (1) sending field and resident secretaries to various parts of the country to arouse, organize, and train volunteers that they may give faithful and efficient service in work for girls. (2) Organizing work for girls in the neighborhood of demobilization camps and industrial centers, and using the influence in making permanent those relations which have been established through patriotic leagues, thus preserving in time of peace that unity of ideal and effort which was gained in time of war. (3) Establishing new lodges, cafeterias, and rest-rooms to meet post-war conditions.

WORK TO BE RESUMED ON THE NEW YORK CATHEDRAL

Citizens Will Be Appealed to Soon After Signing of Peace Treaty

According to a statement issued by the trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine work on the cathedral nave will be resumed in the near future. The statement follows:

The trustees of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine desire to state that in their judgment work upon the nave, which was suspended during the war, should be resumed in the near future, and brought to an early completion. In reaching this conclusion they have been moved by the following considerations:

The nave is needed for space. The cathedral has become in a peculiar sense the church of the people of New York. Its ordinary congregations tax its present seating capacity. At all special services this capacity is overtaxed, and on great occasions thousands are obliged to go away without having gained admittance. The city requires a religious edifice where people can gather in large numbers, to express in a corporate way their religious promptings, and to find the spiritual interpretation of great events. The completion of the nave will meet this need. Although of necessity its administration is under the control of a single religious body, its ministrations are not limited. According to its constitution, it is a house of prayer for all people; a great, free, democratic church which affords a meeting-place for all sorts and conditions of men.

The nave is needed for witness. New York is the chief city of the western world. It impresses the imagination at every turn by visible evidence of the power and splendor of material achievements in American life. Such a city should be dominated by a building which in its greatness, dignity and beauty bears witness to those spiritual forces without which material achievement is valueless because soulless.

Now is the time to build the nave. The country has emerged from a great war, fought to secure ideal ends. Gratitude for the ending of the war and the fulfillment of its hopes should find fitting public expression. The building of the nave will give the opportunity. It will become the shrine of a thousand memorials. It will be clothed with the spiritual associations born of this great hour. It will become the monument, to endure through ages, of the city's thankfulness and of the city's hopes.

For these reasons the trustees announce that soon after the signing of the terms of peace it is their purpose to appeal to the citizens of New York for interest, sympathy and aid in the building of the nave.

DAVID HUMMELL GREER,

HOWARD CHANDLER ROBBINS,
Dean of the Cathedral.

ROBERT G. HONE,
Secretary, Board of Trustees.

The Bible in Reconstruction

A large part of the after-war emergency budget of the American Bible Society will be used in extending its religious and educational activities in France, Belgium and Italy, where an unprecedented interest in Christian literature has been aroused through the visit of millions of Allied soldiers each carrying a testament as part of his outfit.

PLANS ARE COMPLETED FOR SUMMER TERMS IN THEOLOGY

War Students Will Find Good Faculty at Middletown

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT. — The authorities of our seminaries began some time ago, as announced in THE CHURCHMAN, preparations for a summer school in theology to meet the need of men in the National Service whose studies were interrupted by the war. The soldier-student is to find that there is opportunity offered for him to make up this summer two terms of his work.

Perhaps it would be more correct to call his enterprise summer "terms in theology," for it is the addition of two terms of approximately five weeks each to the theological course, to be counted by seminaries as equivalent to work done in the regular season.

The committee in charge believe that a competent student may be able to accomplish, during the summer, approximately the equivalent of an ordinary half-year's work. Thus, if the school can be repeated in the summer of 1920, such a student ought to be able to complete his full normal course of preparation for the ministry in a little more than two years instead of the usual three.

Provision is made both for those who have done some work in a divinity school, and also for candidates who have not yet begun their special studies.

FACULTIES WILL COOPERATE

This school is to be conducted in co-operation by the faculties of seminaries of the Church, and is under the direction of a committee made up of Dean Bartlett, of the Philadelphia Divinity School; Dean Fosbroke, of the General Theological Seminary; Dean Hodges, of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, and Dean Ladd, of Berkeley Divinity School, with whom the deans of the other schools are in active co-operation. While very little publicity has as yet been given to the enterprise, there are already thirty students enrolled, and as demobilization proceeds it is certain that this number will be largely increased.

The place chosen for the school is Berkeley Divinity School, which will provide adequate equipment, and to which the resources of Wesleyan University will furnish additional accommodation for a large number of students. The courses of instruction will be sufficient in number and character to provide for students in various stages in their preparation for the ministry; and will usually comprise at least one elementary and one advanced course in each department. There will be occasional lectures and addresses arranged independently of the formal courses. Middletown is a charming New England city in the heart of a delightful country, and there are many opportunities for outdoor life and recreation.

On the faculty are representatives of practically all of our seminaries this side of the Rockies. Those who are definitely engaged at present with their courses are: Old Testament, Dean Fosbroke, of the General Theological Seminary, and the Rev. J. A. Montgomery, D.D., of the Philadelphia Divinity School; Elementary Greek, the Rev. L. M. Robinson, D.D., of Philadelphia Divinity School; New Testament, the Rev. B. S. Easton, D.D., Western Theological Seminary; the Rev. W. H. P. Hatch, D.D., of the Cambridge Episcopal School, and the Rev. H. M.

Ramsey, B.D. Church History, the Rev. J. Cullen Ayer, jr., Ph.D., of Philadelphia, and the Rev. R. B. Pomeroy of the General Theological Seminary; Systematic Divinity, the Rev. E. S. Brown, D.D., of Cambridge; Apologetics, the Rev. Dickinson S. Miller, D.D., of the General Seminary; Homiletics, the Rev. W. P. Ladd of Berkeley, and Pastoral Care, Dean Bartlett of Philadelphia; Church Polity, the Rev. Percy Norwood of Berkeley.

Dr. Marshall at Union Seminary

A course of eight lectures will be given on the Morse Foundation by Henry Rutgers Marshall, L.H.D., D.S.C., at five o'clock on the afternoons of the dates named below at Union Theological Seminary, Broadway at 120th Street. Subject: "Mind and Conduct": A. The Correlation of Consciousness and Behavior, I. Monday, March 3, The Correspondence and its Limits; II. Wednesday, March 5, Instinctive and Adaptive Behavior and their Mental Correspondents; III. Wednesday, March 12, The Self. B. Some implications of the Correlation; IV. Friday, March 14, Creativeness and Ideals; V. Monday, March 17, Freedom and Responsibility; C. Guides to Conduct; VI. Wednesday, March 19; Pleasure and Pain; VII. Monday, March 24, Happiness; VIII. Notes.—The Rev. A. D. Ellis, for the past six and a half years rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Abilene, has accepted a call to St. Mark's Church, Beaumont, Diocese of Texas, and will take charge March 15.

The Ven. William Garner, archdeacon of the Plains, will on March 15 change his residence from Amarillo to Canyon, a town within his cure in which is located the West Texas Normal College and where a brick chapel was built about a year ago.

Mr. H. W. Galbraith, Senior Warden of St. Andrew's Church, Amarillo, last year successfully managed the United War Work Campaign in 22 counties of the Panhandle, and has now completed in the same territory the more difficult task of raising the quota for the American Committee for Relief in the near east.

LONG ISLAND

A Unique Gift Presented.—A most striking valentine gift was that presented to the Red Cross canteen workers of St. George's parish, Astoria, of which the Rev. H. L. Lonsdale is rector, as a token of appreciation, by the soldiers of the Chemical Warfare Service stationed there.

The gift was in the form of a shield, upon which was mounted a smaller central silver shield engraved as follows: "Presented to the members of the Red Cross Canteen of St. George's Parish by Company A and Company B, Chemical Warfare Service, Gas Defence Division, U. S. A., Astoria, Long Island, 1919."

Around the central shield were grouped smaller silver shields engraved with the names of the canteen workers who have done so much for the comfort of the soldiers, that they declare it "the next thing to being home." Miss Jane White Lonsdale, who is chairman, says the canteen will remain open, as long as the need for it exists.

Czecho-Slovak Night.—At a service held Sunday night, March 2, in the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, Dr. Lacy delivered an address on "America's Greeting to Czechoslovakia, the Latest Born of Republics." Representatives of Czechoslovak societies attended in a body, some in native costume and Bohemian National hymns were sung.

Special Lenten Preachers.—The list of preachers on Sunday evenings during Lent at St. Ann's, Brooklyn, will be the Very Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke, D. D., the Rev. Dr. Manning, the Very Rev. Howard Robbins, D. D., the Rev. Dr. Stuart L. Tyson and the Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates.

At the Church of the Incarnation among others at the Friday evening services will be heard Dr. W. C. Sturgis, Dr. Arthur R. Gray, Dr. N. H. B. Cassell, President of the College of Liberia, and the Rev. W. S. Baer, who preaches in Brooklyn for the first time since leaving to take charge of Trinity Church, Elizabeth, New Jersey.

MEXICO

Missions School Opened.—On February 17 a missions school was opened at Xochitenco, a village about twenty-five miles from Mexico City. The teacher who is to have charge of the school has been one of the pupils of the Hooker School for the last six years, and the minister who has the care of our people there is the Rev. Antonio Carrión, one of our oldest and most faithful clergymen.

Xochitenco occupies quite a unique position among our missions. It is situated on the once famous Lake Tezcoco and in olden times the chief industry of the inhabitants was fishing and the gathering of a fly peculiar to the lake region which, with its eggs, was made into cakes and sent to Europe for bird food. But the lake has long since been drained off and is now covered with a mineral salt used as we use bicarbonate of soda.

The people are very poor and have suffered during the last years from bands of bandits that have from time to time entered the place carrying off the horses, provisions, and any thing else they happened to fancy.

There has not been a school of any kind since 1913, and considering it is Mexico the most remarkable thing is that there is not a Roman Church in the entire neighborhood, and ours is the only evangelical Church that has weathered the storm of revolution and its inevitable results.

Conditions seem to have improved somewhat and it is with great hopes and some misgivings that we have sent one of our girls to take up the Church's work. She, however, has the true missionary spirit and is prepared to suffer some hardships. The people themselves are very enthusiastic over the prospect of once more having a school and have furnished our chapel, which with a curtain in front of the Sanctuary is to be used as the classroom, with a few desks, a blackboard and a map. The day school opened, the whole population was there to welcome the teacher, men, women and children, all dressed in their Sunday best, and the room was beautifully decorated in evergreens and quantities of calla lilies.

BOSTON

The Twenty Weeks and Lent.—A third message from the bishop to the diocese entitled "Consecration and Victory," was distributed throughout the diocese on Sunday, March 2. Bishop Lawrence has written the following introduction:

You and I, a hundred thousand of us, have been reading the same verses and offering the same prayers day after day. In my room during these two months, I have seemed almost to hear the sound of your voices, and I have certainly felt the sincerity, sympathy and power of your prayers. Wonderful, is it not, a hundred thousand of us reading and praying together?

Have you ever thought of this, however, which is far more wonderful? As the sun rises each day and swings around the world, millions on millions of men, women and children lift their voices in prayer and praise; the Lord's Prayer, the Psalms, the Holy Communion,—the same words for centuries. Many times greater than all the armies of the great war is this Army of Christ. Each of its faithful soldiers begins the day with reverent salute to God; each and all close the day with a word of gratitude to Him.

This great army is Christ's Church, the whole company of the baptized, those who have been mustered into His service. It is our Church. Myriads of the faithful have served before our day, a very noble company: myriads are serving now.

In these weeks may not you and I catch a fuller vision of Christ's Church: be proud of her, more loyal and worthy to serve her? These are weeks for deeper consecration.

Faithfully your Bishop,
William Lawrence.

Noontday Preachers at the Cathedral.—Among the lenten preachers at the cathedral, from outside the diocese, are the following: The Rev. F. W. Tompkins of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, March 10-14; the Rev. Milo H. Gates, Chapel of the Intercession, New York, March 17-21; the Rev. E. H. Van Etten, of Calvary Church, Pittsburg, March 25-28; the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York, March 31-April 4; Archdeacon Grieg of Worcester, England, April 7-11.

Community Services in Hyde Park.—The six Protestant Churches of Hyde Park have undertaken an experiment which has aroused much interest, both in the community and at large.

On Sunday evenings the congregations of all these churches meet for a joint service, which is arranged for and conducted by a committee consisting of the ministers of the churches. The series started on December first. Now that the period is more than half over, it can safely be said that the experiment has been successful.

The service each Sunday begins at seven o'clock, and lasts until a quarter past eight. A forty-minute service of worship is held first, the most prominent feature of which is the singing of hymns by the congregation. From four hundred to eight hundred people have been present each night and the congregational singing has been vigorous and inspiring.

The forty-minute service is followed by an address or sermon given sometimes by one of the six ministers, and sometimes by a speaker of note who comes as the guest of one of the local churches. Up to the present time each of the Hyde Park ministers has preached twice, and has also brought to the service one outside preacher. On February 16, the sermon was delivered by Dean Rousmaniere of Saint Paul's Cathedral, Boston.

PITTSBURGH

Rector's Farewell.—Sunday, February 23 marked the closing of the six years rectorship in Grace Church by the Rev. William Porkess. There were record gatherings at the services. The Rev. Milton S. Kanaga, minister-in-charge of St. Peter's Church, Uniontown, Pennsylvania, will be Grace Church's new rector.

Farewell Dinner.—A number of the clergy of Pittsburgh, on Tuesday evening, February 25, honored the Rev. Joseph Speers with a farewell dinner. Speeches were made, all emphasizing his remarkably efficient ministry as rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkensburg, one of the leading parishes of the diocese, covering a period of thirteen years. In the course of the evening a delegation of four vestrymen from Wilkensburg were the bearers, from the congregation, of a purse of one thousand dollars, as a gift to the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Speers.

Laymen's Missionary League Meets.—The anniversary service and annual meeting of the Laymen's Missionary League was held at St. Peter's Parish House, Pittsburgh, on Monday evening, February 17. There was a goodly attendance of members, and the Rev. Dr. Flint and the Rev. Mr. Meade, former chaplains of the league, were guests of the occasion. The meeting was in charge of the chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Wightman. The bishop sent his appointments of the Rev. Dr. Wightman as chaplain, and Mr. N. P. Hyndman as president. The league elected Mr. Edwin Logan, vice-president; Mr. J. Campbell Roberts, corresponding secretary, and Mr. Harvey H. Smith, treasurer.

Clerical Union.—The February meeting of the Clerical Union assumed a slightly different form from its usual one, consisting of a reception and luncheon at Calvary Parish House, with Bishop Page of Spokane as the guest of honor.

Conference.—On the invitation of the Pittsburgh branch of the Woman's Auxiliary a conference of the diocesan officers of the Auxiliary with the clergy of the diocese took place at the parish house of the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, on Wednesday, February 19, preceded by a luncheon served by the Women's Guild of the parish.

On Saturdays Mr. Kendrick will speak of "The Man of Nazareth:" (1) His Sympathy with Poverty, (2) His Loyalty to His Home, (3) His Patience with the Wayward, (4) His Courage in Reform, (5) His Help to the Aspiring, (6) His Share in Men's Suffering.

Melford Losee Brown, of the Church of the Ascension, Mt. Vernon, lectures to the children on Fridays at 5 p. m. Teachers' Class at St. James.—Dr. Boynton, of the General Theological Seminary, will conduct a teacher training class for the teachers in the Christian Nurture classes in St. James' Parish on Wednesday evenings in Lent beginning on Ash Wednesday night. The textbook to be used is Weigle's The Teacher.

Real Values in Guild Life.—The value of work in guilds and societies associated with parishes was presented in rather a strong light the other day by the Rev. Dr. George C. Houghton, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York. In speaking at the annual meeting of one of the guilds of his parish, Dr. Houghton said:

"It is most true that neither large amounts of money nor large numbers of workers are the most important essentials to the efficient operation of parish organizations. It is a prayer strengthened faith in God, and in the necessity and righteousness of the work. If that does not bring God's blessing and help, no amount of money and members will bring it, or make it possible to carry on such a work to the glory of God and the success of the guild.

"Often in the discouragement of a church society there is a feeling that there is lacking enough funds to carry on the work at fullest capacity, and that the society has not enough helpers to make it as powerful as it should be. This is not usually the weak point in small guilds. The weakness is more often in our lack of faith in the work God has given us to do. At such times we are unlike the man with the withered right hand (not both hands, but the more serviceable of the two), and this man when told by Christ to 'stretch it forth' did not explain that it was withered, but trusted, stretched it forth, and was healed."

Washington's Birthday Service.—On Sunday afternoon, February 23 there was a special Washington's Birthday service at St. James' Church in the Bronx, of which the Rev. DeWitt L. Pelton, Ph.D., is rector. The Hon. James A. Hamilton, Ph.D., formerly a member of the New York State senate and now commissioner of correction of the City of New York, delivered a brilliant and scholarly address on "Washington in the Light of Modern World Problems."

The choir rendered patriotic music.

Mr. Macon Leaves Staten Island.—The Rev. Clifton Macon who has had charge of Christ Church, New Brighton, Staten Island, has terminated his period of service in that parish and is beginning a three months' locum tenancy at the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, New Jersey. Mr. Macon, who for many years was rector of the principal church in Oakland, California, came east last year for family reasons. The rector of Christ Church, Staten Island, had just gone abroad as chaplain, and Mr. Macon has been in charge of that church for nearly a year. He has made himself much loved in the parish, and during his charge much good work has been done. Miss Dorothy Dickinson has been appointed director of religious education, and the Sunday School has been reorganized and greatly enlarged. Chaplain Brown, the rector of Christ Church, has cabled his people that he expects to return in a few weeks.

MARGARETTA MILLER.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

A Remarkable Canvass.—St. James' Church, Keene, the Rev. Howard M. Ingham in temporary charge, has just finished a successful every member canvass. For the first time in five years the parish can face the coming year without fear of an impending deficit. The pledges for expense have increased 250 per cent., those for missions nearly 300 per cent. It is a fine illustration of a parish doing completely what nearly everybody said it was impossible to do.

Two Gifts.—Two gifts have recently received a special benediction. A beautiful lecture Bible of the American revised version is the gift of Mrs. Horatio Colony and in memory of Mrs. Gertrude Wilson Littell, wife of the former rector. The new service flag bears three gold stars and thirty-nine blue stars, hung in place at a special memorial service. It is the gift of Mrs. H. B. Viall and her son William.

CHICAGO

Dr. Fleetwood Observes Anniversary.—The Rev. B. Frank Fleetwood, D.D., recently observed the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. Ordained deacon in May, 1867, he served for a year as assistant at St. James' Church, Chicago. He then received a call to Christ Church, Adrian, Michigan, and was ordained priest. From 1877 to 1889 he was rector of St. Mark's Church, Chicago. The church was enlarged twice, and plans made to erect a permanent edifice. Selected by the trustees, and urged by Mrs. J. S. Waterman, he accepted the rectorship of Waterman Hall in 1888. Soon after he was made dean of the northern deanery of the Diocese of Chicago. He resigned both positions in June of last year feeling it best to make way for a younger man. He and his wife are living in their own home adjoining the beautiful campus of Waterman Hall.

Social Service Commission Meets.—The Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Chicago held its February meeting at the Providence Day Nursery on Tuesday, February 18. The Rev. J. B. Haslam, secretary of the commission reported on a survey of the Wilson avenue district on the north side, with special reference to conditions about St. Simon's Church, where a social service committee is being formed. He reported further that he has been giving some of his time to work on the City Club's Committee on Labor, of which he is a member. The Rev. George Craig Stewart chairman of the commission is a member of the Fifth Liberty Loan Committee, and recently addressed the heads of fraternal organizations in the state of Illinois whose interest and support was enlisted for the Fifth Liberty Loan.

A Social Service Council of the diocese has been formed in connection with the commission. This council is made up of delegates from the various parishes and missions which have social service committees and meets with the commission each month at the close of the regular meeting of the commission.

Preparations for Lake Geneva Conference.—The committee in charge of the Episcopal delegation for the Lake Geneva Conference met here on February 20 to make plans for attending the conference, which will take place this summer late in July or early in August. Last year the Episcopal delegation to the conference numbered over forty. It is expected that with the co-operation of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the other organizations interested in the missionary work of the church there will be a larger and more representative delegation still this coming year. The Lake Geneva Conference is missionary in character, and the subject of study this summer will be "Immigration." This will be especially valuable for those who are interested in the work of our church schools, inasmuch as immigration is the subject to be set by the Board of Missions for study during the year 1919-1920. Information about the conference may be obtained from Miss Van Schaik, 5152 Hyde Park Boulevard, Chicago, who is secretary of the Episcopal delegation.

CHARLES L. STREET.

NEWARK

Ordained to Priesthood.—The Rev. Louis W. Pitt, a graduate of Berkeley Divinity School, was ordained a priest by the Rt. Rev. Edwin S. Lines on Sexagesima Sunday. The service was held in Christ Church, Newark, where Mr. Pitt has been in charge since July, succeeding the Rev. Howard W. Germand, now of Millburn. Canon Gilbert L. Pennock presented the candidate. The sermon was by Bishop Lines. Mr. Pitt will remain in charge of the parish, which is located on the East Side of the city. The church was established in 1849 by the Rev. Robert Lowell, brother of the poet, and himself a distinguished writer.

Over Eighty Present at Quiet Day Services.—On St. Matthias' Day, a quiet day, for devotion and conference, was held by the bishops in Trinity Cathedral, Newark, and attended by more than eighty of the clergy. In the morning, Bishop Stearly presented in a most helpful way the lessons from the prophecy of Jeremiah, and in the afternoon Bishop Lines spoke upon several important phases of the work of the clergy, emphasizing their pastoral work, the preaching of helpful sermons representing diligent study and a knowledge of the people, and also speaking at length of the great importance of the unification of the country's religious forces.

Two Ordinations Scheduled.—The morning service, March 2, in St. Barnabas's Church, Newark, was marked by the ordination, by Bishop Lines, of the Rev. Rowland K. Gimson of Newark, while on the same morning, in St. Mark's Church, West Orange, Bishop Stearly advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Peter Ritte Deckenbach of Westwood.

The Rev. B. P. Tyler Will Not Resume Morristown Rectorship.—The Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, who served as chaplain with the 325th Infantry, and who was recently invalidated home from France, is recovering from his wounds. He finds it impossible, however, to accede to the wishes of his old parishioners who desire him to resume the rectorship of the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, but upon his full recovery and discharge from the army he will enter again upon parish work.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

WASHINGTON

New Rector in Historic Parish.—The Bishop of Washington instituted the Rev. Joseph Fletcher into the rectorship of ancient and colonial Rock Creek Parish in the City and Diocese of Washington, on Septuagesima Sunday, in succession to the late Rev. Charles E. Buck. The bishop's voice having been affected by a cold, his sermon was read for him by Dean Bratenahl, and the curate, the Rev. Harry S. Cobe, assisted in the service. There was a very good congregation present, and Mr. Fletcher begins his rectorship under very auspicious circumstances. His long experience as rector of a similar parish near Baltimore, and his devoted pastoral labors, assisted by the experience of his rarely well equipped wife, put Mr. Fletcher in a position to render Rock Creek exceptional service. He has been rector of the adjoining Brookland Parish for several years, and his work in building up this new parish in one of Washington's thriving suburbs has been notable.

Sunday School Institute Convention.—The twenty-second annual convention of the Washington Sunday School Institute, postponed in October because of the influenza, was held at Epiphany Parish Hall February 19. The two chief speakers of the day were Bishop Stearly, of Newark, and the Venerable J. H. Greig, D.D., Archdeacon of Worcester. At the 11 a. m. public meeting Dr. Greig spoke on the spiritual and devotional aspects of the teacher's task, and incident thereto described the retreats for children developed in England during the war, and showed the interest they had aroused and the surprising results achieved. He gave instances of spiritual capacities in children far beyond the usual conception, and pleaded for a larger and wider appeal to this side of childhood. Bishop Stearly gave a vivid account of the impressions of the war on Americans, and the expression they had given to these, and especially our ready self-oblation for the causes at issue, and pleaded strongly for the application of the forces thus liberated to the problems of Church and State in this era of reconstruction, advocating the specific direction of Sunday School and other religious education agencies towards this end.

RHODE ISLAND

Lent at All Saints, Providence.—A special feature of Lent at All Saints' Church, Providence, will be a series of union services on the first six Thursday evenings with the Union Congregational Church and the Beneficent Congregational Church, two services being held in each church. The preachers at the services in All Saints' will be the Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester of Emmanuel Church, Boston, and the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, of Trinity Church, Boston.

Community Service.—A community service in the interest of the League of Nations was held on Sunday evening, February 23, in St. Luke's Church, East Greenwich, the Rev. J. M. Hunter, rector. Addresses strongly advocating the league were made by the Rev. Francis B. Blakeslee, D.D., president of East Greenwich Academy, and by the Hon. Rathbone Gardner, of Providence. More than four hundred persons were present, and a resolution endorsing the league was unanimously adopted.

Lent at St. John's, Providence.—At St. John's Church, Providence, the addresses at the lenten services on Tuesday evenings will be made by prominent clergymen of the city as follows: the Rev. Arthur H. Bradford, D.D., of the Central Congregational Church; the Rev. A. B. Cohoe, D.D., of the First Baptist Church; the Rev. R. D. Hollington, of the Mathewson Street Methodist Church, the Rev. Asbury Krom, D.D., of the Beneficent Congregational Church, the Rev. C. M. Gallup, D.D., of the Central Baptist Church, and the Rev. J. E. McConnell, D.D., of the Union Congregational Church.

Work Among Italians.—The Italian Presbyterian Mission in Providence is maintaining a service on Sunday afternoons in the parish house of St. James' Church. It is conducted in Italian by the Rev. Mr. Pampana. It is preceded by a Sunday School conducted in English by the Rev. John A. Gardner, rector of St. James'.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

Annual Auxiliary Meeting.—The Rhode Island branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting recently, when a large congregation assembled in All Saints' Memorial Church, Providence, and heard inspiring addresses from Miss Helen A.

Sittell, of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China; Mrs. Walter Hughson, of Morganton, North Carolina, and the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D.D., of the American Church Institute for Negroes. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Howard Hoppin, president; Mrs. Walter Griffith, recording secretary; Mrs. John H. Cady, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Frank W. Emerson, educational secretary; Miss Harriet C. Edmonds, treasurer; Miss Lavinia Waterhouse, assistant treasurer.

In response to a suggestion for turning the interest of efficient war workers into church channels, several parishes have agreed to gather together those women who worked diligently in the Red Cross on surgical dressings, once or twice a week through Lent, and make hospital supplies for some of the church hospitals in our mission field. It is hoped that a good supply of these necessities may be secured and new friends made for our missions.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Bishop McCormick Busy.—Bishop McCormick is kept busy. His activities for the past month have taken him to New York and Philadelphia, to Cincinnati, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Pontiac, Albion, Chicago, and again to New York. Most of these trips were taken in connection with the War Commission business and gave opportunity for many addresses.

The thirteenth anniversary of Bishop McCormick's consecration, February 14, was observed quietly. In the morning he celebrated the Holy Communion in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral and entertained the clergy at breakfast, and in the evening he was guest of honor at a dinner given him by the Bishops' League.

It is regretted in the diocese that he is shortly to return for further service in France for the War Commission.

Junior Plan at Grace, Holland.—The Rev. William N. Wyckoff is successfully applying suggestions received from the G. B. R. E. for the work of Juniors in the five fields of Christian service. The very youngest children are taught to apply the lessons learned in the school in deeds of love and usefulness during the week. About 95 per cent of the scholars are engaged in some form of weekday extension of the missionary teaching.

New Rector at Dowagiac.—The Rev. James Horton Bishop, for the past three years curate of St. Luke's, Kalamazoo, has been called to St. Paul's, Dowagiac, to succeed the Rev. John Wilkins who is now in the U. S. service as chaplain.

St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral.—Dean Potter was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the men's club of the parish at which the bishop and city clergy and some of the neighboring clergy were present. As a special compliment to the new dean the choir came in during the evening and sang several numbers.

Father McVeigh Harrison, O. H. C., held a quiet day at the pro-cathedral, February 28, and lectured in the evening at Grace Parish House.

Church Attendance Campaign at St. Joseph.—A church attendance campaign was held at St. Paul's Church, St. Joseph, during Epiphany season with an average attendance of 20 per cent higher than for the preceding six months and 28 per cent higher than in any previous January.

This parish has furnished more than its proportionate share of Red Cross officers, leaders and workers in the city.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Parish Income Doubled—Remarkable financial improvement followed a recent visit of Provincial Secretary Harding to Zion Church, Greene. Dr. Harding spent four days in the parish prior to the canvass for pledges.

On Monday evening a parish dinner was arranged for all the adults of the parish, both men and women. The speakers were Bishop Fiske, Dr. Harding, and the Rev. Wilson E. Tanner.

On the Sunday following the vestry and eight other men of the parish canvassed the village for pledges, and subsequently covered the outlying country, communicating with absentees by mail.

Last year the receipts from pew rents and pledges amounted to $1,486. For the current year $2,800 has been pledged. The rector's salary is to be increased $200 a year, and the meeting of the apportionment in full is assured. The Rev. Asahel A. Bresee is rector.

Results from Pyke Campaign—The campaign to arouse the interest of laymen and organize them for definite work in the diocese has ended. Eight group meetings were held, at all of which Mr. G. Frank Shelby, general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was present, and at most of which Bishop Fiske and Mr. Pyke also spoke. Sixty-three parishes and missions were represented by 446 men. Thirty parishes have already reported the organization of parochial groups and settled upon their work.

Record Confirmation Classes—At All Saints', Johnson City, Bishop Fiske last week confirmed nineteen adults, all of them men, besides six for the associated mission at Endicott, this being the second class within a year, a class of fourteen having been presented last April. This mission is only two years old. The Rev. T. Raymond Jones is the rector.

St. Mark's Church, Clark Mills, of which the Rev. W. J. Willson is rector, also has had two confirmation classes in less than a year. Last May the class numbered sixteen. On February 23, Bishop Fiske confirmed twenty-five adults, the total of forty-one being the largest number confirmed in any mission visited by the bishop coadjutor the past year.

Men's Club to Act on Chaplain's Appeal—The Rev. Charles H. L. Ford, chaplain in the Anti-Aircraft Battalion, Coast Artillery Corps, who served with his unit on various sectors along the line in France, addressed the congregation of Christ Church, Binghamton, Sunday, February 23, the men's club of the parish attending in a body. He described his experiences in France and concluded with an appeal that steps be taken at once to ensure the future of the men returning from abroad. The men's club will appoint a committee which will endeavor to see that each of the returning men is given the opportunity to step into his old position. Christ Church has fifty stars on its service flag, and more than thirty of the men are still on active duty overseas in the fighting units of the 27th Division.

WEST VIRGINIA

Kanawha Convocation—One of most interesting and constructive meetings of the Kanawha Convocation met at Christ Church, Bluefield, February 4-6. This was the eightieth session of the convocation which includes twenty-one counties of the state. At the opening service a very able sermon was delivered by the Rev. S. R. Tyler, Huntington. The Rev. I. de L.

Canadian Church News

Compulsory Education in Quebec—In the Province of Quebec there is a strong agitation for free education and compulsory school attendance. The Protestant section of the province has long desired this regulation and a sporadic demand on the part of French-Canadian laymen has been condensed into almost a provincial movement. Petitions to the Council of Education have been widely signed, but the movement has not met with the approval of Cardinal Begin of Quebec who is the head of the Roman Catholic Church in the Dominion. A strong effort is being put forth to convince him of the wisdom and necessity of this step. It is pointed out that while statistics seem to indicate that the attendance of children of school age is higher in Quebec than in any other province in the country the method of compilation is misleading and fictitious. The more progressive laity realize that the French-Canadians are losing opportunities for advancement through the lack of proper education and foresee a decline of influence in the affairs of Canada as a consequence. There is no sign whatever of an ecclesiastical revolt but quiet pressure of a persistent character is applied to the Church to bring about a change. Just why the Church should resist is not very plain; many of the most brilliant leaders in public life and literary achievements of Canada have been educated in French-Canadian schools and colleges, but the general provision and method of education leaves much to be desired. Inasmuch as the Protestant citizens of the province constitute only about one-eighth of the population it is manifest that they can exercise but a small influence in such a movement. As a matter of fact over zeal on the part of Protestants would prejudice the whole case. Nevertheless there is a growing determination that the children of Quebec must have a fair chance to take their place in the national life of their country.

Canada Watching U. S. A. in Peace Conference—Canadians are watching with keen interest the progress of the Peace Conference, and particularly the development of the mandatory rule of conquered territory. It is generally felt that it is extremely important that the United States should take its share of the burden of European, Asiatic or African control that must be divided among the Allies. These responsibilities are not regarded as prizes of war, or gifts of high value to the nations concerned but sources of anxiety and opportunities to contribute to the world's welfare. In these days of ready communication, propinquity is not essential to guardianship, and in any case Africa or Mesopotamia is as near Washington as the Philippines. But chiefly is it desirable that America should take its place by the side of other guardian nations because it will develop a comradeship and sympathy for those nations in sharing their difficulties and meeting their dangers. It is one thing to stand afar off and watch with critical eye the efforts of others to solve their problems. It is quite a different matter to be engaged in the solution of similar problems. If the two great English-speaking nations are to stand by one another, leading the world into a fuller appreciation of the liberty they prize, they must be fellow workers, and not worker and censor. The American precedents that have been created in this war prepare the ground for still another precedent that is full of hope for the predominance of what is best in British and American leadership rather than a "general average" of the nations of the world.

LEXINGTON.

Brayshaw having left the convocation, the Rev. H. Jukes was elected secretary-treasurer. Mr. J. F. Clark, of the Board of Missions, gave a very convincing address on the missionary work of the Church. The convocation adjourned to meet in September with Grace Church, Ravenswood, the Rev. G. H. Cook, rector.

Representation at Province of Washington—The following delegates represented the diocese at the annual synod of the Province of Washington held at Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Maryland, February 25. Clerical, the Rev. Messrs. Boogher, Strider, Spurr, and Ware. Lay, Messrs. R. L. Boyd, J. L. Fish, W. G. Hubbard, W. G. Peterkin. The Woman's Auxiliary was represented by Miss Brady, diocesan secretary, Miss Peterkin, custodian of united offering, and Mrs. A. B. Mitchell.

SPOKANE

Every Member Canvass—An every member canvass is being undertaken at Spokane by All Saints' Cathedral, St. Matthew's, St. James', St. Peter's, St. David's, St. Thomas', and St. John's churches. Letters and booklets have been sent out to all concerned, and facts and figures given in such a way as to strike the attention of the reader and cause him to think and act. All Saints' is planning for a new cathedral, and it is certainly an urgent necessity. Three missions are hoping to have in due time parish halls. These are St. James', St. David's and St. Matthew's.

Layman's Council—This is a committee consisting of two representatives from each parish and mission in Spokane who meet around the lunch-table every Monday morning and discuss ways and means of serving the churches and advancing her interests. W. D. Vincent, a prominent banker of Spokane, presides. Interesting talks are given by invited clergy and laymen, and the discussion which follows has proved interesting and profitable. The council has visited each of the churches in turn, and are planning to help in every way possible the weaker missions of the city.

Organ Debt Lifted—Under the able leadership of the rector of St. Paul's Church, Walla Walla, the Rev. B. E. Warren, the heavy organ debt has been met in full. A Young Women's Guild, and a Junior Auxiliary have been recently formed.

Board of Missions Report—The report for the close of 1918 has just reached the district, and it is interesting to notice that nineteen parishes or missions have met, and in some cases exceeded, their apportionment.

All Saints' Cathedral—The parish dinner this year also consisted in a glad welcome home to the popular dean, the Very Rev. W. C. Hicks, D.D., who has been absent engaged in war work in France. An earnest effort is being made to wipe out all parish debts and to create a fund for the erection of the new cathedral.

W. A. ARCHIBALD SHIPWAY.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Normal Study Class—Miss Tillotson held a study class for leaders of lenten classes in Rochester on February 18 and 19. There were four sessions devoted to Bishop Burleson's text book, "Our Church and Our Country." About fifty took the course, meeting in Mrs. Kingman Robins' library, the members of the class all lunching together between the morning and afternoon sessions each day. Several women attended from other parts of the diocese, including two from Buffalo.

Girls' Friendly Society Pageant—In accordance with the request from Central Council, Buffalo made a great effort to give a presentation of the pageant "Columbia and Her Daughters," intended to show some of the many ways in which the G. F. S. has been able to serve our country, to stimulate interest in coming work and to raise money for the Church War Commission Fund. Fourteen branches in Buffalo were represented and the result was most gratifying—lovely tableaux, good singing, and above all, the keenest interest and pleasure in the accomplishment. No admission fee was charged but the sale of G. F. S. postal cards, home-made candy, ice cream and other refreshments, with the collection, brought over one hundred dollars for Buffalo's contribution.

Buffalo Inter-Church Union—At the annual meeting of the Women's Interchurch Union held in Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church on February 21 we had a good representation of churchwomen—over fifty at the luncheon and eight parishes represented. Mrs. W. Bowen Moore, district secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, was elected the first vice-president. The chief speaker was Mrs. Waid of New York, who gave two admirable addresses, one on the value of mission study and the other on "Dependable Power."

During the first week in Lent the Inter-church Union is arranging to have Mrs. W. H. Farmer of Montclair give a course of lectures in Buffalo on "Reconstruction through World Friendship." The evening lectures will be given in Trinity Parish House and the morning ones in the Twentieth Century Club.

Both Rochester and Buffalo seem to be moving forward in greater fellowship with those of other communions, and this must be to the strengthening of all Christian work and the hastening of the Kingdom.

KENTUCKY

Noon-Day Lenten Services—The annual noonday lenten services held by the Church in Louisville for the past fourteen years, will be conducted again this year at Macauley's Theatre starting March 6, the day after Ash-Wednesday. As in the past they will be held only five days a week, and will last only from 12:05 to 12:30.

Bishop Woodcock will conduct the first two services. From March 10-14, Bishop Johnston of Colorado, who will also conduct a mission at Christ Church Cathedral the same week, will be the daily preacher. The Louisville clergy will preach during the third week and from March 24-27 Father James O. S. Huntington will be the speaker. For the two last weeks preceding Holy Week the Rev. Edmund Duckworth, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, St. Louis, and the Rev. Harold L. Bowen of Peoria, Illinois, will be in charge.

An intensive publicity campaign is planned for the meetings and by judicious use of Church literature much is expected in the way of permanent results.

Washington Service—All of Louisville's patriotic organizations including the Colonial Dames and Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution attended a special service commemorating the birth of George Washington, Sunday afternoon February 23, in Christ Church Cathedral. Special music by a choir of fifty voices was provided. Addresses were made by Dean R. L. McCready and Dean Emeritus Charles E. Craik of the cathedral.

SPRINGFIELD

Bringing Social Vision to a Parish—The visit to Springfield of the Rev. Holmes Whitmore, rector of St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, as one of the speakers at the public Roosevelt Memorial service, was the occasion of an interesting series of services and conferences at Christ Church, the Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector. It was an emphasis upon the reconstruction problems as they must affect the Church as she faces the new day and order that is upon us.

Beginning with the Sunday morning service Mr. Whitmore preached on "The Challenge of After-War Problems to the Church." In the afternoon he spoke on "Roosevelt—Man and Citizen" at the public Memorial Service in the state arsenal. In the evening at Christ Church he continued his reconstruction theme—"Open Our Eyes" as a further analysis of the ecclesiastical and social problems that must be faced today.

On Monday morning Mr. Whitmore appeared before the Springfield Ministerial Association and presented the Milwaukee plan of a group of churches organized for community service. In the afternoon he held a conference with parents and teachers on religious education. In the evening the missionary and devotional appeal was emphasized in the service and an address on "Prayer—What It Is and Does."

Tuesday was set apart for the women of the parish, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion and a series of addresses on "The Social Message of the Prophets," especially Amos, Isaiah and Jeremiah. A noonday luncheon was served and the afternoon meeting was addressed by Dr. George T. Palmer of the Illinois State Board of Health, and Mr. Whitmore on the health propaganda of the Government, and with the aid of the moving picture machine the official Government film for women, "The End of the Road," was interpreted by the speakers to the evident enthusiastic appreciation of all present. The evening was set apart for the men and Mr. Whitmore spoke of his observations and experiences of "Ten Weeks in a Training Camp" and Dr. Palmer presented the Government appeal to men, illustrated by the moving picture film—"Fit to Fight." This co-operation of the Church received most favorable comment and response.

On Wednesday evening a Fellowship Dinner of the parish was given in honor of Mr. Whitmore and responses from members of the congregation expressed appreciation of his visit and message. Mr. Whitmore spoke on "Seeing Jerusalem"—a frank, straightforward analysis of the responsibility that must be faced by the laity of the Church not only in an intelligent understanding of the problems of social reconstruction but the more intimate application of those principles to the necessary democratization of the Church in order that the emphasis upon ecclesiastical life and tradition may not be narrowed by a one-sided emphasis that would isolate the Church from the great questions of human life and relationship that are fundamentally of the Gospel.

Altogether it was a most interesting venture to stir up the life of the parish to a realization of the imperative co-operation of the Church with our civic and national life.

WESTERN COLORADO

Bishop Touret Recuperating—Bishop Touret is spending a few weeks of convalescence in Colorado Springs. He is making good progress toward recovery. The operation sustained by him, notices of which have been made, is that known as gastroenterostomy. The appendix was removed at the same time. The latter operation was incidental. Dr. W. J. Mayo performed the work at Rochester, Minnesota.

The bishop speaks enthusiastically about Dr. Mayo as "one of the really great men of our time." Bishop Touret and the whole Church are fortunate in having had his case under the personal care of such a man.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. Benjamin C. DeCamp, who since his ordination to the priesthood at Grand Junction last October has been working there with the rector, the Rev. Philip A. Easley, has accepted a call to the curacy of Bethesda Church, Saratoga Springs, New York, under the Rev. I. G. Rouillard. Messrs. DeCamp and Rouillard were classmates at the Cambridge seminary. The best wishes of the district go with him in his new field.

During his assistantship at Grand Junction Mr. DeCamp has had an important part in the publication of The District Evangel, as business manager.

The Work at Gunnison Open—After a period of closure of some four months and ever since he came from the Diocese of Newark, the Rev. P. C. Bissell reports that he is permitted to enter his widespread field. The center of his work and place of residence is Gunnison where is established one of the state normal schools. Mr. Bissell's field is an important one for the Church and his coming to reside here augurs well for the Church's future in his section of the district.

WYOMING

Ordination—On February 8, in Grace Church, New York, John Samuel Gillespie was ordained to the diaconate, and the Rev. Charles Glenn Baird advanced to the priesthood, by Bishop Thomas. Mr. Gillespie was presented by the Rev. John W. Walker, vicar of Holy Comforter Memorial Chapel, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and the Rev. Mr. Baird by the Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D.D., rector of Grace Church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Huston, rector of St. Mark's, Cheyenne, Wyoming. Mr. Gillespie is a senior in the Philadelphia Divinity School, and upon the completion of his course will take up his work in Wyoming. Mr. Baird, having graduated from the Philadelphia Divinity School at Midyears, has accepted a position as curate at Grace Church, New York.

MISSOURI

Churchmen Interested in League—The Mid-Continent section of the National Congress for a League of Nations met in St. Louis, February 25 and 26. The sessions were opened with an invocation by Bishop Tuttle and Bishop Coadjutor Johnson was an appointed member of the men's reception committee. The chairman of the Mid-Continent Convention was H. J. Pettengill, the president of the Men's Club of St. Peter's Parish.

Sister Miriam at Work Again—Sister Miriam, who is largely responsible for the building up of the new mission of the Prince of Peace in North St. Louis, and who lives and visits among the homes of the poor and hunts out little children and brings them to the Sunday School and trains them for confirmation, has suffered a temporary breakdown through too much hard work. She has been for a time in St. Luke's Hospital, but is at her work again. Bishop Johnston has appointed Miss Emma A. Luther, an efficient lay helper to assist Sister Miriam in her work. Miss Luther is a communicant of Trinity Church, St. James, Missouri.

Noon-Day Lenten Services—The noon-day lenten services which have been held many years in a downtown theatre under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, will be held this year in Christ Church Cathedral. It is thought by some that the atmosphere of a church building will be an added attraction and will also make the services more spiritually helpful. The services are to be from 12:05 to 12:30. A special feature is to be made this year of the music. The speakers thus far signed up are: March 5-17, Bishop Tuttle; 10-14, Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio; 17-21, the Rev. Dr. William O. Waters, Grace Church, Chicago; 24-28, the Very Rev. Dr. H. P. A. Abbott, dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio; March 31, April, the Very Rev. Frederick Edwards, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Michigan; April 14-18, the Rev. William P. Ladd, dean of Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Connecticut. HARRINGTON ROGERS.

BALTIMORE

Death of Mr. Murray—The Rev. G. Mosley Murray died at his home in Baltimore Sunday, February 16, his death being caused by a complication of diseases after an illness of several months. Mr. Murray was for eight years rector of St. Bartholomew's Church but resigned last October when it became evident that his usefulness was at an end. He was born in London in 1853 and served in the ministry for thirty-five years. He leaves a widow, two daughters, and six sons, three of whom are in our armies in France.

Dr. Niver Is Honored—The Rev. Dr. Edwin B. Niver was honored last week by a farewell dinner upon the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship of Christ Church. His resignation will go into effect March 1 and he will devote his energies entirely to the chaplaincy of the Marine Corps at Quantico, Virginia, in which he holds the rank of Major. A large gathering of his parishoners was in attendance and addresses were made by Bishop Murray, Joseph Packard, John Glenn, Jr., and Lieutenant Edward A. Platt of the Marine Corps at Quantico. Music was furnished by the "Devil Dog Quartette" from Quantico.

A Musical Service—On Thursday night of last week the Maryland Chapter of the American Guild of Organists rendered a musical service at Grace and St. Peter's Church, with a combined choir of ninety singers drawn from St. Paul's, St. Luke's and Grace churches. The service was conducted by Mr. Alfred R. Willard, organist of St. Paul's Church and dean of the chapter, Mr. John Denues, organist of Grace Church, presiding at the organ and Mr. Cawthorne Carter, organist of St. Luke's, giving a preliminary organ recital.

Dinner at St. Andrew's—The men of St. Andrew's Church will hold their annual dinner February 27. Speeches will be made by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birkhead, the Rev. Douglas Hoof, a former vicar, and the Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett, the present vicar. WYLLYS REDE.

LOUISIANA

Church Rebuilt—The Church of the Good Shepherd, Lake Charles, which was almost destroyed by the hurricane of August 6 last year, is now in the process of being rebuilt and will probably be completed in the next few months.

Inter-Church Movement Started—Nearly three hundred ministers and laymen, representing the Protestant Churches of New Orleans and the country sections of Louisiana and Mississippi, recently met in the First Methodist Church and started in this part of the South what is known as the Interchurch World Movement. Mr. Fred B. Smith, of New York, who came to New Orleans for the above purpose, said in an address, that the object of the movement was to present a unified program of Christian service and to unite the Protestant Churches of North America and their allied interests in the performance of their common task, thus making available the values of spiritual power which come from unity and co-ordinated, concentrated Christian effort, and meeting the unique opportunities of the new era. Unanimous approval was expressed by all delegates in favor of the movement.

Following an address by the Rev. Walter B. Capers, rector-in-charge of Trinity Church, New Orleans, in which he strongly sanctioned all principles of the movement, he proposed a motion to appoint a committee for Louisiana, which will direct the interchurch work of the state. This committee was appointed by Mr. Orloff Lake, who presided at the meeting and who is an active member of Trinity Church. Among those who will serve are the Rev. Capers and Mr. H. G. W. Fry, an active member of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans.

GEORGIA

Church Club Meets—The Episcopal Church Club of Savannah held its annual meeting on February 21 in St. John's Hall, Mr. J. R. Anderson presiding. Among the guests were the bishop of the diocese, Bishop Osborne, Bishop Seilor of the Roman diocese of Georgia and the Rev. Neal Anderson of the Independent Presbyterian Church.

Bishop Reese made an earnest speech showing the claims of the University of the South upon the citizens and especially the churchmen of the southern states. He also urged that some of the laymen present should accompany him to Chattanooga to the great meeting in behalf of the university at which he was to be an appointed speaker on the "Mobilization of the Church."

The feature of the evening was an address by Colonel Gordon who held the audience spellbound for over an hour while he described his experiences in French cities and on the battlefield in his work as an officer of the Red Cross.

Sunday School Meeting Held—The annual united missionary service of the Sunday Schools of the city churches, postponed from Epiphany-tide on account of the "Flu," was held on the afternoon of Quinquagesima. Bishop Osborne spoke on mission work in Liberia and South Africa.

Lenten Speakers—Among the speakers at the noonday services in Lent are the Rev. D. C. Wright of Louisville, the Rev. R. F. Gibson of Macon, the Rev. H. D. Phillips of the University of the South, the bishop giving the addresses in Holy Week. Bishop Osborne preaches at St. Paul's Church, Savannah on all the Sunday mornings.

Home to Move—The trustees of the Episcopal Orphans' Home have decided to move the home into the country; the present building which is no longer suitable is offered for sale and a committee are seeking an eligible site in the neighborhood of the city. E. W. OSBORNE.

ATLANTA

Establishes "Y" Branch—The Rev. F. Ruge, S. T. B., missionary at Dahlonga in the Mountains of north Georgia, has established a well-equipped Y. M. C. A. tent for the Reserve Officers Marine Corps of the North Georgia Agricultural College, which is a branch of the State University of Georgia where Mr. Ruge also occupies the chair of modern languages.

SACRAMENTO

A Bishop's Challenge to Christians—In Sacramento the bishop called together the parish workers of the society on February 12 to urge the immediate resumption of parish activities, interrupted by the epidemic and to prepare for Lent. He said, "Never was the individual Christian of so much importance as to-day. Show your colors. Stand clearly on the side of your Lord. We have vital problems to face, a world to Christianize, yet many of Christ's army are invalids. Why are we spiritually feeble? Because of the neglect of the laws of spiritual health. The life of God must flow abundantly in the Church before we can impart it to the community. Prayer, Bible reading, public worship, Holy Communion and bearing of the self-denying cross of Christ are the agencies to be employed." Mr. Fred I. Foster of San Francisco, a layman representing the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, related personal experiences in army and navy camps illustrating the value of faith, prayer and personal service.

Parish Meeting a Great Success—The parish meeting of St. John's Church, Maryville was a great success, over 200 being seated at the tables, February 11, when the rector, the Rev. Mark Rifenbark, rose after dinner to conduct the business. Vestry reports indicated a good balance in the treasury. A budget was presented calling for $2700 for current expenses, being $300 more than last year, and unanimously adopted, all the short talks from Church people being full of optimism. It was also resolved to complete payments for the new organ and proceed at once to erect a parish house. Addresses were made by Mr. Fred I. Foster, Brotherhood worker in the army and navy camps, and by the Rt. Rev. Wm. Hall Moreland, bishop of the diocese, the latter thanking the congregation and vestry for cheerfully submitting to the drafting of their rector by him for several months duty as civilian chaplain at Mare Island Navy Yard.

EAST CAROLINA

Chaplain of Old Hickory Division—Chaplain J. M. Robeson, senior chaplain of the Thirtieth Division (Old Hickory), recently visited his former parish, St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, North Carolina. While here he delivered an address at a patriotic service, which was greatly enjoyed by a large and enthusiastic congregation, who had come to welcome the former rector and to hear the chaplain tell of the life of the North Carolina boys in France. The Church was decorated with the flags of the Allies. Captain Robeson when he first entered the service was chaplain of the regiment of the Old North Carolinian Guards composed of men from Goldsboro and this vicinity. At this time he was rector of St. Stephen's Church. Shortly after arriving overseas Captain Robeson was made senior chaplain of the now famous Thirtieth Division. He was with his division when the Hindenburg line was broken and was wounded from a mine explosion less than a month before the signing of the armistice. Chaplain Robeson is now visiting his family at Farmville, Virginia.

New Rector at Work—On Septuagesima Sunday the Rev. C. H. Bascom entered upon his duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, Greenville, North Carolina. Mr. Bascom has been serving this parish for the last few months as locum tenens.

What a Tea Room Has Done—The cosy Tea Room under the management of the Woman's Guild of Trinity Church, Columbus, Georgia, has done a most excellent work for years, but especially during the last nine months. In April, they promised $100 a month, $50 to be given to the Red Cross and the rest to the Church War Commission; up to January, 1919, $900 had been so contributed. During last summer, in addition to this, they paid off the mortgage on the rectory. The increase of business has rendered it advisable to move to larger quarters. A beautiful idea of Miss A. L. Grimes, also of Trinity Parish, and which has been beautifully carried out, was the converting of the Sunday School room into a recreation room for the soldiers and sailors at Camp Benning. It has been open daily since January 5 from 6 to 10 p. m., and on Saturdays and Sundays from 12 to 10 p. m. Church people welcome the men. Each night, light refreshments are served and a luncheon is served after service on Sunday. The men gave Miss Grimes the D. O. S., by naming her "The Little Hostess" and when she became ill changed the title to "The Little Sick Hostess," making inquiries daily for her, and with some beautiful flowers, she received this letter:

E. S. TAYLOR.

Camp Benning, Columbus, Georgia.

January 17, 1919.

To the Little Sick Hostess of Trinity Episcopal Church,
Miss Annie Lou Grimes.

From Enlisted Men of Tank Corps, Detachment, U. S. A., Camp Benning, Columbus, Georgia.

Enlisted men of the tank corps, who have enjoyed the hospitality of Trinity Episcopal Church, request Miss Grimes' permission to express their regret that Miss Grimes is ill, and the hope that she will soon recover.

Trinity Church, through the hostess-in-chief and assisting hostess of its Soldiers and Sailors Recreation Room, has generously provided for us—men from distant quarters of the country.

English Church News

Peace Bells at Westminster—Zeppelins are no longer feared, so our valuable historic stained windows are being brought out of their places of safety and restored to our churches. At Westminster Abbey the work of restoration is proceeding, and the hope is that the abbey may be its old self when the peace celebrations are due. There has been a good deal of talk as to why the abbey bells have not been more heard. They sounded for a short time on armistice day, but it seemed that it would be hopeless to expect an adequate peal. They have to be entirely rehung; it is impossible at present to peal the larger ones. Two benefactors have generously offered to bear the cost, and two bells are to be added, bringing up the peal to eight. This is good news, for the dean and chapter have no money to undertake such work. Canon Papillon, a great authority on ringing, has been taking the chapter to task for neglecting their bells so long. But the dean (Bishop Ryle) while "accepting with proper resignation the kindly castigation" of his friend Canon Papillon, points out that the abbey architect considered the pealing dangerous to the fabric of the tower, so that they were only rung for a short time at King George's coronation. And the fact is, that the abbey authorities are suffering from poverty. They have been compelled to postpone the renovation of the bells, as well as other matters equally urgent.

Archbishop and the Central Fund—The Archbishop of Canterbury has his answer to those who deprecate the formation of a central fund for the Church of England. He admits that he himself would much prefer the dependence on the efforts of individual diocese to meet the new problems of the day, but he is quite certain that a central fund will alone meet the necessities, of the case. What is chiefly in his mind is the immediate problem of how to train that large body of men from the army who have offered themselves for ordination. But there are other demands arising out of the new education act, the pressing poverty of the clergy, and a pension scheme permitting the retirement of the aged and incapacitated. The new training college is to have an even more curious location. It might seem unprecedented that English clergy should be trained in a military camp in France, but the archbishop's announcement of the future location will almost raise a smile. The Church has taken over a disused prison at Knutsford, in Cheshire. The prison will accommodate about 700 men at a time. It will not be really a theological college, but still a kind of "test school" staffed by well qualified lay schoolmasters and chaplains. A candidate will be given twelve months to see whether he can pass muster in Greek, science, history and litera-

Miss Grimes' personal interest, as chairman of the Hostess Committee, in our coming to Columbus, the cordiality proffered us and the cheer dispensed, make us deeply indebted to Miss Grimes and to Trinity Church.

May we not, under these conditions, express to Miss Grimes personally and publicly, our gratitude to the ladies of Trinity Church and to the rector?

Please accept the accompanying token of our appreciation of the hospitality we have enjoyed.

Cordially, Tankers All.

ture. Those who qualify will pass on to the university, and will be afterwards prepared for holy orders. The archbishop estimates that this work alone will call for £100,000 per annum, and it was obviously hopeless to expect the dioceses to undertake it.

The Tomb of Bishop Andrewes—Southwark Cathedral has the honor of being the resting place of the body of that great saint, Bishop Lancelot Andrewes. It is not recorded why his body was laid there, rather than in his own cathedral of Winchester. He died in 1626, in London, and was buried in a little chapel which used to stand east of the present Lady Chapel of Southwark. But in 1830 this chapel had to be removed, owing to the widening of the approach to London Bridge. His tomb was then placed at the back of the altar-screen of the cathedral itself. It was not a very suitable position, and the cathedral authorities have long wanted to clear the space, and give the good bishop a new chapel on the south side of the sanctuary. Arrangements were made for the opening of the tomb. Within it was found a lead coffin bearing the letters "L. A.," and also a bottle containing a document written by William Drewett, sexton in 1830, stating that the coffin appeared in as good preservation then as if it had been placed but a few years. It was found to be in equally good condition today, and was moved to its new position without being opened. The Bishop of Kingston conducted the service, members of the chapter being also present. The order followed was the same as that annually used on the anniversary of Bishop Andrewes' death. The Bishop of Kingston recalled the sermon which the Bishop of Rochester of that day, Dr. John Buckridge, preached at the funeral, and quoted some of its quaint language.

Reconstruction of the C. E. T. S.—Prebendary Wynne Wilson has raised quite a storm by his proposal that the C. E. T. S. should widen its basis, and concern itself with general social service, including temperance. Of course the more fanatical members are very angry with him. But there are others who could not be so described who view the proposal with misgiving. For one thing, there is already the Christian Social Union doing the general work. And there is an obvious fear that temperance may become a minor item in the program. It did not occupy much space in the "Archbishops' Committee's Report on Christianity and Industrial Problems." Moreover it is contended that as national efficiency has been made the chief ground for the prohibition movement in America, we may be compelled as a nation to take similar action. The Rev. W. H. Norman voices a possibly widespread fear when he says that under Preb. Wilson's scheme "the temperance question would be snowed under, ignored, and, if possible, wiped out." And the new secretary of the C. E. T. S. contends that it is not practical politics to allow temperance work to be swallowed up in some indefinite scheme of social reform.

No doubt some "reconstruction" of the C. E. T. S. is called for. It is today a rather feeble shadow of its former self. But there were giants in those days; today the chief temperance advocates seem to have gravitated to the "unsectarian" societies. There may be something in the suggestion that the C. E. T. S. should unchurch itself, and amalgamate with the others.

Bishop's Decoration—The decoration of an officer of the French Legion of Honor was given Bishop Darlington on February 3. The ceremony took place in the hall of the house of representatives in the state capitol. The honor was conferred on behalf of the French Government by Edward deBilly, French High Commissioner, at Washington, D. C. Addresses were made by Governor Sproul, Lieut. Governor Eidleman, and Representative Spangler, speaker of the house of representatives. The bishop replied at length.

Bishop Darlington preached the sermon at the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Farthing in the cathedral, Montreal, Canada, on the evening of February 11. He was attended by the Rev. Lewis Nichols, rector of St. Paul's, Lock Haven, as his chaplain.

New Archdeacon—At the recent meeting of the archdeaconry of Williamsport the Rev. A. M. Judd, rector of All Saints', Williamsport, was elected archdeacon of the Williamsport archdeaconry. The archdeacons now in the diocese are: the Rev. William Dorwart of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg, rector of the Church of theativity, Newport; the Rev. F. T. Eastment, of the Archdeaconry of Altoona, rector of St. Paul's, Philipsburg; the Rev. W. Torkington, of the Northern Archdeaconry, rector of St. Paul's, Wellsboro, and Mr. Judd.

TENNESSEE

A Diocesan Loss—The Rev. James C. Fitchener died at Troy, Alabama, January 2. His body was brought to Nashville, Tennessee, and was buried from the Church of the Advent on St. Paul's Day. Mr. Fitchener was ordained priest on St. Thomas's Day, 1917, being then in charge of Holy Cross Church, Mount Pleasant. His priestly ministrations were few. He was overtaken by an incurable illness soon after his ordination, and was the first clergyman in the American Church ordained subsequent to March 1, 1917 to be placed on the disability list of the Church Pension Fund.

Roosevelt Memorial Services—The Church in the Diocese of Tennessee entered into the spirit of President Wilson's desire that Sunday, February 9, be observed as a memorial of the life and patriotic services of Theodore Roosevelt. The chief service of this character was held in St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis (the only one held by any religious body in that city), and in addition to the memorial sermon by Bishop Gailor, a long-time personal friend of the ex-President, an address was made by Gen. Luke Wright, who was Secretary of War in Roosevelt's cabinet.

Rector on Way Home—The Rev. Vythe L. Kinsolving has terminated his engagement as locum tenens in St. Paul's church, Chattanooga, and the Rev. Dr. Roaring Clark, rector, is expected to return in a few days from England, where he has been engaged in work for the Red cross.

Soldiers' Dinner—A Welcome Home dinner was tendered to the soldiers of St. Paul's Parish, Chattanooga, returned from overseas, at the parish house, on Monday February 17. Bishop Gailor was present and made an address, and several of the soldiers spoke. One of them, speaking for the soldiers generally of the A. E. F., declared that one abiding effect of their participation in the war had been to in-

Dr. Patton Enthuses the Campaign—

There is nothing so important before the whole diocese at this time as the Every Member Campaign. No meeting is held without prayer for, and explanation of, the campaign. The mails are bringing information and exhortation, plans and programs are being perfected and published. It is evident that all agree with Dr. Patton that this is the most important undertaking that the church in Pennsylvania has ever known.

There is a stimulus in the thought that this venture, here, is being watched by other cities about to undertake the matter; even that the whole church throughout the nation may soon be at it all at once.

But quite aside from being watched, all seem to see in it the stimulus needed for vitalizing each parish into an active undertaking of its whole task. The calling of every member into corporate life and service of the whole body. There is a growing sense of the importance of the campaign. Meetings are not mechanical—they are living and growing things. In a day when the church is under fire, it seems to be catching fire, and to see again its vision of world service.

At a meeting of churchmen on Washington's Birthday at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Dr. Patton made the men see the meaning of the whole thing. And again at St. Peter's Church in Germantown, the crowded parish house was an inspiration to the men and women; they questioned and were convinced.

At both these meetings, the Rev. Gilbert Pember set forth the thorough plans of the executive committee: he made most clear the careful thought, the prayerful preparation, the leaders have given. Dr. Patton quite as clearly, gave the reason for the mechanical, in the spiritual goal.

It only remains for those who have seen and heard to go out and tell and show others. The conspiracy of silence among church people is in danger; this campaign is a deliberate plot to let loose a secret—the Gospel, which was once considered Good News. It is going to make religion a subject of conversation once more.

Churchmen's Conference—Bishop Garland presided at the conference and dinner of churchmen held at Holy Apostle's Church on the afternoon and evening of Washington's Birthday. Many laymen and clergymen met with the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who assembled at that time.

In the afternoon the speakers were Chaplain McFetridge, and Mr. A. H. Vautier. They both told of their experience and their impressions of serving the men abroad. Their addresses will do much toward affording an understanding and a welcome of those who are coming back.

The evening was given over to the Every Member Campaign.

Archdeacon Greig—The Archdeacon of Worcester, the Rev. Dr. Greig has been heard here by various groups. On Sunday, March 2, he preached to the students of the University of Pennsylvania at St. Mary's Church in West Philadelphia. On Monday he was the preacher, to prepare the clergy for Lent, at a special service for that purpose, at the new diocesan church of St. Mary. On Tuesday afternoon, he spoke to the women of the church at a mass meeting to be held in Wither- spoon Hall.

The Decrease of Sunday School Scholars

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The department of parochial education of the General Board of Religious Education has sent to the clergy a communication signed by the Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph.D., director, announcing a decrease in scholars in the Sunday Schools of the Episcopal Church in this country during the years 1917 and 1918 of 54,489. May I, through the valued columns of THE CHURCHMAN, say a word in reply to the invitation contained in this message for suggestions concerning this serious loss? The decrease has been continuing for more than the last two years. It has been practically concurrent with the movement to introduce the methods of the day school into the church school and to put them on the same plane of efficiency. That the retrograde movement in membership should be coincident with the progressive movement in system is not accidental. The situation in many parts of the country is this: There is a large non-church-going or indifferent population among which Sunday School attendance on the part of the boys and girls is voluntary. The average child is not enthusiastic to go to school when he can have a holiday, and in degree as the church school with its grades and increased requirements and examinations resembles his day school he is disinclined to go. I can instance examples where membership of schools has fallen off over half within a year after the entrance of the modern method.

Now, on the one hand, I believe there is no doubt as to the superiority of the graded school with its progressive curriculum over the old fashioned school as a vehicle of thorough religious education for the scholar who faithfully follows it. The Christian Nurture scheme of instruction, great as are its demands on both teacher and scholar, is the best yet presented to the Church. But on the other hand something is to be said for the Sunday School as it was. It was the best home missionary agency of the parish. Through it numbers were brought to Baptism and Confirmation and parents came in led by interested and ardent children. Personality on the part of the teacher rather than system was the motive power. Much was usually to be desired in the amount of religious knowledge acquired but scholars at least knew the Catechism, the church year, something of the Bible and Prayer Book and gained a love of the Church, and were generally better for the influence. Although the modern school usually recuperates in numbers to some extent when the first strain of the change from the old to the new is over in all probability it will never be the large school it once was, of course, allowing as always for the exception to every rule.

The alternative before the Department of Parochial Education lies between the desirability of church school which will give thorough instruction, as far as may be, to the children of church people who send them and others not in large numbers who are well disposed and church schools lower in technical efficiency but of stronger popular appeal in which many of the multitude of now shepherdless children may be drawn in at least to touch the hem of the garment of Him who is longing to take even the least learned up in His arms and bless them. Let us be careful not to keep them from Him. When it is a matter of bringing children to Christ numbers are not to be spoken of with disparagement. Fifty-four thousand is a great loss. The church school problem is a difficult one. This is not an attempt to solve but to suggest it. The war has taught us that the prime factor in any organization is morale and spirit and that there is a danger of making of perfect mechanism a fetich that cannot save.

A Bishop's Responsibility

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Bishop Hall says of clergy he has had in his diocese, "I would not, could not, recommend for work elsewhere men who had tried out here and distinctly proved unfit."

If there is nothing against the man whereby he could be deposed, ought not something be done for him?

The poor in the slums are somehow cared for, but the unfortunate clergyman with his family can be turned out to starve.

It would almost seem as though after a bishop has received a man into his diocese, he should feel some responsibility for him. Often the parish is more at fault than the man.

The great-hearted Phillips Brooks always wanted to help even when he was under no obligation.

A man called one day asking for church work in Massachusetts. The man was from the West, without refinement and entirely unsuitable for that diocese. The bishop had just received $75 for officiating at a wedding. He gave that to the man, as he told him that he had no work for him.

The Draft of the League

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Permit me to express my dissent from the tone of your editorial in the issue of February 22 under the caption, "The Draft of the League."

While you do not discuss the terms of the proposed covenants, you express opposition to them upon the general ground that the plan amounts to "a European alliance which America is now bidden to join," and proceed to point out some of the risks incurred in joining it. There may be some risk in such action, though most of those which I have seen suggested appear to me imaginary, and all of them together seem less dangerous than those involved in our gradual withdrawal from all participation in the decisions that must result from the recent struggle.

Your space would scarcely allow me to present any discussion of the proposed articles of agreement. Possibly I may be permitted to note in a few words some advantages which are presented in it. Membership may be world-wide, the limitations being principally that the countries shall be "fully self-governing," and shall be admitted by vote of those already members.

The executive council, which is the actively directing body, though not the supreme authority, is composed of the representatives of nine nations, five of these named and the others yet to be designated. Probably most of us who have given any study to the articles have our ideas as to the proper completion of this body. Thus in this council and in the body of delegates when the league is formed in accordance with the proposed terms, we have an organization, accepted by the members, whose definite business it is by agreement of all to keep its hand upon the pulse of the nations, and when at any point or for any reason the beat is too rapid, to seek to apply a remedy. I do not find it difficult to see these results from the formation of the league:

- 1.—Publicity. Bringing treaties and disputes into the open, where they lose much of their significance.
- 2.—Counsel. The advice of friendly powers towards the solution of difficulties.
- 3.—Deliberation. In action tending to avoid the hasty entrance into conflict.
- 4.—Force. Social, economic, financial, and in extreme cases, physical, of such character and power as to induce hesitation. It may be that these are the dreams of a dreamer, who has returned to our shores with the story of his vision. But do we need to be reminded that it was a great dreamer who once caught the vision of "a new heaven and a new earth"? And may not this dream help to make part of his vision real?

Are Church Leaders Anti-Wilson?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

A perusal of your edition of February 22 leads me to ask a question I have frequently wished to ask during the past four years, namely, why are the high functionaries and officials of the Protestant Episcopal Church so bitter and virulent against their President?

It is not merely an article here or there, in this or that church magazine, but seemingly an inherent mental disposition most closely appended to the priesthood. Our church people do not seem so badly infected with it. It can not be denied. For instance, the very apparent sneer at "the makers of millennium" on page 239 of the issue above mentioned. A person not knowing Mr. Herron is of course no judge of your main argument, but we all know that Christ chose Judas as one of his twelve apostles and no stigma was ever imputed to him therefor.

While your editorial on the League of Nations may be strictly in good faith, yet it seems in direct contradiction of the best thought and intellect of all the continents—whether caused by the prejudice above referred to is only for the writer himself to say.

It does not seem too much to say that probably not since the time of Christ has so great a power for reform in this world been made the object of such sneers and attacks by the leaders of the Church as has our President. The people follow after him—that was the cry then as now—while the Jewish senate and the pontiffs plotted in secret against him. Maybe I am wrong about this, and that is just why I ask the question, "Why is the Church against the President?" And I might add—Who is going to be the loser by such opposition? I have read your paper for about 30 years. My grandfather was a priest of the Church, and so are two of my brothers. I am of the opinion that they feel about this the way that I do.

JOHN J. WILSON.

(THE CHURCHMAN has no politics. If, however, our correspondent will consult the files of THE CHURCHMAN he will find that we have quoted with enthusiastic approval more of Mr. Wilson's public utterances than those of any other living statesman. This does not mean that we like the President's method of leadership. On the contrary, we believe it to be thoroughly undemocratic. He is constantly imperilling his own fine purposes by his magisterial mood and pride of opinion. If the League of Nations fails, it will, we think, be largely because he has ignored the principle of "the consent of the governed."—EDITOR.)

The Clergy Club

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

May I be permitted briefly to describe in your paper an institution of whose existence many of your readers may be unaware? I refer to the Clergy Club of New York and the neighborhood which has its convenient and attractive rooms at 200 Fifth avenue, corner of Twenty-third street. This club is composed of clergymen and to a limited extent of laymen from every denomination; and at a time like this, when we are thinking less than ever before of non-essentials, and more than ever of Christian unity, an institution of this kind makes a very strong appeal.

The rooms of the club are delightful; one finds there the periodicals of the day and a library. There are opportunities given once a month to meet such distinguished visitors as Sir Herbert Tree, the Metropolitan of Athens, the Archbishop of York, Bishop Gore of Oxford, a scholarly parsee of India.

From time to time social luncheons are given and at intervals essays are read by club members. The dues, $10 a year, are strictly in proportion to the average clerical purse.

So far as we know it is the only club of the kind in the United States and so it is quite fitting that New York City should be its habitat. It has now a membership of nearly 500. That its influence may be enlarged, it is hoped to raise the membership to at least 700. There are many who have little or no time to enjoy the privileges of the club, who, nevertheless, gladly contribute the yearly dues, that a unique institution whose aim is to promote not the union of churches but the unity of the Church may not perish from the earth.

From a Senior Chaplain

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Standing on the banks of the Rhine, I look back over the tedious months of preparation, of bloody fighting, and now of impatient waiting for the return to the homeland. I am amazed at the constant evidence through it all of religious resilience. There is no stained glass window effect. It is khaki colored, uncouthly expressed but constant in its witness of the inner life of the American soldier in France.

Six months as senior chaplain of a base section gives one some knowledge of the tedium of the work in the service of supplies. Three months—and those during the Argonne fighting—as senior chaplain of the First Division tells its own story of life with men under constant fire. Four months as senior chaplain of an army corps which is part of the army of occupation gives another angle of the vision. And prior to the entrance of America into the war, six months' service with the French affords an opportunity for comparison. Generalizations are often not worth the paper they are written on. But out of my experience I venture this.

If a simplicity which is elemental, a trust which is childlike, albeit it loves to deck itself in clothes which it calls "chance" or "luck" or the like of that, a reverence

The Test Life

IT is interesting to have the work of two writers before you at the same time, revealing two approaches to kindred subjects with fresh and informing conclusions. It was Renan who truly said that "all ages will proclaim that among the sons of men there is none born greater than Jesus." This is not as trite as it would appear especially as our Blessed Lord's life and teaching are examined again and again. He is standard. He is "man's best Man, love's best Love, a perfect life in perfect labor writ," as Sidney Lanier wrote in The Crystal. Thus we account for two more portrayals of Jesus and of the controlling motive of His ministry.

Jesus—Our Standard (by Herman Harrell Horne, Ph.D. The Abingdon Press, 1918, $1.25) is a study of the Divine Master in all His humanism and realism, a concrete embodiment in personal form of the five ideals of complete practical living. For individuals and society, He is the standard of all that is best physically, of all that is beautiful, of that which is emotional, of all truth and of relationship to God. His is the standard that furnishes a plan in the inspiration of which we set out in the morning and correct ourselves in the evening. Dr. Horne's contribution to the vast literature on this subject is in emphasizing of the test to which we may put Jesus' life, even by modern efficiency tests, and the finding it complete. He wrote the book, quite apparently, for a special group of readers (and hearers) if we look beneath the dedication, viz.: to the "Boys' work secretaries of the Y. M. C. A." What he writes for them is going to be stimulating, though there is a serious loss it would appear to the picture of the "standard life" if only the "Son of Man," the meaning of His life, the philosophy of His appearing, is nothing more than a "process of growth of mankind Godward."

The attractiveness of an "idea" is again testified to by another effort to restate the essence of Christianity as centering in the notion of "the kingdom of God," the vision of all the ages and the burden of Jesus' teaching and life. Mr. Fordyce Hubbard Argo (in Jesus' Idea, Richard G. Badger, $1.50) has made an effort to systematically and in a popular fashion draw a pen picture of the "real Jesus" through His idea of what the Kingdom is and was to be. Mr. Argo gathers abundant evidence from modern scholarship, Biblical criticism, comparative religion, historical investigation, to show that individuals and society must test the reality of the Kingdom and cure the ills of the day by Jesus' Idea. Nothing short of this will suffice. Originally the subject matter of extemporaneous addresses and sermons, the material, of which there is a great plenty, should be of use to those who wish to speak upon so vital a topic. It is quite non-technical and therein of more value to many. It is gratifying to find a rector of a parish conserving the fruits of much study for his fellow clergy. But why use such fine type!

The Apostles' Creed

THE APOSTLES' CREED IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY. By Ferdinand S. Schenck, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Preaching and Sociology in the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, New Jersey. Fleming H. Revell Company. New York. 1918. $1.25.

The writer of this book attempts to relate the doctrinal contents of the creed to modern scientific thought. His method may be illustrated by the fact that a satisfactory reconciliation is found by the discovery that the word "day" in the first chapter of Genesis is intended to mean "a vast period." Thus scientific "intolerance has given place to adoration." The book has in it a good deal that is of religious and homiletical value, but hardly gives satisfactory answers to the scientific and critical problems of the twentieth century.

ADDRESSES AND SERMONS TO STUDENTS. By David M. Steele. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. 1918. $1.25.

The audience that applauded the prayer at the political meeting would applaud the messages of this book, for they are out of the ordinary. In fact so much so that we feel at times startled by the courage, the originality, the paradoxical criticisms and surprises at meeting old truths in new form. The rector of St. Luke's and the Epiphany, in the City of Brotherly Love, has unusual art in being himself even when heard through the printed page. His humor is both pleasing and provoking. His direct address is commanding. His messages are much more than sanctified common sense, they insist on a practical idealism that is held in such sure vision that the truth has no fears, but can even take a human delight shining here and there and without respect of institutions or traditions exposing them to the world in a way that makes it improbable that he will be re-elected to positions of influence. The audiences that heard these sermons and addresses are themselves as interesting as to the truths the preacher brings. This accounts a great deal for their style and for the contact that the messages establish, for Dr. Steele has adapted his audience to his theme rather than suited his theme to the audience.

An Outstanding Book

JEWISH THEOLOGY. By Dr. K. Kohler, President Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, Ohio. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. $2.50.

"The wise have no rest neither in this world nor in the next for they go from strength to strength (until) they appear before God in Zion." Judaism is conscious of itself and its mission and its theology is not static; while it aims at the salvation of humanity in history and claims no finality, it holds to idealism and points the way to the highest obtainable. Dr. Kohler is a progressive reformed Jew of international reputation as a scholarly spokesman for Judaism. His book is the first complete work on Jewish theology to appear in English and will be an invaluable work for both Jew and Gentile: to the Jew because it is written with love and loyalty impressive in its consciousness of the meaning of Judaism and stirring in its idealism; to the Gentile because it is scholarly and systematic and follows the historic method and, as it asks for liberality, it also offers liberality.

The four permanent elements of Judaism, says Dr. Kohler, are Judaism's message concerning the One and Holy God, the one undivided humanity, to a world united Messianic goal, a message entrusted by divine revelation to the Jewish people.

When the reader considers the great need of mutual understanding among peoples of different religious faiths who are working together for the salvation of democracy and who find their mutual inspiration in our One God and the common ethics of our faiths, he can overlook Dr. Kohler's references to "The sacrificial cult" and not miss the author's real objective even when he uses the term "The Nazarene." We should read with better grace as Christians Dr. Kohler's explanation of the Gospels and the Hellenic-Pauline origins of Christianity and his tribute to Mohammedanism when we recall that he is the President of the Hebrew Union and not a professor in one of our own seminaries.

In this hour of religious awakening and world remaking Jews and Gentiles alike are appreciative of just such a contribution as Dr. Kohler has made towards the mutual understanding of each other's points of view. As a systematic theology Jewish Theology is a model for all students and a challenge for some Christian scholars to offer to Gentiles and Jews as concise and thorough a statement of Christian theology.

The Episcopate

THE EPISCOPATE AND THE REFORMATION. By Professor J. P. Whitney, B.D. The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. 1917. $1.15.

The value of this little book by the learned Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London, is out of all proportion to its size. It is, moreover, in view of the growing recognition of the historic episcopate as the hope of church unity, a most timely book.

Professor Whitney begins with a survey of the episcopate at the close of the Middle Ages. Then follows a history of the episcopate in the various countries of Europe during the Reformation, special attention being given to its fortunes in England. The author maintains, with the late Dr. Briggs, that the final loss of episcopacy in Europe was not a result of the Lutheran Reformation but of later forces. He discusses, with great learning and fine impartiality, the history of the episcopate during the Counter-Reformation, and especially what happened to it at the Council of Trent. Then follows a brief history of the episcopate down to the present time.

Professor Whitney has given us not merely a scholarly history of the episcopate. He points out many useful lessons which the Church at the present time should learn from this history. He is sure, for example, that the Church of England has failed for many generations to use its episcopate to the full. Not a single new bishopric was created in England from the reign of Henry VIII. to 1836.

His dominant lesson is the great value of the episcopate to the Church.

The Church has succeeded where it has used its episcopate at its best. We learn from history, and this is the claim we make, to be more truly episcopal for the future than we have been in the past, not to barter any part of it away for papal unity, for secular power, or, what is perhaps more a danger to ourselves, for individual liberty.

Christianity and Sociology

SOCIAL PROBLEMS AND CHRISTIAN IDEALS. Edited by E. A. Wesley and J. R. Darbyshire. Longmans, Green and Company. 1917. $1.00.

In many respects typically English, and therefore by implication un-American in that it deals with problems different from our own, this is yet in many ways a meaty little book. It is the result of an English diocesan gathering, under the auspices of the National Commission on Repentance and Hope, to consider national and social issues. Admitting that "our social failures and national vices have contributed in no small measure to the terrible calamity which has befallen Europe and the world," the book purports to indicate obstacles which must be overcome in order to insure a better national order in the future. The first section is for the general reader the most interesting and stimulating part of the book in its indication of the problems which must be solved to the end of a reconciliation of industry and labor, without which, the writers maintain, there is no hope for the future. Particularly trenchant is the challenge to the Church to play its due part in the ultimate solution by developing strong and aggressive leadership. Witness:

The Church has suffered long from a superfluity of prudence; she is choked with prudence. Her fear of taking sides where both parties are right and both wrong has reduced her to a sterile neutrality. A thousand remediable evils she leaves unremedied because she cannot make quite sure whether it is her business to act the good Samaritan or some one else's. The fear of intruding is upon her, the fear of exposing her ignorance and want of practical knowledge, the fear of trespassing on other people's province, so, from prudential reasons, she chooses to do nothing as safer. Employers and employed fall out and the Church is not consulted; wrongs are done and she is silent. Afraid of offending a weak brother, meaning an influential and wealthy person or trade union pundit, she contracts her activities within a narrow sphere where no one can challenge her rights. She is safe there and at ease, in her "garden walled around, Chosen and made peculiar ground." So slavishly do we churchpeople obey the injunction to mind our own business that our business is shrinking, in fact, slipping through our fingers and in a fair way of reaching zero. Is this prudential timidity, this fear to intrude, part of the divine will? Was the testament the Master left behind to His household the delivery of an unobjectionable, unintrusive message, a walled-in-garden-gospel, or a fearless call to all the world? Are the duties of the clergy to be confined to serving the tabernacle, to shew-bread and candlesticks, to the washing of cups and platters? Not so thought Peter and Paul, whose boldness astonished the rulers and made them take notice that they had been with Jesus. If their boldness was learned of Christ it is an integral characteristic of the mind of Christ. He intruded; His gospel was a great intrusion. We are afraid to intrude, even fear the shadow of an intrusion. So we confine ourselves to "general principles" and to giving a message from which is eliminated every element which may occasion offence. This is prudent, certainly, for generalities can do no harm. The question is whether they do any good? F. M. C.

Letters on Religion

LETTERS TO A SOLDIER ON RELIGION.
By John Gardner. George H. Doran Company.
New York. 1918. 75c.

This is a war time book with a permanent, after-war message, not only to soldiers but to many others—among them, parsons. The reported widespread interest in religion and kindred subjects on the part of men in the service gives the author opportunity to write to "dear Y," a soldier in France, in simple, untechnical language five letters: on Providence, Prayer, Immortality, Death and Forgiveness. They are really more than friendly letters, they are popular discussions on fateful themes in which everybody at some time has anxious concern. They are brim full of practical suggestion, even though brief, and bristle with more than ordinary difficulties due to the great conflict. Of course Mr. Gardner does not solve them, but he does meet them with frankness and a wholesome masculine approach that will appeal to men. He is right in assuming men are interested and wish terse, unadorned handling of things that disturb them. The preacher himself might be comforted in reading these letters, especially if he has felt overmuch, the pressure of governmental and war agencies to represent them to the exclusion of the message in which are the "secrets of eternal life and peace." Letter IV, on "The death of the soldier and the death of Christ" is refreshing, in that it brings us back to some fundamentals and exposes much foolish confusion in the talk of vicarious death on the battlefield.

The Religions of the World

THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS. By E. W. Hopkins. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. $3.00.

The nearest approach to an unbiased presentation of the main facts of the great religions of the world is to be found in this fine manual by Professor Hopkins. In fact, it is so unbiased as to be often excessively colorless and inconclusive. Dr. Hopkins may well be excused for not venturing a final definition of religion, but he should not have left his readers entirely in the dark as to his own opinion on this important subject, especially as he rejects every other definition. It is impossible in a brief review to do justice to the masterful way in which the author has marshaled so many authentic facts about over twenty great religions, besides numerous species of primitive worship. It is, however, only fair to say that it is questionable whether it is profitable to try to condense into such small space so many facts, from which all the juice has been squeezed, leaving a mass of material interesting mainly to the advanced student. A good example of what is meant may be seen in the way in which the author has detailed the life of Mohammed, neglecting the broader and more general questions of the growth of Mohammedanism.

There are necessarily many details, in such a vast field, whose interpretation one may question. For example, Dr. Hopkins does not distinguish between worship and mere respect in primitive religion; he does not always distinguish between monotheism and pantheism, as in the case of Ikhnaton's reform in Egypt; he seems unconscious of the fact that deification of Babylonian kings has been seriously challenged; he takes the heptarchy of angels as evidence of a historical connection between the Persian and the Christian religions, ignoring the evidence of the extra-canonical Jewish literature; he asserts, without proof, that the two calves of Jeroboam were effigies of the waning and waxing moon; and he speaks as if the Christian priesthood was not organized till the third century A. D. These, among many other points, go to show that no man is qualified in these days of specialization to write accurately on all religions. For this very reason, therefore, it would have been much better if the author had used his space in more constructive discussions, and referred his readers, for details, to the excellent special manuals by experts in their chosen fields. However, the book is most useful as a mine of generally accurate material. S. A. B. M.

The Second Coming

THE LORD'S COMING AND THE WORLD'S
END. By W. J. Sheppard, M.A. The Macmillan Co., New York. 1918. $1.00.

The reviewer took up this book with great misgiving. He confesses that he has little sympathy with the inner circle who know so much about the hidden meanings in the book of Daniel and the Apocalypse and yet he has had an uneasy suspicion that there might be some weight to their argument. But a careful reading of Mr. Sheppard's book has caused a feeling of relief. He finds himself in entire accord with the author's treatment of this vexed subject and with the spirit in which he writes. He says in opening, that "One would shrink from writing a single unloving word of many brethren whose earnestness, devotion and sincerity none would question, but who do appear to have 'pressed on in advance' of what is stated in Scripture in the assertions regarding the future." The book is short, only about one hundred pages, but the statements are clear and the exegesis sound. He makes short work of the theory of the "First Resurrection" and of the "Rapture of the Saints." Regarding the "Millennium" he contends that in the one passage (Rev. 20: 1-8) on which the theory rests the "thousand years" is as purely symbolical as the "Seven Spirits of God" while "the whole teaching of the New Testament points to the millennium being this present age of Christian privilege and blessing, in which by God's goodness we are permitted to share." His chapters on the "Two Comings" and on "The Judgment" are equally clear and convincing, all of the so-called proof texts being carefully examined and criticized. And in the last chapter he gathers up the teaching of our Church and adds to it the statements in the creeds of the Wesleyans, the Congregationalists and the Presbyterians, and closes with these words: "These statements declare, with one voice, that there is one and only one Advent of our Lord, one and only one resurrection of the dead, one and only one judgment of all men; of a secret rapture of the saints, of a first resurrection long before a second, or of a millennium, there is no trace whatever." A BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE LIFE BEYOND WORDS OF COMFORT and MEMORIAL CERTIFICATE

by
Rev. William W. Blatchford

This collection of quotations, prayers and hymns is sent forth with the earnest desire and fervent prayer that they may minister comfort to many of those who mourn and shed a ray of light across the chasm that separates the Church Militant from the Church Expectant.

They will be found convenient in conducting service in a home, and the book may be presented as a token of sympathy.

which is so profound that it is never fooled by cant, an honesty which is communistic but so essential that shams don't last, are notes of religion, there is a spiritual life in the men of the American Expeditionary Forces which approaches the sublime. Mrs. Average Church-Goer might not recognize this as religion. Might have difficulty in tying it up with her idea of religion. Perhaps her husband might understand a little better. The language is often weird. There is a kind of collectivism that outruns any ordinary standards of honesty. Liturgically we do the most extraordinary things when we worship. But underneath there is something which is like the look in the eyes of a little child. There is a clean-heartedness in this great body of men, often so ill-smelling, which you instinctively know is "seeing God." I have never so felt it among any body of civilians.

Pick up a magazine from home. You read of the religious work in the cantonments, and how soldiers flock to the services. I hope it is so. I have never seen it. We are not so fixed here that we can "flock." But let me tell you what I have seen. During the first two weeks' fighting in the Argonne, my chaplains buried between fourteen hundred and fifteen hundred dead. The personal effects came through my hands. I did not count them. But I venture to say that in ninety percent of the personal effects of those dead soldiers there was a Bible, or a Prayer Book, a crucifix, or a scapula, or some indication that religion was an element in that man's life. More than that. The force of which that treasured object was an outward and visible sign, was vital and necessary. By September, 1918, we had hiked enough through mud and rain to scrap anything that was not essential.

Out of my year and a half of experience in the American Expeditionary Forces in all its phases, I have come to know that the men of this American army are religious. The curious part of it is that they don't know they are religious. And sometimes generals, and other officers for the matter of that, are just as ignorant as enlisted men on this point. And, I might add, just as religious—sometimes.

I am going to whisper something in your ear. I am going to whisper it because we don't talk much about such things. After having eaten with these men, marched with them, lived with them for eighteen months, under conditions which they curse, in circumstances which they loathe, I believe that the majority of them are spiritually better men than they were when they came over. The tragedy of it is—that some of their folks at home will never know.

THE FAILURE OF THE CHURCH?

By Roger Daniels

TO judge from the columns which are wont to discuss the trend of the times, it appears that the alleged failure of the Church has been relegated for the nonce, to give room for the alleged failure of one of those agencies, presumed by some, to supplant the Church in the rebirth of Christianity as disciplined in the A. E. F. Probably, Time, if given the opportunity, will relegate this later failure, in order to present one still more recent. Le dernier cri is the fashion!

From casual observation, one who has suffered at heart, because of the alleged failure of the Church, is inclined to feel a very pleasant surprise at seeing so many of the men who wear gold service stripes, finding their old places in parish pews. It may be that the cries of failure were wrong. Indeed, it is more than passing strange, to find one of the Principal Criers accepting a call to one of the richest communes in the country. Could this be on the strength of the failure? Has he aligned himself, heroic, with the hopeless cause?

At any rate, the individual note, one of millions or more, comes forth with the succinct dogma: "You bet your life, there is a God!" This is primal, utter; it embodies everything. The Great Man seizes upon it with the avidity of a cat pouncing on a mouse and proclaims: "The Failure of the Church!"

But why the haste? Here comes another individual note, another and another. Each to his own soul. Each has been touched deeply and springs to the touch. War has brought an awakening that nothing else seemed capable to bring. War has stirred the most buried consciousness. And the soul that never poured forth before, the soul that acknowledged no creed, no Church, calls out: "You bet your life, there is a God!" Hence the Church is a failure! The Church should have touched this soul. The Church should have made it unnecessary for the heat of war to break through the dross and reveal the gold within!

Yet, here come the calls of the countless thousands of souls that knew and loved the Church of the Living God before war came. What is their expression? It seems the Big Man could not hear them, so enraptured was he with the new idea.

Here are a few taken at random from the letters the men have written back:

"We are drilling as if we were still at old Camp Dix, and in the evenings I almost feel I can go over to St. George's parish house."

"I want to thank all the dear people at home for their prayers, which from the beginning have helped more than human strength to achieve the great victory which is ours."

"That God lives and ever takes care of us was made manifest to me over and over again in places I know that only by the grace of God were we allowed to take and hold."

"I am from the Covenant Parish, Philadelphia, and am mighty proud of that church and its work."

"Those who have been fortunate enough to go through it have seen God's hand guiding them and have reconsecrated themselves to His work."

"It was not always possible to get to church, but I went at every opportunity."

"It will seem good to get back to my own parish again and also to the monthly meetings of the Brotherhood. My parish is the Church of the Good Shepherd, Buffalo, New York."

"I intend to attend Holy Communion service next Sunday if I can possibly get away from the ship for a few hours. I am in touch with my pastor at home."

"Now that the war is over, I will be very glad when I get back to my folks and attend church again. When we were up front we found we could not attend church regularly."

"I'll be happy to get back to our old church again to worship, and, let me tell you, I'm going to get in and do my share too."

"I will never again enter a church where the eucharistic lights are burning, without calling to my mind that not only by His coming, death and ascension did Our Saviour bring light to the world, but that also that same Light was carried into the camps and cantonments, and even to the battle front as the only hope of light everlasting."

"When I was home, my girl used to ask me to go to church, and I would talk her out of it, but I'm telling you right now, when I get home again I am going to ask her to go to church every Sunday evening, and if she does not care to go, I reckon I know the way, and I'll be there every Sunday."

"It was a watch service and lasted about two hours, ending a little after midnight. There were some 200 soldiers present. The following Sunday there were forty soldiers who received Communion."

"If there is anything I can do for the Church of Jesus Christ when I get home, they can sure count me in."

"It will be a new life to us all when we get back, for we have all missed our Church."

Countless individual notes like these come in, countless letters from the men over there to the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Would it not be well to marshal these men together on their return and arrange for the Principal Crier to address them "On the Failure of the Church?"

It would be enlightening, would it not?

HOW PEACE CAME TO SAUSALITO

E. H. BARNUM gives the following description of how the armistice announcement came to Sausalito, California:

"While across the bay in San Francisco the city was surcharged as with high electric voltage and crackling with boisterous demonstration, in Sausalito, itself, there wasn't much sound at first. Here and there a light flashed in the darkness—people moved about quietly, listening to the wild welcome music from the distant city."

"I got up, switched on the electric light and hung out the American flag. Our rejoicing in Sausalito over the signing of the armistice, while not noisy, was none the less deep. I stood at the window for several minutes looking out toward the sparkling lights across the Golden Gate with a thousand thoughts surging through my brain as to the significance of the triumphant tumult across the bay, when suddenly, in the comparative stillness of Sausalito Village, came a thrilling voice shouting through the darkness. It was a shout and yet there was in it a note of supplication, too. We who heard it wondered. What was this message? The voice gradually came nearer and nearer, and this is what we finally heard: 'Praise God! Praise God! Praise God, for His wonderful goodness unto the Children of Men!'"

"This is how victory came to Sausalito. This announcement in Sausalito was due to the inspiration of the Rev. H. St. George Buttrum, rector of the Episcopal Church."

The Second Coming of Christ

A MESSAGE FOR THE TIMES

By JAMES M. CAMPBELL

Has Christ come or is he yet to come? Have the Bible predictions concerning the Second Coming of Christ been fulfilled or are they yet to be fulfilled? These are among the questions raised and answered by Dr. Campbell. Dr. Campbell wrote this book at the urgent request of a number of preachers of different denominations who wanted a book to distribute among their people that would be an antidote to the crass literalistic teaching concerning the Second Advent.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

D. R. LEIGHTON PARKS consented to let THE CHURCHMAN publish part of a sermon which he recently preached in St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, on the League of Nations. The open mind is not a counsel of perfection but a primary and practical virtue in American life at the present hour. The Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., is, as churchmen know, the rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis. He is a member of the Board of Missions from Province VI, and is well fitted to deal with the missionary problems of the Church. The Rev. J. Wilson Sutton is the vicar of Trinity Chapel in New York. What he writes about Evening Services in Lent is derived from an unusually successful experience in making lenten services go. The Rev. Henry Bradford Washburn, D. D., writes this week of the dinner given in honor of Dean Hodges, when the Cambridge School celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the dean's coming to the school. We regret that THE CHURCHMAN readers are not permitted to share the affection-

THE LIGHTER TOUCH

ONE does not generally require of Lent that it shall give a lighter touch to life. We rather strive to let it show us how we may clutch reality with a tighter grip. Its mood is tense, for we are generally bidden to wrestle with issues that cannot wait upon our leisure. This Lent at any rate we ought to approach our obligation at a different angle. The whole world is suffering from a kind of shell-shock from the war. The armistice came as a relief, but the let-down and breathing space was all too short. Bolshevism, the peace conference, set in like a relapse after a fever. We are taking it all very hard! People are tense, irritable and over-anxious. One is likely to be cut by his best friend if one happens to be approaching the millennium by a different street. The management of the planet is the keenest question of the hour, and everyone is pledged to take a hand. We are burning the candle at both ends!

Now, what has Lent to say in regard to this? Does it tighten the screws and bid us go it a bit harder? Not if we really catch the mood of the Gospel. There is a serenity in the Master's handling of the world's problems that no reformer has ever caught. For no reformer has ever claimed the Christ wholly as his model. Certainly Jesus cared—cared infinitely about the world's wrongs, its suffering and sin and folly. Is it irreverent to ask whether "it ever got upon His nerves?" It does get upon ours. If we had His faith in the Father, we should not care less than we do, but we should care differently. Lent can do us a cheerful service if we let it. We can acquire that relaxation of the spirit which contact with the Eternal brings. It is the calm of a deeper, not of a shallower life. There is quietness and confidence in such commerce with the spirit of God. This is, after all, God's world and Christ is redeeming it. The only anxious question is, do we know Him? Do we want Him to possess our hearts and wills? That companionship will steady us.

CONFUSING THE ISSUE

THE question of the League of Nations has become pitifully entangled in politics. We shall not attempt to go into the question how this has come about. No party to the discussion is quite free of blame. If, perhaps, Mr. Wilson had employed more conciliatory methods in dealing with those who differ from him; if he had seemed to take certain querulous representatives of the people into his confidence; if he had taken time to employ some of the gracious arts which are needed to smooth the paths of statesmen, we feel confident that he would have won the lukewarm and disarmed his enemies. Mr. Wilson is the most forceful personality in public life today. We doubt if any other living statesman in the world possesses so many masterful implements of statesmanship as he; but he is not always lovable. As human nature is, men will follow gladly a less astute leadership if the leader permits them to indulge their self-esteem by seeming to share their leader's counsels. This is especially true with America, where the town-meeting type of democracy is held to be a precious heritage. We like not only to hear the decisions of righteousness; we like to share its processes.

Mr. Wilson is made after another mould. Perhaps he can work in no other way than the one which his course of leadership illustrates. Well and good. He is the chosen spokesman of the American people. The only reasonable question is, do we like the output of his leadership? Do we approve of the results of his labors? Are we in accord with the thing he aims to accomplish? These are the burning questions before the country. Whether we like his disposition is, after all, not the real issue. A good deal of the opposition to the League of Nations proceeds from incompatibility of temperament. People do not like Mr. Wilson—therefore they will have none of his league, though the heavens fall. This is human, but is it not rather childish? If, for example, Mr. Taft with his overflowing good-nature had brought the league back from Paris, people might have picked the document to pieces, but they would never have got "mad" about it. Mr. Taft's smile would have kept the discussion in an amiable climate.

But we are not asked to pass judgment on Mr. Wilson's disposition. We are asked to give our attention to the document which purports to make entrance upon war more difficult, to relieve Europe and America of the burden of excessive armaments, and to make effective the international supervision of certain interests which all nations share in common. Nobody can question this ideal. No Christian dare set himself in opposition to its purpose. No reasonable person, surely no Christian, dare question for a moment the urgent need of some endeavor to lift the curse of war from the race. Any man who wilfully obstructs such a purpose deserves hanging. All this requires no argument. It is self-evident to men of good-will. Furthermore, it is self-evident that it will be a tragic waste of opportunity not to register now, at the close of this ghastly war, mankind's angry conviction that wars must be made to cease. If we do not register that conviction now, never shall we find a more favorable hour for its reception. No sane man, therefore, can withhold from Mr. Wilson his fullest support in his fight for a peaceful Europe. The purpose and the ideal are beyond question.

But unfortunately, the question is more complex than that. It is not merely a debate over whether it is desirable to do something to bring about lasting peace. Even Mr. Borah would grant that peace is desirable. Perhaps Mr. Reed would, but it is a debatable question whether the means proposed will attain the desired end. This question may be asked in singleness of mind by the most devout well-wisher of peace. It may be asked sincerely by a Christian patriot. It is only in this region of serious-mind devotion to the cause for the furtherance of which the League of Nations is proposed that we can carry on a dignified and worthy debate. We hope that in the next two months Americans will rise above the petty questions of whether they like Mr. Wilson or suspect the motives of Mr. Lodge and Mr. Knox. The question is how to make the document an effective instrument for the furtherance of the cause which is nearest the heart of the race at this hour—the peace of the world.

WHERE WE STAND

THERE are four parties in the discussion of the League of Nations. First, there is the company of persons who in their enthusiasm for a league have trustfully evaded the responsibility of considering the league. Most of these people have not taken trouble to read the twenty-six articles of the document that our President brought from Paris. These people are a benevolent asset to the league idea, for they can be relied upon to swell the chorus for almost any kind of league.

Second, there are those who would not accept even the millennium if Mr. Wilson had been providentially delegated to deliver the gift. This attitude, under the circumstances, is human, but not divine. We fear that it is shared by not a few patriots in Washington.

Third, there are those who have never caught the high, free message of the gospels which lifts our separated nationalities out of their sectional boundaries up into their birthright as children of God and members of one great family. The narrow patriotism which treats every foreigner as a latent enemy, which looks upon foreign peoples as instruments for exploitation, is morally incapable of grasping the Christian spirit of internationalism which pervades the ideal of a league of nations. These backward patriots are a morally negligible quantity in our new day.

Fourth, there are those who like THE CHURCHMAN take a league of nations for granted, who have preached for years the Christian compulsion to such a league, who hate militarism root and branch and believe that the war will have been fought in vain unless its agony and waste shall have been transmuted into some strong sanctions which shall protect the peace of the world. These people have got beyond discussing ecstatically a league; the point at issue is the league which within a few weeks is to be written into law. And we want not less of a league, but more,—not any sort of league that presents itself, but the best which the corporate Christian intelligence of the world can produce. Every Christian is for a league, but not all Christians are for the league which Mr. Wilson (a little irritatingly to those who have any Boston tea-party blood in their veins) set down with a precision, and immutability which seemed to mean “take it or leave it.”

Why is it that the League of Nations is being discussed in England in so amiable a spirit, while in America the whole discussion is electrical with animosity? In England people are examining the document around the family fireside, as it were. Lord Cecil is reasoning with his fellow-citizens about its provisions in the most amicable mood. There have been no pronouncements by those in authority there that brand all dissidents as knaves and reactionaries. It was unfortunate that Mr. Wilson who had worked so courageously for his ideal should have come home expecting a fight. He was bound, under the circumstances, to get what he expected. In his Boston speech he unhappily expressed his enjoyment of just such emotional crises. It is a calamity that any good cause should have that kind of introduction.

A league of nations is a clean cut Christian issue. It has got to come. A form of internationalism far more ambitious than any yet proposed by friends of the league idea will some day obtain on earth. Any man who has prayed in his heart our Prayer Book prayer for missions has pronounced himself unequivocally for the league idea. THE CHURCHMAN expressed disappointment over the document that Mr. Wilson brought from the peace conference. That document is bound to be materially revised. Mr. Taft acknowledges this. It would have been well if the President had inferred that the American people have the privilege at least of suggesting changes. There will be changes. But what we fear is lest the changes will not be in the direction of a larger but of a narrower internationalism. THE CHURCHMAN would like to see a league that looks less like an alliance of the present entente. There may be grave reasons why Germany can not be included in the league. We are disappointed if that is the case, for the present proposal of excluding more than half of Europe from the league seems to us to be dangerously irritating to the excluded nations; it is likely to provoke what it is intended to prevent, a balance of power.

Let us repeat, then: you can't find a baker's dozen of Christians who are against a league of nations; but you can find a good many high-minded Christians who are not enthusiastic over the document which our President brought from Paris. That may be the best possible league. But the American people are within their rights when they ask “to be shown.” Democracy cheerfully takes the risk of making wrong choices. A people ceases to be a democracy when it has not retained the freedom to be wrong. An acceptance of righteousness is impotent unless it carries with it the assent of the reason.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

BISHOP GREER'S SPECIAL SERVICES

IN spite of the ripples of criticism the Diocese of New York and indeed the Christians of every communion in the metropolis will be grateful to Bishop Greer for the services which he has so appropriately arranged in the cathedral for Holy Week, when at a special service the ministers in the city belonging to our own and other communions will preach. Of course, these services are in accordance with the strict letter and spirit of the canons of the Church. But anything that Bishop Greer would do in the conduct of his office is certain to be in accordance with the canons of the religion of his Master. That after all is what matters. The church people of New York are happy to have this privilege of hearing in the cathedral such devout and competent spokesmen for Christianity as those whom Bishop Greer has invited to preach at these special services in Holy Week.

And how appropriate it was to have chosen Holy Week for this high act of fellowship! If there is any week in the year when the Holy Spirit burns out of our hearts all hard pharisaism, all perverted forms of religion which ecclesiasticism has engendered among us, it is the closing week of our Lord's earthly life. If there is any season of the Christian year that silences by its memories and its teaching those unlovely controversies over the validity of orders and our claim to hold precisely "the faith once delivered to the saints,"—it is that season when Jesus set his face towards Jerusalem to be put to death by that very spirit which in all ages has mistaken orthodoxy for truth, ecclesiasticism for religion, logic for the love that is in Christ Jesus.

We may trust the Bishop of New York to make no unlawful decision in policy or in the interpretation of the spirit of the Master whom for five and seventy years he has been serving with humility.

AMERICA'S MANDATORY

WE hope that the General Convention will this year heed the petition of the Provincial Synod of Washington, calling attention to "the great needs of the ministrations of the Church to millions of people in our land who constitute a menace to the future of our nation unless we recognize our duty to them as brethren and share with them the blessings of our Christian civilization."

Every word of that resolution should be thoughtfully weighed. The implications are far reaching. America is asleep. It recognizes neither its opportunity nor its responsibility as regards its foreign population. We have appointed ourselves mandatory for these millions of aliens. Are we doing all we can to convey to them the blessings of our civilization? What right have we to talk about foreign missions when we are not scratching the surface of the problem here at home? Our foreign mission field comes to us. We need not cross the seas to reach it. We must not starve the foreign field, but we must face the problem of the home field. The brains, the enthusiasm, the statesmanship and the money of the Church should be poured lavishly into the work which the Synod of Washington again memorializes General Convention to take cognizance of. As we said last week, "the Christianization of America," be adopted and the Church goes manfully to work to solve the problem which God has laid at our very doors. This, we believe, is the supreme opportunity and the manifest obligation of the Board of Missions.

OUR BEST WISHES

THE University of the South is to have a million dollar endowment fund. The possibility of failure in the project under way to raise that amount of money is no where evident in the campaign which is now under way, under the guidance of some of the nation's best-known laymen. The strong appeal of General Wood, which appears in our news columns this week in the story of the launching of the movement, is only one of the many elements of the campaign which promise success.

CLUB FOR OUT-OF-TOWN CLERGY

THE Clergy Club of New York in the Fifth Avenue Building (200 Fifth Avenue) throws open its attractive rooms to out-of-town members for the extraordinary membership fee of five dollars a year. The library keeps on file sixty periodicals; there is a circulating library of a thousand volumes; and the Aldine Club on the fourteenth floor, overlooking Madison Square, opens its restaurant to members of the club and their families. The Clergy Club asks us to make known its desire for a wider service to clergy outside New York City who may be glad to know of this friendly meeting place.

MR. TAFT AT THE ASCENSION FORUM

MR. TAFT is a large asset in the success of the League of Nations. It was a most impressive occasion last Sunday evening when the distinguished ex-President faced a congregation which filled every seat, the aisles, the pulpit steps, the gallery and the chancel of the church. Crowds, as is not unusually the case with the forum nights at the Church of the Ascension, in New York, who could not get into the church filled the sidewalk for considerable distance on Fifth avenue. Mr. Taft won the audience by his lucid exposition, his conciliatory manner, and his fund of good nature. He discussed the League of Nations as only it ought to be discussed in America with that deference to the people's right of opinion which is essential in democratic assemblies.

The forum at the Church of the Ascension, New York, has become one of the great institutions of America. Dr. Grant, as a pioneer in the forum method, is doing as fine a work for democracy as any leader of thought in America. There is a wonderfully impressive spirit pervading these Sunday night gatherings in the Church of the Ascension.

IF THE LEAGUE SHOULD FAIL

PHILIP GIBBS, war-correspondent for the London Chronicle and the New York Times, writes of the League of Nations as follows in the Times:

If the League of Nations fails, as it may, because it is the most daring effort to lift the organization of human society to a higher plane of hope, and that is not easy of achievement there is only one alternative. What will happen if the league is not established with the impulse of the world's democracy behind it is as clear as sunlight to discerning minds who are in touch with popular passion born out of the sufferings of the war. What will happen is the wild revolt of many peoples against their established forms of government in the mad hope that by anarchy they may gain freedom of their souls and bodies and of their unborn children to enjoy the fruits of labor in larger measure than now, and in safety against the devastating terrors of modern warfare.

The alternative to a League of Nations, democratic in its foundations, and powerful by the understanding and faith of peoples—machinery from above will be of no avail—is Bolshevism. For Bolshevism is the revolt of the mob against leaders who have betrayed it, and against classes who have resisted a new philosophy of life which seeks to replace the fetish-worship of old cruelties by wider brotherhood. It is the madness of mobs, driven to insanity by despair and fear. I have heard the mutterings of that menace in Europe, not only in Germany where the dragon has raised its head, but also in England where it is beginning to stir. America has the supreme chance of any power in the world today because she is looked upon by the peoples of Europe as a fair, unselfish, and democratic arbitrator, aloof from their rivalries, and untainted by the disease which infected their civilization. American people that I have met do not realize this immense power of their mission, nor do they understand that to the European masses, when President Wilson speaks, he speaks, in their belief, for America herself. Over here, in New York, many people repudiate the assertion that the President speaks for America, and say that he has no authority behind him. If that is so and Mr. Wilson fails and falls, America may lose this great chance in the history of mankind. Then the world will, in my belief, crash into the gulfs of widespread anarchy.

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

What Shall I Make of Myself?

"If thou be wise thou shalt be wise for thyself; but if thou scornest thou alone shalt bear it." Proverbs IX:12.

AFTER a long life of observation I am convinced that the chief difficulty among young men and women who have the future before them, is not a lack of ability, but a lack of purpose; a well-defined, determined purpose.

No man ever makes much progress through a crowd unless he intends to. So that the moment you have once really resolved that you will seek to be something and to do something, you have already commenced to make an opening. You become one purposeful man, in the midst of a throng of purposeless people.

And this selection of a worthy aim in life must be a matter of personal decision. Once make a right choice, and you will find a thousand unlooked-for agencies in heaven and earth helping you on. We all, instinctively, step aside when a man shows he is trying to get somewhere. But if you do not make this decision, neither men nor angels nor God can do it for you. "If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself; but if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it."

Every normal man and woman longs, at least vaguely, for superiority. It is one of the primary instincts. Now, it should be your purpose and mine to ennoble this desire for distinction by centering our thought upon some noble aim. We were put into this world not simply to exist; else we might have been a tree or a stone—but to move. And yet I do not want to counsel that ambition of the lower sort which, like the serpent, leaving its slimy trail, rises to the topmost branch and bends hissing at the nobler man below, because it has learned to crawl.

In fact, I do not like that word, ambition. Its very derivation is malodorous. It comes from a Latin term ambitio—to go round, and referred originally to the custom of the Roman politician in "going round" fawning for votes. Give me, rather, that other term, aspiration. Ambition is aspiration run to seed. We must avoid the tendency which Matthew Arnold suggested when he said that "The American idea of greatness is bigness."

But, on the other hand, I have great patience with that young man who thinks just a little too well of himself; the young man who fancies that history never will be completed until his life has been written. I would rather see a young person with too much conceit than not enough. There is hope for him; he is passing through a normal stage of his growing period. Most of us never knew so much in our lives as when we were about eighteen years of age. So that we can be patient with others; and for this reason—if a young man has too much conceit, this bumping world will soon knock it out of him, but if he hasn't enough, no bumping world can ever knock it in. As David Lloyd, the successful playwright, said to my sister, in New York City, a little while before he died—"When a young man leaves school, he thinks he can settle the world, and ten years later he is very well satisfied if he can settle himself."

I hold this—I believe there is never a normal man born but that his work is born with him. John B. Gough used to tell of a man who stepped up to another whom he saw parading the streets with a lordly strut, and tapping him on the shoulder asked, "Pardon me, sir, but are you anybody in particular?" Everybody is somebody in particular.

What I mean is, that somewhere in this great world you have your niche, for which you were designed by your Creator, and when you shall have found that nook half the meaning of your life problem will be solved. The man most to be envied in this world, other things being equal, is he who has found his work. The man greatly to be pitied is he who has a life to live, and no work to do, and comes at last to the end, with no realization of the overwhelming joy of accomplishment. He who has deliberately and intelligently, and with a worthy purpose, found his work, has mastered one of the greatest secrets of a happy life.

For after all, what is it that makes happiness? Not very much. You have heard of the king who was told by his philosopher that he could be cured of a certain illness if he would wear the shirt of the happiest man in his kingdom. And when they found the happiest man in the kingdom he didn't have any shirt. It is conquest that makes happiness; conquest of ourselves, of the impediments in our way, and of our work.

I think it is Ralph Waldo Emerson who, somewhere, says that "a man is practically omnipotent so long as he works with God." He is the great Designer; and as He has designed your eye for seeing, and your ear for hearing, so has He designed you for something. And you will probably succeed or fail as you fling yourself into the current of His plan, or try to beat against it. A certain mathematician once declared that, if his life depended upon the solving of a problem in two minutes, he would take one of the two in determining how to do it. And there is the rock, jagged and surrounded by the wasted timber of a thousand wrecks, upon which men are splitting every hour. Better wait a day in the docks, to have the machinist examine the shaft, than break down in mid-ocean.

And men do this with ships; but how few, comparatively, do it with themselves! To be industrious is not enough; this world is teeming with industrious failures. A man must have a fixed purpose in his industry. Speed is not always progress—never, unless one has taken time beforehand to face in the right direction. Men are prone to fancy that when they are honest, and industrious, and economical, they have grasped the three chief factors in the problem. Well, I suppose they have grasped three of them. Live within your income, for if you don't, you will soon have to live without it. But there is one essential factor which too many forget, and that is, the application of the law of eternal fitness. Without that, the highest degree of activity may be utterly unprofitable. You put a bull in a china shop, and the more active he is the more you want to get rid of him. Put him on the road, and there you have a grand success, because in that yoke he has found his niche.

Do not be a bull in a china shop; be a man, with a worthy purpose. And remember, again, "If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself; but if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it." Choose a calling—you cannot afford to loaf, but neither can you afford to drift—choose it!

THE OPEN MIND

BY THE REV. LEIGHTON PARKS, D.D.

I THINK nothing could be worse for any Church or any pulpit than to have the congregation suppose that when they come to the worship of God they are likely to hear a sermon on "current events," and I hope you will bear witness that this has not been so in this church, no matter how far back your memory goes. Yet there come times when some particular event so affects the lives of the individual members of a congregation that the minister should, it seems to me, turn aside from the subject that perhaps would be more congenial to him and possibly to you and speak upon the current topic.

There is in your hands, there is in the hands of all the world today, a document, a draft of a proposed Constitution for a League of Nations. How shall we receive it? In the first place, is there any one of us here who has had the time (to say nothing of other things necessary) to give such consideration to those twenty-four articles as will enable him to express a valuable judgment? I question it. I think the danger is that before we have had time to examine them there shall be many an opinion expressed which, while it has no great weight, does help to form public opinion, the effect of which may be disastrous not only to ourselves, but to our country, to the world. I therefore venture to suggest that as we have been praying for many Sundays past for God's guidance for the men who were called together to establish a lasting peace, that they might be saved from "error, ignorance, pride and prejudice," so we should every one of us make that a daily prayer for ourselves "lest haply we be found to fight even against God."

For there can be no doubt that ignorance would be a hindrance to any opinion that we might express, and would vitiate any action that we might take. Now it is not for me to say that this congregation is ignorant. I know that some of you are far better able to speak on such a subject than I, but I will venture, I hope without offense, to ask one or two questions that will test our knowledge and show whether we be fit to express a valuable opinion.

In the first place, every one of us has heard of the Congress of Vienna and probably knows it was manipulated by Metternich. Now beyond that what do we know? Do we know what those people who gathered in that council wished to accomplish? Do we know what they did accomplish? Do we know what relation this desolating war had to the Congress of Vienna over a hundred years ago? How many of us are familiar with what took place at the Congress in Berlin in 1878? We know that Bismarck dominated that conference. Do we know what the effect of that domination was in the Balkans, in Bosnia and Herzegovina? Do we know what the effect was upon Russia and Turkey? Do we know that the roots of this war run back into that conference at Berlin?

Some of you will say, "Of course we know." But if any do not know I respectfully suggest that we ought to do one of two things: Either make ourselves familiar, not with the immediate facts that preceded this war, but with the causes of the war which lie back in history, forty and a hundred years ago, or else not express hastily, either in the club or at the dinner table or at a lunch party, an opinion in regard to a most momentous fact in human history.

I will also ask whether by any chance we are in any danger of being influenced, as those judges of the Apostles were, by prejudice? It was not pleasant for them to admit the possibility that the great leaders of Church and State and society and business were to be superseded by fishermen and farmers and petty shopkeepers. Was it likely that the word of God had come to such men as they saw before them and passed by such men as sat on the judgment seat? How is it with us? Is there any feeling in our minds that the people who are representing the United States just now are not the people to whom we should expect a vision of a reorganized world to come when so many men that we know (and who perhaps accidentally belong to our party) have been passed over? In other words, are we prevented from giving a careful and unprejudiced consideration to the results of this conference, because we are prejudiced against one or any number of people who have taken part in it? I bring no accusation, I ask you to consider.

Again, I will ask if there is any danger of our pride influencing us? Annas and Caiaphas were proud of being Jews; they dreaded absorption in the Roman Empire, and they said, "If these men succeed in their purpose then this nation will disappear." Perhaps there are men, patriotic men, who are saying today, "If we enter into any sort of binding agreement with the nations of Europe, the independence of the United States will disappear." They are too proud to give up anything. Is it so?

Would it not be well, then, for us to ask ourselves this question: What is the significance of this proposed Constitution for a League of Nations to insure Perpetual Peace? My answer to that question, and I believe the answer of every thoughtful man and woman, is: Whatever we may think of the details of it, whether it will work or not, it is the greatest miracle in human history since the days of the Apostles. For consider what difficulties there were in the way of agreement. Think how every nation—not only those five that were chiefly interested but the smaller ones who sent deputations to be heard by that small body—think what difficulties were to be overcome! Why, the subject was no sooner mooted than England said, "It means that some one else is to dominate the sea, and if that is done the British Empire will fall to pieces. We must control the trade routes or our vast-spread Empire will disappear." Italy had long been waiting for the reoccupation of land that belonged naturally to Italy. She had entered into secret treaties with the Allies before this country joined, and they had promised her that she should have lands on the eastern shore of the Adriatic. I for one do not wonder that Italy protested that the secret treaties should be fulfilled before there was any conference to lead to other widespread consequences in the history of Europe. France has stood for more than forty years knowing what was coming upon her. Is it any wonder that Frenchmen like Clemenceau, who have seen that country invaded twice, in 1870 and now again in 1914—is it any wonder that those men should say, “No words will save us, no words saved Belgium and no words will save us; we want no ‘moral assurance;’ give us Force and give us a river as a frontier. See to it that the ‘blond beast’ that would devour France is forever shackled and unable to fulfill its lustful quest?” Is it any wonder that men, remembering the words of Washington against “entangling alliances,” said, “Let us keep out of this European turmoil and develop our own life here, free from these fearful strifes.” I ask is it not a miracle that in spite of all this the representatives of every one of those countries have been willing to agree to this preliminary Constitution for a League of Nations to Insure Peace? I ask is it not a miracle that, considering what the opinion of Europe has been of this country ever since the colonies revolted, that there is not a country in Europe today which is not looking to America for help, not only the help that we gave in the war—munitions, financial aid and the lives of our men, but for moral aid? What is more, they are asking for guidance! Now, it seems to me that whatever party a man or woman may belong to, every American ought to be proud that there was found among us a man capable of voicing the liberal aspirations of the world and so simply and with such beautiful lucidity explaining to the plain people of England, France and Italy and then to the rulers of those lands a scheme by which possibly safety and peace may be assured.

Gamaliel asked his people to remember their history. May I for a moment ask you to remember our history? We are standing today midway between the birthdays of Lincoln and Washington; we acclaim them both as great and noble statesmen, heroes and men. Well, some of us are old enough to remember—or perhaps I am the only one who is old enough to remember—what people of the same social associations as yourselves thought and said of Lincoln! When I was a boy he was spoken of in polite society as a baboon in appearance and manner. It was said that his conversation was fit for a barroom, but not for decent-minded men to hear. He was declared to be an ignoramus who did not know the first principles of constitutional government, an anarchist who did not care if he destroyed the Union if only the party which he led could come into power. Those were the things that were said in that day about the man whom today we revere and love as we love no man in American history!

We can reproduce the frame of mind of the men and women just like ourselves who lived in the time of Washington. We remember him only as the conqueror, as the wise and dignified Father of his Country, but we forget what was said about him by the people who lived when he did. He presided, as we all know, at the convention for the drawing up of the Constitution of the United States, and one of the leading newspapers of that day said “that old dotard presided, and what can you expect?”

Well, what is the lesson, my friends? It is this: We ought to be very wary of expressing opinions, above all, condemnatory opinions, of our contemporaries to whom we do not feel personally attracted or with whom we are not in entire agreement. For it is possible (possible is all I say) that the President of the United States has laid hold of a principle that is going to rank in history with Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclamation and with the Constitution of the United States. When I think what the state of mind in this country was when that Constitution was presented to the people, when I think how men like Rawlins Lowndes appealed to the pride of the planters of South Carolina to prevent its ratification; when I remember that Patrick Henry appealed to the prejudices of Virginia; when I remember how Governor Clinton organized the ignorance of New York and used the whole machinery of the anti-federalist party to prevent ratification, and when I remember how the man who is rightly called the “Father of the Revolution,” Samuel Adams, was sternly opposed to the Constitution, I ask myself am I likely or such as I to have a perfectly clear judgment in this momentous crisis of the world’s history? Are we not in danger of drifting with the current and being influenced by ignorance, pride or prejudice? I would prefer to do what Samuel Adams did—sit silent for a little while, hear what the advocates have to say in favor of this constitution, and then perhaps do what he did—agree to its ratification with considerable disquietude of mind, it being understood that the constitution would be immediately amended so as to take in what was called in those days “the bill of rights.”*

And yet if this had not been done, if party politics had triumphed, if prejudice had been supreme, what would have been the fate of this country? We could never have gone back to what we had been, we should have been divided up by England and France and Spain and the great experiment of “Government of the people, by the people, for the people” would have perished at its birth. . . .

History, we say, never repeats itself. Perhaps not, and yet the student of American history must be struck by analogies. The President is returning to this country, which is popularly believed, at least in certain parts of it, to be hostile to this plan. Is he coming as Hamilton came to New York from Philadelphia, with a copy of the proposed Constitution in his hand to meet ignorance, pride and prejudice. I do not suppose there were many men in the United States who thought New York would ratify that Constitution and yet the matchless eloquence and sterling character of that one man was greater than all the scheming of the politicians. Hamilton’s voice prevailed, and New York ratified the Constitution. Can the President do what Hamilton did? I do not know. I would simply say this in conclusion: that we need not dream we can go back to the status quo ante of 1913. The flood of blood has swept the ancient world away and there are two possibilities and in my humble judgment only two before the world today. One is to preserve each nation by a federation with other nations of general like aim and purpose. On the other hand, if that cannot be done, the danger is not Germany, the danger is not in foreign wars, the danger in every country today is the enemies of their own household,—the revolutionists in Russia are carrying out the teachings of Tolstoy that civilization is not only a failure but a curse, and that this world will never be better until all that civilization has built up is leveled into the dust. If we cannot form a league of nations I do not believe any particular nation will long survive the revolutionary forces which desire nothing on earth but destruction. I believe that a league of the nations will be our salvation and the salvation of the world.

This afternoon the Sons of the American Revolution are to hold service in this church. Where are the sons of the anti-federalists? With few exceptions, no one knows and no one cares! We have other societies keeping alive the glory of the Civil War. Where are the sons and daughters of the Copperheads? Who cares? In years, perhaps many years, to come, when you and I have gone, this church will be as full as it is today for service for the Sons and Daughters of Peace—the sons and daughters of the men and women who in the great crisis of the world's history did their utmost to bring about a league of nations that would insure perpetual peace as the first step toward insuring "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" for mankind. Will your sons and daughters, will my children and their descendants belong to that happy band? Or will those of us who are here today be no more remembered than John and Alexander. Who were they? I do not know, I do not care. I know they fought against God. God save us from that fate. This may not be the best constitution, it may need many amendments, but it is the beginning of a new era in human history. Therefore I say to you, Refrain your tongues from evil speaking, refrain your minds from hostile judgment. If this work be of men it will come to naught; but if it be of God we cannot overthrow it, we should be found fighting even against God.

A SUPREME HOUR FOR THE CHURCH

BY THE REV. JAMES E. FREEMAN, D.D.

RECENTLY we received a communication from one of the leading railroad executives of the country in which, after referring to the widespread confusion that exists in the commercial world as the result of the war, he states that "the most important agency in sight for the curing of present world problems is the Christian Church." The serious question now is, will these great leaders look to the Church in vain? We are all perfectly clear that things cannot remain as they were and as they are. We are all likewise clear that we cannot lay the flattering unction to our souls that honorable traditions and a splendid system and polity constitute in themselves the warrants of our efficiency and power.

It will be a colossal mistake, the results of which will be incalculably serious, if the Church makes no attempt at this time so to mobilize its forces and prepare its plans as to bring to a vexed and confused world a scheme for its moral and spiritual rehabilitation that shall re-establish its poise, insure its peace, and guarantee the permanence of its most sacred institutions. Obviously, the closer federating of the Christian Churches of America is the primary and essential thing, and it will be a serious day for the Church at large if the present call for this closer fellowship of the Churches is neglected or forgotten.

Quite apart from this, it is a self-evident fact that our own Church is in urgent need of "lengthening its cords and strengthening its stakes." As one illustration of this, let it be noted, that the missionary enterprise of our Church closed its last year's work with a deficit of $269,000, having taken from its undesignated legacies (which hitherto were used for strengthening the work in the domestic field) $178,000 for current expenses. Let it also be noted with deep humiliation, that during the war period, while carrying a load incomparably greater than that borne by this prosperous country, England steadily increased her offerings to missions, and, while fighting the greatest war of her existence, actually strengthened and lengthened the far-flung battle-line of her missionary forces.

We are prone to boast of our compactness and solidarity as a Church, yes, and of our superiority as a finely conceived ecclesiastical machine, and yet other Christian bodies about us put us to the blush when it comes to the matter of maintaining and extending missionary enterprise. As a matter of fact, the records and receipts of our Board of Missions clearly demonstrate the lack of vital fellowship and co-operation in our household of faith. Something is radically wrong, and it is our conviction that mere criticism of the Board of Missions or its officers will not right the wrong. What is needed today is not destructive but constructive and co-operative criticism. No criticism is worth while unless it presents a program superior to the one now in operation.

Our present and deepest concern is with reference to the situation existing in our domestic field. The Church is strong in spots, but it is not strong over the country at large. Even where it is strong in our great centres, it is admitted to be greatly in need of rehabilitation and reconstruction to meet the needs of the present hour.

Quite apart from the large centres, we beg to submit the conditions in one single diocese in the Middle West, that will serve to indicate the criticalness of the situation and the urgent need of meeting it without further delay. We believe that the citation here submitted does not present a situation that is unique or peculiar, but that it is symptomatic of the condition generally throughout the country. The bishop of the diocese cited says:

The Church in the East looks out here, and men know that there is wealth, probably the greatest per capita wealth in the United States. But this wealth is not in the Church. In many places in this diocese the Church is weaker to-day than it was twenty-five or forty years ago, and in many such places steadily growing weaker. Just about fifty per cent of the counties of this state have not been entered by the Church. In these places the Church cannot enter, for we have no money to maintain work. What is true in this diocese is just as true of other dioceses of this middle-west country.

If a survey were made, not only of the middle western but of the states over the country, we believe like conditions would be disclosed. The bishop above quoted goes on to say that in some large towns, several of them containing colleges, the Church has shown a very perceptible decline in its influence and constituency for several years last past. He accounts for this decline, largely because of the dearth of properly equipped men to serve these immensely important and strategic centres. In one town with a population of 125,000 "there is one fairly strong parish and two others that for years have had hard work supporting themselves." In many places churches have been closed and are actually in a state of decay, directly due to the fact that men are not to be had properly to administer them. To quote the bishop's own statement, "counting those churches that are closed and those that may be closed, we discover that approximately 20 per cent of the churches throughout the diocese are thus represented." He adds: "Am I right in getting generally alarmed about conditions and sounding a trumpet call?"

Lest it might be inferred that this diocese is recreant to its gifts to diocesan missions, he states that it has more than doubled its offerings for this purpose within recent years, and has averaged over one dollar per communicant.

We do not believe that the grave situation presented in the foregoing is local, or due to any peculiar or unusual conditions. It is of little worth that we build new churches in growing communities, unless we strengthen the things that remain that are ready to die. It is our conviction that if a careful and accurate survey could be made and submitted to the Church at large as to the conditions that are within our own borders, it would provoke an interest and response that would be immediate and effective.

There is every reason why we should prosecute our missionary enterprise abroad, but there is evidently far more reason why we should undertake, without delay, to strengthen our missionary situation at home. A few outstanding churches in our great cities will not save the situation, and it is reasonable to believe that unless we conserve the interests of the Church in the outlying country, the Church in the cities will ultimately experience a serious decline.

It is perfectly obvious that the situation here presented is due to three causes—lack of money, lack of men, and lack of proper leadership. Probably the easiest condition to correct is that with reference to money, but this will not be corrected until we have men, and men of the right sort and consecration for the work. Few city pastors realize the insuperable difficulties under which missionaries in the rural parts of our country administer their difficult fields. Some of them have not one, but several, missionary stations widely scattered, each one of them representing problems that are by no means easy of solution. It is high time that parochialism and diocesanism gave way to a national church consciousness. It is also high time that we got rid of existing party prejudices and undertook as a united Church to deal with problems, the gravity of which cannot be overstated, that have to do with the very permanence and security of the whole Church.

Several months ago a representative of one of the provinces was sent from the provincial synod to the Board of Missions to set before that body the grave conditions confronting the Church in a certain part of the country, and the appeal of the synod was for the sending of a sufficient number of strong preachers to spend a given period in the churches of the province for the purpose of resuscitating discouraged and struggling churches. Owing to the fact that neither funds nor a sufficient number of preachers were immediately available, nothing was done in the matter and this important province, discouraged and disheartened, is struggling on in the face of a decline that is threatening and serious.

When the country and its institutions are endangered, we conscript men for service. The time has come when possibly we may be compelled to employ drastic means, not only in advancing the interests of the Church throughout the nation, but in actually saving the Church from further decline and disaster.

To postpone action to the next session of the General Convention, means to jeopardize the large interests of the Church over the country, and more than this, it means to fail in this critical hour in presenting a program to the Church and Nation that is sane, and statesmanlike.

GODFREY DE BOUILLON

BY EUGENIE DU MAURIER

GODFREY DE BOUILLON was a great soldier, a wonderful leader of men; but that which we remember first when we think of him is not his high courage, or brilliant mind, but that he refused to wear a golden crown in Jerusalem, where his Lord had been crowned with thorns, and that he put away from himself the honor and name of King, and would be called but the Defender of the Holy Sepulchre. Godfrey, the hero, shows us that greatness of name and fame is less than greatness of soul, and his humble piety rings through the ages more loudly than the clash of battles. We shall none of us be great in the other ways in which Godfrey was great. But we may try to have a little of his greatness of soul, and turn away from Cain, and the glitter of worldly glory when conscience tells us that it is higher and nobler to be poor and lowly. This last story of the crusaders shows us what the lives of all real heroes show us, and that is that he is bravest who knows when to say no, and that the highest courage is to dare for the sake of right. It shows us that the greatest hero is not he whom the world honors, or who cares for its praise, but he who fights against meanness and cruelty; loving purity, truth and right better than anything that the world can give him. If we try, perhaps, like Godfrey de Bouillon, when we are tempted we can refuse gold and high sounding title, and greater glory if to get it we should have to be less worthy of the Master whom, when He came to show the world the beauty of holiness, they crowned with thorns.

RETURNING AND REST

BY FRANCES AVERY FAUNCE

ROOFS I despised a little ago,
Shingle on shingle, row on row,
Sombre necessity reaching high
To spoil my glimpse of sunlit sky!

Now I love you, in stars or rain,
Since you welcome me home again;
I have seen broad stretches of green and blue,
But nowhere a nestling of roofs like you.

THE EVENING SERVICE IN LENT

BY THE REV. J. WILSON SUTTON

I AM asked to tell the readers of THE CHURCHMAN how to make the evening service in Lent go. It is a pleasure to comply, as far as I can, with this request if it be understood that I claim no expert knowledge in the matter, and that what I say is merely by way of suggestion. I am profoundly convinced that the evening service in Lent may be made to go, and that it presents a real opportunity alike to the clergy and their parishes.

Of the many things which need to be emphasized in our church life today, two seem to me to stand out, namely, worship and instruction. There can be no doubt that it is of the utmost importance to deepen and enlarge our spirit of worship and to gain a clearer and fuller knowledge of the fundamental truths of the Christian faith. The evening service in Lent readily lends itself to the furtherance of both these ends.

WORSHIP

1.—Music. Anyone who has heard an English village congregation sing will realize something of the power which music may exert in our common worship. Perhaps the English are naturally more musical than we are, but it has been demonstrated more than once that American congregations can be taught to sing, and when they are assembled on a week-day evening in Lent, advantage should be taken of the opportunity to teach them. Let the choir-master be present and give fifteen or twenty minutes to drilling them in the singing of hymns, chants, and in such other parts of the service as may be thought desirable in the particular parish. It will be found that they really enjoy this training, not only because most people are fond of singing, whether or not they have any particular ability to sing, but also because it will make them feel more at home in the service which is to follow. At the service itself the hymns should be those which are already well known and which make a popular devotional appeal. Perhaps it scarcely needs to be said that it is best to have no choir. If the members of the choir will scatter themselves through the congregation they can be of real help, but the choir as a choir should be conspicuous by its absence. This is not to imply that choirs are not important, but there are times when it is well to worship without them.

2.—Prayer. Our people ought to be well-trained in habits of prayer, both public and private, but as a matter of fact they are not. The Prayer Book service, beautiful and devotional as it is in itself, has too often weakened their sense of responsibility as to prayer, and lulled them to sleep. They need to be awakened, and to that end it is wise that at the evening service in Lent they should for the time being get away from the usual routine. Collects from the Prayer Book may be used, but it will be best to take them out of their setting and sometimes to have the whole congregation join in saying them. Many will be astonished to find how fresh and helpful they really are. Other prayers not found in the Prayer Book may be used if they are wisely chosen and really meet the needs of the particular congregation. And there is no reason why extempore prayer should not be employed provided it also meets a need; there is no point in having extempore prayer simply because it is extempore. We do need to develop freedom in prayer, but we should be always on our guard against license. Freedom in such a case means freedom to pray, not freedom to make up prayers.

There should be also periods for silent prayer. Those who have had even slight experience in the practice of the fellowship of silence will have learned something of the power gained from a common approach to God through the stillness of unuttered prayer.

INSTRUCTION

The evening service in Lent should always be a centre of instruction, and the instruction should have to do with the fundamental truths of the Christian faith. It may be, indeed it is, important that people should understand the meaning of the religious ceremonial used in their parish church, whether that ceremonial be simple or elaborate, but the evening service in Lent is not the time to teach them. It is important that they should understand the principles involved in a rightly constructed league of nations, but if it be the part of the clergy to instruct them in this matter some other time should be chosen. The teaching at the evening lenten services should have to do with religion as such. People should be taught about God, about the Incarnation, the Atonement, the Resurrection, the Church, the Sacraments, the Ministry, the Forgiveness of Sins, and Eternal Life. The clergyman must, of course, arrange his own scheme and follow his own method. The important thing is that the time at his disposal should be employed in dealing simply and directly with the Christian religion. The yearning for the truth is deeper and more widespread than a surface acquaintance with things would lead us to believe. In any case it is the duty of the clergy to teach—to teach clearly, faithfully, diligently and lovingly.

A word should be added as to the place of holding the service. A room in the parish house is perhaps the best place, partly because it is not the place in which we usually have services, and partly because it is important that the size of the place be not out of proportion to the size of the congregation. Our Lord has promised, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." It is a question whether a comparatively few people scattered through a large church may be said to be gathered together. Common worship does imply a certain physical as well as spiritual proximity. Of course, it would be easy to move into the church if happily the congregations are sufficiently large to warrant it.

In what has been said I have not meant for a moment to disparage or underestimate the regular services of the Church; quite the contrary. A simple informal service such as has been outlined has a value in itself, but it has also a value in deepening our appreciation of the Church's order and in bringing us back to it with a new and clearer insight into its meaning and beauty.

FAITH IN GOD,
Faith in man,
Stand behind the words,
"I can."

BERNICE POWELL PEABODY

THE THIRD WORD

"Woman, behold thy son." "Behold thy mother."

THE thief was not the only one who was watching our Lord's face. There were those near His cross who were enjoying His suffering. Friends were watching Him too. And His mother was there.

His mother! How the words Simeon spoke come back to us as we see her standing there! "Behold, this child is set for the falling and the rising of many in Israel; and for a sign which is spoken against: yea, and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul; that thoughts out of many hearts may be revealed." In the Magnificat occur the words "behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed." And so it has come to pass. We speak of the "blessed" Virgin Mary, and we think of her, not only as holy, but happy, one highly favored of God. But it could not have seemed so to her just then. We can hardly bear to think of her during those dark hours.

Mary was human. I suppose thoughts such as would have come to any mother made her grief more bitter on Good Friday. Why had all this been necessary? He had been such a wonderful son! Why, when she was no longer young, did He leave Nazareth? Was it too small for Him? Had He wearied of the quiet life in their home? No—she knew it was nothing like that that had driven Him out. It had been a conviction that God was calling Him to do this thing. He had always had thoughts too deep for her to understand. When the time came she had known she must not try to hold Him back. And yet she had had misgivings from the first that there was trouble ahead. Now it had come, and there was nothing left for her but weeping. Had He forgotten her since He went out into the world? Others were closer in His confidence. He had not heeded her warnings that He would bring on disaster by His plain speech about those in power. Yet He had not seemed surprised when disaster came. That was part of the mystery about Him: He knew He was going to His death, and yet set His face like a flint to go up to Jerusalem. Had He quite forgotten her during these last tense days? Would He think of her once more? Perhaps even speak to her once more?

And Jesus spoke. St. John was standing by Mary. Jesus loved him best of all His disciples. Jesus spoke to His mother, "Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother!"

Humanity at its best, when it is most truly human, is divine. Nowhere in the Gospels do we discover a more human touch than here. Yet is there anything more divine recorded than just this? We should have felt there was something lacking in His divinity, or that divinity was less warm, less lovable than humanity, if Jesus had given up the ghost without one word to show His mother was dear to Him.

We are getting back the Master of flesh and blood whom the disciples loved. It is strange we ever lost Him. Stranger still that we lost Him through the desire to exalt Him. It came about through that feeling, so deeply rooted that even the gospel of the Incarnation has been twisted to agree with it, that humanity and divinity are irreconcilable opposites, that what is human cannot also be divine. So in the desire to bear witness to our Lord's divinity men robbed Him bit by bit of His humanity. Already in the second century preachers stood up to say that Jesus was divine, and therefore He could not have been truly human. He had appeared to hunger and thirst, He had appeared to suffer and die, in order that we might learn how men ought to live and die. But it was impossible that the Son of God should really suffer and death for Him was not to be believed. The Church protested. She was not willing to have her Lord transformed into an unreal appearance of a man. Yet in the end many of the ideas she fought against found favor, and Jesus of Nazareth, glowing with warm life, faded into a Being with whom no mortal soul could feel himself a brother. Christ's trials and victories lost their inspiration because we had forgotten that Christ had to win His victories as we win ours, by suffering and effort. But we are learning that when you strip Christ of His humanity His divinity disappears. Only as you see in Him first the strong, great-hearted, living human man do you find in Him also the everlasting God.

And I think we are learning that whoever would live a god-like life must first of all be a true man or woman. Many, longing to be god-like, have forced their lives into strange moulds of asceticism and sadness. They have tried to climb up to heaven by casting off everything that made earth dear, not realizing that much of heaven is already here on earth. The more they could thwart and starve the natural instincts God had given them, the nearer they supposed they were approaching the example set by Christ. As if to glorify God meant to despise man! But we are learning better. In the Gospels we find our Lord fresh, human, real, whole-hearted. We find Him living life, not shunning it; exalting humanity, not despising it. He does not reveal the Father to us by drawing away from human life, as if it were unclean, but by entering into it and showing us how beautiful it is when rightly lived. We're learning again in these latter days the lesson Christ taught His disciples so many years ago, that what God wants of men and women is not that they shall force themselves to be something else, but that they shall be true men and women. For to be true men and women is to be children of God. Nothing is unlovely or ungodlike merely because it is human. Rather, whatever is ungodlike is no true part of humanity, but is like a disease corrupting it.

See how it is just in the most intensely human passages of the gospels that Christ's divinity shines out most radiantly! Here, for instance, in His love for His mother! And understand that what God asks of you first of all is that you be worthy of your human nature!

SAMUEL M. DORRANCE.

O GOD, who by thy Word dost marvelously work out the reconciliation of mankind, grant, we beseech thee, that by this holy fast we may both be subjected to thee with all our hearts, and be united to each other in prayer to thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS—A SYMPOSIUM

THE CHURCHMAN telegraphed to several of our bishops and rectors, asking for an expression of opinion on the League of Nations, limiting the discussion to the specific league submitted by the President to the peace conference. We regret to say that it was difficult to find many clergymen who had given attention to the document itself.—EDITOR.

The Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D.D.—President Wilson says that the American people believe in a league of nations to promote peace. I hope and trust that they do. That, however, is not the question now before the American people. The immediate question is whether they believe in the particular draft of a league of nations which the President is now taking back to Paris to present to the peace conference for their consideration and action.

When I read the draft I noticed that there was no time limit to the covenants stated and no conditions given under which a nation could withdraw. I read it again to make sure. Could it be that five Americans in Paris with the consent of the Senate have power to bind forever the United States in a league of nations and a treaty unprecedented in many of its conditions? Such, however, would be the result. Can we not imagine a situation within fifty years wherein one or two of the nations might be restless even bitter under a sense of unjust treatment, yet bound forever by its representatives of a former generation? Could there be a greater temptation to a nation to make of a treaty "a scrap of paper?" Would it be a league to promote peace or war?

Again searching questions such as the following have been raised by men of high standing, lawyers and jurists, Democrats and Republicans. Does this draft of a league of nations recognize the Monroe Doctrine or not? Does it enable representatives of the league to allow a colony of orientals to develop on the west coast of South America, or of Germans, if they enter the league, on the east coast? Does it take away from the United States its control over its policy of immigration? Will this country, if it accepts responsibility for Armenia, be obliged to keep a standing army of young Americans in Armenia? How great an army or navy must we keep ready to be sent to any part of the world to carry out the league's enforcement of peace? It does not matter much to me just now how these questions are answered. Perhaps the Monroe Doctrine should go by the board and the United States hand over her immigrant problem to others. The point that troubles me is that the present draft is worded so vaguely that these questions which may later cause grave misunderstandings among the nations, are already asked by able men and that able men give different answers. And I have not seen in President Wilson's speeches any attempt to answer them. He reiterates that the American people believe in a league of nations, and that he is going to tell the peace conference so.

The President has said that the United States is today the greatest moral asset for Christian civilization. We gladly agree with him. The United States is today a nation ready and glad to serve the world, a nation self determining and with national integrity. Its existence as such a nation is one reason why it is so great a moral asset. Its action under Mr. Wilson's administration before and during the war is a brilliant example of its power and noble influence as a nation. Will the present draft so change our national conditions as to endanger the very qualities which make us a power for good? I do not know. But the raising of this question by able men, and the contradictory answers again suggest that the draft of the League of Nations has not received the consideration that it should have.

Who knows whether the American people are supporting this draft? It is suggestive (though is it only a coincidence?) that when the President asked the country at the last election for a Senate to support his policy, the country sent fewer men to the Senate liable to support his policy.

In behalf therefore of a league of nations so well considered as to be likely to bear the test of time; in behalf of international good will and peace, I believe that it is my duty to oppose in any way in my power the present draft, and to support the Senate, when the question comes before them, in demanding a form of a league of peace so constructed and phrased that its path will be clearly pointed towards international peace.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D.D.—The draft of the constitution of the League of Nations must be the foundation of the peace treaty. Of course the constitution has to be adjusted to meet the multitudinous needs of the Allies. We can't conceive that the human intellect can adopt a constitution which will prove entirely satisfactory in its first draft. The draft itself can hardly be more than an outline. That the draft can't be the final statement should be taken for granted. But the principle is right and must be adopted before peace can be settled. The draft constitution as it is must be the basis upon which the world peace will rest. It is most unfortunate that what may be called the affair of the whole human family should be subordinated to what seems to be private political issues. I should like to see the Senate accept the principle of the draft. They seem to have forgotten the principle in order to discuss the details.

Nothing has ever been presented to the American people for their adoption which so nearly expressed the principles on which our institutions rest—our American ideal—as the principles on which the League of Nations stands. It is my profound conviction that when completed the American people will not for a moment hesitate to accept the constitution of the League of Nations.

The Rev. Ernest M. Stiess, D.D.—Thirty-nine senators, sufficient to prevent ratification, declare that the proposed draft of the League of Nations is fatal to the interests of the American people. On the other hand, President Wilson insists that it so perfectly protects our honor and safety that he objects to any change in its form. Millions of our people are ranging themselves about the standards of these opposing views. It is obvious that an intelligent and sympathetic effort should be made to harmonize them, and it is by no means so impossible as it appears.

At last the world is ashamed of war, ashamed of the causes of war, and for this reason quite as much as because of the ruinous cost and the cruel horror, civilization is determined to make war impossible as far as the human reason and conscience may plan and the human will may enforce.

And the attempt will be reasonably successful. There will be a league of nations, embodied in a treaty of peace, and it will be adopted with a unanimity which now seems hopeless. To make such a statement one requires neither the mantle of a prophet nor the gaudy garment of conceit. The truth is that we all desire the same things: to stop war, to preserve the reasonable and recognized rights of nations, to perform reasonable duties for the preservation of peace and the promotion of international friendship.

Why then are we now in an unhappy frame of mind? The explanation is simple. Although the President brought home a far better plan than anyone expected, and for this he deserves the highest praise, yet his efforts to protect it from discussion proved almost fatal to its acceptance. You cannot force anything on the American people, thank heaven; not even perfection.

But the draft of the League of Nations is not perfect—even the President will change his mind on this point—and some day it will come back to us in a form which will win general approval. Meanwhile, let us thank God for the substantial progress we are making. To which I venture to add my thanks to certain brave and eloquent Americans in the Senate of the United States for their invaluable help at a critical hour.

The Rev. Dickinson S. Miller, Ph.D.—The League of Nations, as sketched in the proposed constitution, is to keep peace and secure rights; yes, but it would do even more and it means even more than this mighty result. It means for the first time, with an advance rather of kind than of degree, putting our heads together—our best heads, the best heads of the world. The present conference itself has something of this character; but it is an earnest of more than itself. Nothing is more striking in the separate thought and ideals and literature and science of even the civilized countries than that "the best that is known and thought" for human welfare is not known all along the line. The best is not a common possession; provincialism, ignorance, and prejudice interfere even in the most highly educated quarters. The best standards are there, but they do not make themselves felt throughout the world. What the league portends is an era in which the mind of each nation will put itself alongside the mind of all others with the sole object of extracting the practical best for mankind. Democracy means government by discussion, by the communication or making common of ideas. The league means, amongst other things, a great stride toward making common the best thought of the world. The mind of the world will be doing its best. Only then can we master the crying evils of the world.

The Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D.D.—All thinking Christians see in the present comradeship of a large part of the world an unprecedented opportunity to establish the brotherhood of nations. We long to have a unity wherein nations shall live together with Christian forbearance, openness, and mutual trust. We long to have the sacrifice of four terrible years issue in a new earth.

The difficulties in the way of such a consummation are enormous. Some forms of federation would make only confusion. We must win a federation strong enough to protect the weak, to maintain justice everywhere, and to be fundamentally Christian. We need patience while earnest men examine the merits of the means proposed. There are many wise and conscientious Americans who are experts in government: we want their judgment.

While Europe has generously conceded to America a leadership in ideals, we must recognize that there are also brave idealists in Europe. History has always shown that in a council, meeting at a supreme moment, the formerly conspicuous person is apt to be overshadowed at last by some quiet man who rises out of the crisis to declare a solution which reverence ascribes as the ruling of God, who has thus chosen an unprejudiced and altogether sincere instrument.

This man may be an American; he may be an Englishman, a Frenchman, or an Italian. He will be in any case a humble person, child-like in his greatness, who awaits the counsel of his peers, and with them stands in awe before God for direction. The world after all is His; and it will not be one, till men make themselves obedient to His plan for its unity.

FOR THE SPIRIT OF KINDNESS

IF from all Thy good gifts, O Lord, I may ask but one, let that one be the spirit of kindness!

Let others have fame and fortune and jewels and palaces, if I may but have the kindly spirit! Give greatness and power to those that want them, but give to me Brotherly Kindness! Make somebody else to be comely of visage, if only I may wear a kindly countenance!

May I never wound the heart of any faltering child of Thine! Make me to do the little unremembered acts that quietly help without intending it. Grant me to bear about the unconscious radiance of a life that knows no grudge, but loves all men because they are children of my Father Who loved them enough to send His Son to save them. Amen.—(From Prayers for Today by Samuel McComb, D.D.)

THE FEET OF FAITH

BY ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH

Serene the vesper star
Gleams down upon the hamlet still
And restless cities far.

Beyond the star, through chartless night,
The silver planets sail
To seas beyond the verge of time
Beyond the great winds' hail.

Before the mystery that broods
In night's unfathomed deeps
The faint heart quails, and never mounts
The dark and lonely steeps.

Alone, the quiet feet of faith
Go up the steeps of life
To find the dawn beyond the dark,
And peace beyond the strife!

AWAKENING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND—I

BY JOHN O'LONDON

“WHEN the English cease to be discontented with themselves, that will be the sign of their decline and fall.” This was the dictum of a well-known Japanese military officer. If it is true, then there is certainly hope for the future of the Church of England. Not for a century at least has there been such divine discontent in the English Church as that which has been manifest during the war. Fortunately the searchings of heart have led to a determination to make the witness of the Church more potent, with the result that today there are movements within the Church which seem destined to revolutionize her methods and lead to the scrapping of much of her obsolete machinery.

I have been asked by the editor to give readers of THE CHURCHMAN some account of the rise and development of these widespread movements which one cannot help recognizing as visible tokens of the Spirit of God breathing upon the dry bones of His Church. Soon after the war began, the fact that the Church had lost her grip on the nation could no longer be ignored. Some folk asked in tones of poignant disappointment and others in tones of sarcasm, “What is wrong with the Church?” She appeared to be paralyzed; many of her messengers were as dumb men who were utterly out of touch with realities. There was no corporate voice which spoke to the soul of the nation. Soon the press began to discuss the “Failure of the Church.” Needless to say there was a good deal of exaggeration and superficial reasoning, which led to misunderstanding and even misrepresentation. But the facts were serious enough and certainly justified the attitude of some of us in trying to arouse the conscience of the Church in pre-war days. I well remember an article in THE CHURCHMAN in September, 1914, in which the writer gave his experiences of “August Sundays in London.” He showed how our preachers failed to grasp the momentous events which had already shaken the foundations of civilization and threatened the fundamentals of Christianity. “One expected to find at St. Margaret’s a message,” wrote your correspondent, “and on Sunday morning one heard an appeal for the Prince of Wales Relief Fund and no sermon. At the Abbey there was a good sermon by one of the great scholars of the English Church, a sermon which might have been preached anywhere and at any time. . . . One came away with a feeling that the Church was not rising to an appreciation of its opportunity and its duty.”

Your correspondent was right. The facts were sad and deplorable. The outlook was grave, but the Spirit of God did not cease to strive with His Church and the prayers of the faithful were heard and answered. Led by one or two of the English church papers, the discontent and dissatisfaction felt by many devout church folk became articulate. Facts were faced. Discussions in the press led to conferences of clergy and laity in all parts of the country. Ultimately there evolved in 1916 what was known as the “National Mission of Repentance and Hope.” This was not intended as a series of parochial missions on the old lines, but as the Archbishop of Canterbury explained, “Our present effort is to be essentially

I need not follow the various stages of the mission whose “witness” was given in the autumn of 1916. Such an effort had never before been attempted. It was the nearest approach that we have ever had to a corporate witness by the Church of England. The Church was united, expectant and prayerful. Notwithstanding the tremendous difficulties owing to the whole nation’s being absorbed in the prosecution of the war, and the absence of a large number of clergy who were acting as chaplains to the forces, the Church was profoundly stirred by the mission. The nation, as a nation, was not so much impressed, but men began to ask not “What is wrong with the Church?” but “What has happened to the Church?” Some critics were disappointed, others did not hesitate to write down the mission as a failure; but it was nothing of the sort. Unquestionably it was the genesis of some of the new movements which I hope to describe and of which one feels “the best is yet to be.” The Bishop of Southwark (Dr. Burge), who is one of the most level-headed of our bishops, said in writing of the mission: “The result has certainly shown the unpreparedness of the Church for its opportunities, the immense reserves of service which have never been used or even thought to be available, the paltriness of the demand which the Church has been making of its members when compared with its great corporate responsibility and the possibilities which lie immediately before it of fulfilling its great vocation.”

Another of our virile leaders wrote, “The terrible weakness of the Church has been revealed. We have felt keenly the extent to which she is out of touch with a great proportion of the population, the lack of teaching there has been, the want of fellowship and a strong evangelistic spirit, the indifference of many church people to her spiritual ministry, and the failure to be true to her vocation as the great witness in the nation to the principles of love and peace and truth.”

Many other critics from within were equally candid. The weaknesses of the Church were there before, but most of us were indifferent to them or accepted them as inevitable and simply blamed “the spirit of the age.” Now that the ugly facts had been brought home with irresistible force the cry was “What can we do to remedy the defects and buy up our opportunities ere it be too late?”

It was in this spirit that the archbishops with the cordial approval of the whole episcopate decided to appoint five large and thoroughly representative committees “of our best and strongest” to deal with such vital questions as “Christianity and Industrial Problems,” “The Evangelistic Work of the Church,” “Administrative Reforms of the Church,” “The Teaching Office,” and “The Worship of the Church.” The missionary work of the Church was already being considered by a committee of the Central Board of Missions. All these committees have now issued their reports. The conclusions are certainly frank and heart-searching. “The roadway to right knowledge and action is now open,” says the Primate. “It is a roadway which is offered not to those only who approach it as churchmen, but to the English people as a nation.”

REFLECTIONS OF A CHURCHWARDEN

Wages—I

IN a recent number of this journal the Rev. Father Paul Bull, C.R., writing on National Guilds, says that the root of our social disease is found in wage slavery. He tells us that the essence of wage slavery is that it abstracts labor from the laborer, treats labor as a commodity to be bought and sold, and so countenances traffic in labor. The wage slave is merely the provider of labor power; he has freedom without security. . . . He must go where employers want his labor, and work under conditions over which he has no control, in obedience to foremen whom he does not choose. In selling his labor he practically sells his freedom. . . . The wage system, among other various qualities, directs production to profit instead of to goodness, utility and beauty.

In England, it seems, they have lately discovered to be true what statesmen and economists long ago pointed out, that the Socialist State might be as much a tyrant as the individual capitalist. In this country some idealists are still under the strange delusion that the universal slavery which is State Socialism might be a better system to live under than the system which Mr. Trotsky, before setting out to massacre Russia, described in his farewell speeches as the "damned corrupt capitalist government" of the United States.

In England, we are told, they never were much taken with Syndicalism, and they are conscious that the Bolsheviks in Russia are demonstrating its futility. To those who never believed in Socialism the demonstration was superfluous; they always anticipated how it would turn out.

Father Bull has found for the moral and spiritual evils of the wage system of slavery a sovereign remedy; and this remedy is National Guilds. The wage system is the root of social evil; Guilds will eradicate it; social evil will wither and perish.

As in some other things, so in this, America marches a little slower than the most advanced thought; and many of us have not yet become familiar with this system of social agriculture, which destroys evil roots, and drains off slums, and exterminates the dividendivorous parasites who thrive on them. We are thankful for the information conveyed by the article before us. The general plan is this: The State becomes the universal capitalist, but instead of dealing with the individual slave, it deals with aggregations of them under the name of Guilds, to whom it leases capital, and who manage all the details of industry, pay (Father Bull in one place makes a slip of thought or of pen, and says the Guilds will have the entire control and arrangement of wages), hours of labor, holidays, and promotion. The State is the totality of consumers—represents the consumers; the Guilds, and a few outsiders, such as journalists, artists, and others who live by their wits, are the totality of the producers. All producers, that is Guilds, will be consumers; that is, will constitute the State. Nearly all consumers, that is the State, will be producers; that is, will constitute the Guilds. This is a little longer way to say that everybody is both a producer and a consumer. In one relation he belongs to one society; in the other relation to the other. An obvious preliminary caution is suggested by the thought that where the whole social structure is based upon the membership of each individual in two societies, founded upon the conflict of interest between consumer and producer, it may be difficult to determine in each emergency where he belongs and to keep him in his place, one or the other, as the pendulum swings.

Father Bull is not fully satisfied with this scheme because there is in it too little allowance (there does not appear to be any at all) for original sin, and for other reasons; but on the whole he strongly approves of it. One important reason is that work will no longer be a mere striving for private gain, but a real contribution to the commonwealth; not selfishness, but service will be the chief motive; and this will transfigure the whole moral and spiritual nature of man.

All this sounds rather fantastic. The whole article in extenso sounds more fantastic than this summary of it; but it is printed in a church paper, churchwardens and vestrymen are invited to read it, it challenges their criticism, and it gains a certain prestige from the company in which it is found.

1. To begin with, nobody has any quarrel with wages. Everybody likes to receive them. Nobody, at least no ordinary, plain person, resents being paid for his work. Nearly all of us live on wages in one form or another. In the large manufacturing town in which I live there are some people who do not work, the kind whom Father Bull calls parasites, but these, not being tramps or other vagabonds, hire out something that they own and receive pay for it from those who wish to use it. Most of our people, however, work, and in my congregation there are not more than three or four opulent people who do not. The rest of us live on our wages, that is, the pay we get for the work we do; and we help out our current wages more or less by our savings from past wages. I am sure it never occurs to my friend, the timekeeper, or to my friend, the freight handler, or to the girls (all the boys went to the war) who work at stenography, or book-keeping, or millinery, or other trades, or to any of the other industrious men and women in the congregation, that they are slaves because they get paid for their work. The head officers of some of our banks and trust companies, and of our traction system, are said to receive very large wages, but not one of them lacks that air of self-respect and self-reliance which marks the free man as different from the slave. The fact of the matter is that everybody likes to be paid for his work, and nobody objects to wages.

2. The real difficulty appears from Father Bull's article to be, not the wages, not the pay you get for your work, but the work you do for your pay. He calls us who receive wages slaves, and begs the question by his epithet. We slaves, he tells us, must go where employers want labor; we work under conditions over which we have no control; we do not choose our own foremen. Translate this formula into terms of our parish choir, which will stand mutatis mutandis for almost any kind of employment. We employ some thirty men and boys to lead our music. If they want to earn our wages they must come to the church where the congregation want their music; it is perfectly true that the congregation will not go to them. They have no, or not much, control over the conditions under which they work. There is the church; it is not going to be moved or altered even if they do not like it. There are the services, Holy Communion, Morning and Evening Prayer, others occasionally: the choir are employed to help in these services, and their preferences are not consulted with regard either to the language or the ritual. They do not choose their own foremen, either the rector, to whom the Church commits the control of the music, or the choirmaster, who determines the method and teaches the parts, or the organist, who plays the accompaniment. Certain vestments are prescribed which they are obliged to wear. They are required to observe a certain decorum of demeanor: they are not at liberty, for instance, to chew gum in choir. They are not permitted to mispronounce the words of the offices they sing: it is forbidden, for instance, to say Trin-nut-tee for Trinity.

Finally, in payment for the work they do, with all the incidental restraints on their personal liberty, they receive wages.

By Father Bull's tests our choristers are slaves. So are the choirmaster and the organist. So indeed is our high-spirited curate, to whom the vestry pay wages to assist the rector. I am not sure about the rector. Those who mark the masterly way in which he applies the authority of the Church to the slaves who compose his congregation and to the other slaves in his choir would be surprised to hear that he felt himself the slave of anyone but Christ the Lord. Yet he is subject to an Episcopal foreman or overseer whom he had no voice in choosing. When he was appointed to be rector the parish did not move to him, but he had to move to us. Most of our parish conditions are beyond his control. He receives wages.

A LETTER AND THE ANSWER

Dean's Office,
Cathedral of St. John the Divine,
New York.

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Some weeks ago I secured the permission of the bishop of the diocese to arrange for a series of special services to be held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine upon successive afternoons in Holy Week. These services will be conducted by the clergy of the cathedral staff, and the addresses will be made by the ministers of various Churches which, in common with our own, acknowledge Jesus Christ as God and Saviour. Needless to say, these special services will conform in all respects with the requirements set forth in the canon law of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

This plan, which has been made public in the columns of the daily press, has evoked from almost all directions expression of sympathy and good-will. From one quarter, however, it has elicited expressions of a different sort. It might be the part of wisdom to ignore them. I feel, however, that the interests of the Church will be better served by making them public. We have come to believe that the wholesome influence of public opinion is the cure for many ills, and sometimes men can be restrained from entertaining erroneous opinions by being shown, in a somewhat startling way, the direction in which they are tending.

I have therefore asked and secured the permission of the Bishop of New York to allow me to send to you for publication a letter, the savage bigotry of which, like a blast from hell, lights up the implications of beliefs which are seldom carried to so logical conclusions. The writer is an official of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in a western city, and the letter is written on the official stationery of the Brotherhood. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, with their manly, wholesome emphases in religion, will be quick to repudiate the opinions expressed in the accompanying letter.

HOWARD C. ROBBINS.

March 10, 1919.

The Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D.D., Bishop of New York, New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I was shocked almost beyond expression to read in a recent number of The Living Church of your plan to have services in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, during Holy Week, to be "conducted by and presided over by clergymen of other religious affiliations."

I believe I have a right to protest against such outrageous conduct on your part, because I am a churchman who has worked for some years for the "spread of Christ's Kingdom"; and because you have attempted to hold the Cathedral of St. John the Divine up before the world as the pattern for the American Church, or as the Cathedral of America; and because the Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, etc., are no more parts of the Church of Christ than the Bartenders' Union, or Tammany Hall are; while the Cathedral of St. John the Divine is a part of the One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, or would be if the Diocese of New York had a man for bishop who was qualified to be, and worthy of being, a bishop of the Church, at its head.

No man can be a minister in any of the above named and other sects unless he is a double-distilled hypocrite, or totally devoid of intelligence and learning, while the facts of history, and the teachings of Scripture, are as clear and plain as they are. And I am sure it is a crime against the Christian religion to give these fakirs any recognition.

You may probably bring out the old argument, which those who imagine they have great breadth of view, but who in fact have no depth of conviction, bring out, which is: that all baptized persons become members of the Holy Catholic Church by their Baptism. It is true that all baptized persons become members of the Holy Catholic Church by their Baptism; but they become traitors to Jesus Christ just as soon as they become members of any of the various bodies. The same principle applies in citizenship. A person may become a citizen of this country by birth. But he becomes a traitor to this country whenever he becomes a member of societies which exist for the purpose of aiding the enemies or rivals of this country. We have recently had a few examples of that kind.

If you want to be one of the sects, why don't you resign your office so that you will not disgrace the whole Church by your conduct? * * *

Practically no one outside the Church, and a very small percentage of those within the Church, know who is Bishop of New York; or whether New York has a bishop or not. There is a reason for this state of affairs. So far as we know the present bishop knows nothing of religion except as a means of a livelihood. And many of us are of the opinion that the Diocese of New York gets but little return for the salary paid its present bishop.

If one religious body is just the same as another, we are wasting a lot of money in bishop's salaries. If bishops are nothing more than business agents or business overseers, we should have them elected for a very short term; should hold them to strict account for returns, and should have the right to discharge them at any time we may wish to do so.

I am aware that this is no time for public religious controversy; but of all times, this is a time when definite religious teaching is needed more than ever before. Rome is gaining rapidly. That is evidenced by the fact that over one-third of our soldiers were of that communion. Many converts were made by Rome; perhaps more than all others can claim. This growth of Rome is due primarily to her definite teaching. The practical man of the day wants the definite and best of religion in religion, just the same as he wants the best of business in business.

The only things that are accomplished by opening our places of worship to the sects and fraternizing with them is, it tickles their vanity to have recognition of any kind from a real Church; and it causes disgust, distrust, and disrespect and dissatisfaction among our own people.

For my part I would just as soon have a professional thief, or a murderer step into our pulpit, as a sectarian preacher. In fact, I would have more confidence in the crook's honesty. For many years I have not allowed a sectarian preacher to enter my home, if I knew it. And if one got in without my knowledge in advance, he was promptly ordered out. No honest churchman can even associate with them socially.

I wonder why the real churchmen of New York do not take steps to force your resignation. If a bishop of a diocese I lived in was to arrange for a series of services with the sects, I would certainly get busy with every possible means to force him out. I should feel it to be a duty I would owe to God to do that.

Let me suggest that you read Rackham's Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, Little's Reasons for Being a Churchman, and Westcott's Catholic Principles. Then take the course of Confirmation instruction either from the Rev. Dr. — or from the Rev. Dr. — as soon as he returns home.

If you won't be a churchman, the only thing we can do is to pray very earnestly that there may soon be a vacancy in the Bishopric of New York. The sooner that may come the better. Very truly yours,

DEAN HODGES' TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

BY THE REV. HENRY BRADFORD WASHBURN, D.D.

ON January 6, 1894, Dean Hodges succeeded Dean Lawrence as dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge.

To commemorate this event, and to recognize faithful and effective service for twenty-five years, the alumni of the school met for dinner at the Hotel Thorndike, Boston, on February 26. Over one hundred men gathered to bear witness to their affection for the dean and to express to him their gratitude. It was an evening long to be remembered for its friendly feeling among the alumni and for their manifest loyalty to the dean. It was as if a large family had come together again and as if they were glad to see each other and the head of the house. This may the more truly be said, for, as Dean Hodges remarked in his address, three hundred of the four hundred graduates had passed through the school since he had become dean.

Bishop Lawrence had been asked to act as toastmaster, but he was unable to do so, being absent in the South. His place was taken by the Rev. John W. Suter, the man naturally chosen because of his many years of unselfish and helpful devotion to the school and the Alumni Association. He arranged the program with care. He gave the alumni an entertaining and inspiring evening. He offered the men a chance to sing, and with a will they sang such songs as "K'K'K'Katy," "Over There," and the school hymn. He read letters from Bishop Lawrence, Bishop Atwood and Dean Fosbrooke—letters full of the dean and of what he had meant to the school, the alumni and the Christian Church at large. They were reminiscent of days before the dean arrived in Cambridge, when he was doing a great work at Calvary, Pittsburg, writing for the papers, preaching and printing sermons of practical value; of days when he was considering the call to Cambridge, and when he was not only being looked over by the former dean and trustees, but when he was taking occasion to look them over; of days of happy fellowship during the twenty-five years in the school and in the diocese.

The speakers upon whom the toastmaster called were—Mr. Lincoln, Dean Robbins, the Rev John F. Scott, the Rev. Remsen B. Ogilby and Professor Washburn. They all had the dean in mind in what they said. They bore witness to his unfailing good temper and simple, straightforward Christianity; to the unsparing way in which he had given himself to his work; to the delightful relationship between the dean and the trustees, the dean and the faculty and the dean and the alumni; to the manner in which, through the winning phrase, the homely advice or the sententious remark he had become part of the daily life of the alumni; to the humor with which he had made the study and practice of theology bright and buoyant; to the permanent help he had been through teaching which had proven practical among the larger company represented by alumni congregations; to the honorable positions he held among Christians of all names; and to the willingness of the alumni to show their devotion to him by a renewed endeavor to rally to the support of the school during these critical days of reconstruction.

Before the toastmaster called on Dean Hodges, he gave him a present from the alumni, a silver loving cup, on which was engraved a message of gratitude and affection, and in which was another gift in gold.

The dean responded by thanking the alumni sincerely for the gift and for the genuine friendship which lay behind it. He frankly confessed that he had enjoyed listening to what had been said. And then there followed a characteristic speech, not as long as we would have had it, but full of wit and common sense.

Those of the alumni who were present will not forget the evening. We are more than ever one in our affectionate loyalty to the dean.

A CANADIAN PRIEST AND HIS FAMILY

BY THE REV. MELVILLE K. BAILEY

SEVERAL years ago I met him, when he had been near the grave and gate of death. He served two parishes, five miles apart. In the parish where he lived he had Evening Prayer and Sunday School in the afternoon. In the morning he had had Morning Prayer and Sunday School in the other, where he also had Evening Prayer at night. When the weather was good he rode his bicycle. When it was bad and in winter he walked. In a word, he held three services and preached three sermons and conducted two Sunday Schools alone and walked twenty miles every Sunday.

When England entered the war I wrote him. In reply he simply sent his photograph in an officer's uniform with this written across: "Lieut. W. P. L.—, called to the colors September —, but rejected on account of age." He was ordained in middle life, and I suppose had won his rank in the militia while still a layman.

I did not continue writing, scarcely knowing what to say, as America had not gone in, but immediately after President Wilson's proclamation on Good Friday, I wrote to his Canadian address. His wife replied that he was in England in a training camp, that their daughter had gone to Malta as a trained nurse, and two sons to France, one having been wounded, and then using his time in working for a lieutenant's commission. The only comment the brave woman made was that she hoped the war would soon be over.

Then I wrote him in England. He answered that he was serving both as chaplain and captain. He had drilled a company of Christian Indians, who had adopted him into their tribe, and then been ordered to France. He had then drilled a company of heathen Indians, who also had been sent to France, having likewise adopted him into their tribe. He regretted that they went so soon, as they were turning to the Christian faith, and complained because he was not sent to the front.

This year his letters have been from France, his desire having at last been gratified. In one of them he notes that he has passed his sixtieth year. In his last letter he writes:

"My Dear Brother: Your letter of June 7th was waiting for me yesterday as I came back from the forward Area. I would much like to tell you of some of my trips and the battle-torn fields I pass over at various times. I am in a very active, dangerous part and have almost twenty-five miles of a frontage. I am getting almost as accustomed to shell fire as I am to getting my three meals a day. Day and night I see and hear them, and also have some experience with air bombing. I go to sleep to the accompaniment and awake to the same old sound—but I may not tell you more.

"Yes, thanks be to God, America is in, heart and hand, to help out for the cause of humanity. No person knows the cunning and the military power of the enemy of mankind better than we who are over here striving for victory. May God soon give us a victorious peace. I am satisfied that America will play her part with every ounce of power she has, but what we lack most of all is the Spirit of Prayer. This is our weakness. The sword has a certain power, but God is superior to the sword, and in too many cases God has been neglected and counted as a broken link and therefore useless.

"May God's blessing rest upon you and your work. May He keep and defend you from all harm, and may He in mercy hasten the day of rightful and abiding peace."

A LITTLE WINDING ROAD

By LOUISE MARSHALL HAYNES

A LITTLE road to dip and bend,
Around each curve, a waiting friend.
A warbler's note and flash of wing,
The smile of flowers in the spring.
A little brook, whose laughter clear
Follows the pathway for good cheer.
The song of breezes in the pine—
These joys I wish you, friend of mine.

When shadows on the road grow long,
The thrush's richest evensong;
Then may the little road arise
To show the glory of the skies,
Where cloud-waves billow on a sea
That fades into eternity.
And welcome tent at hush of night,
The stars above it, clear and bright.

SHALL THE PROVINCES LIVE?

BY THE RT. REV. EDWIN S. LINES, D.D.

THE provincial system was adopted in the Church with the hope that a group of dioceses bound together, making a larger unit than the diocese, and bringing into closer association dioceses having common interests, might help to develop our resources, to bring more thorough consideration of the needs of the Church and stimulate its life. For a few years the provinces have been holding their synods, appointing commissions and committees and performing the limited duties assigned to them by the General Convention. The testimony is that, in the provinces where the delegates have come to the meetings of the synods, where important subjects have been carefully presented and discussed, and where commissions have worked during the year, good has been accomplished. Some speak slightly of the provinces as a not very useful part of our ecclesiastical organization, and of our synods as gatherings of delegates and others for discussions and addresses upon appointed subjects and as doing little more. There is a disposition to call institutions and organizations failures when they do not accomplish what is expected within a certain time. There are many who are not willing to pay the price in hard work and good thinking for good results, and they are quick to express their disappointment. Many critics of the provincial system have never given it a chance. Some dioceses elect and re-elect delegates who never attend.

Many of the clergy, for example, have been for a number of years criticizing the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, because they thought it would go on of itself when introduced, without their care and interest, and bring a harvest for which they had not sown. The same may be said of the most useful Girls' Friendly Society. Something of the same thing may be said concerning the criticisms of the results of the work of such organizations as the Board of Religious Education and the Commission on Social Service. We expect too much; we are very ready to criticize and we are not ready to pay the price for results. We often speak of men and women as failures because they have not achieved astonishingly visible results and have not had their names in the newspapers, when by their faithfulness in their places they are really among the most successful persons in the world in doing that which God gave them to do.

But to get back to the province and the provincial synod, they have accomplished very real service where they have had proper consideration shown them. Some of the provinces in the West are so large as to make the subject of readjustment already under consideration important. It is the growing feeling, however, that the province must be given more to do, more authority by the General Convention to make its position in the Church secure and to make it thoroughly useful. Busy men are not likely to give time for the annual meetings of the synods save for serious action on important subjects. There is a prejudice against the increase of machinery in the Church, although the experience of recent years suggests the great value of organization of a useful kind. As we feel the necessity of getting church people to think of the diocese and not alone of their parishes, it is very desirable to get them to think of something larger still—of the national Church and of duty toward the whole Church and toward humanity. Many persons do come to have an interest in the diocese because our system compels them to go as far as that. It may be that the province as a larger unit for action can lift them on another stage. There are often small and rather weak dioceses which would gain greatly from closer association in interest and counsel with their stronger neighbors. There are institutions which would probably be stronger if they had the province interested in them and not alone the diocese. The national organization of the Woman's Auxiliary contemplates provincial organization also. One who speaks understandingly has said that the establishment of the Geneva Summer School is in itself enough to have warranted the formation of the second province. Memorials will go to the General Convention from some of the provincial synods, especially those east of the Mississippi River, that larger powers may be given to the provinces in the hope of relieving the General Convention, which is now asked to do more than it possibly can in this short session, and also in the binding together in common undertakings groups of dioceses. Many feel that the General Convention cannot transact the business of the Church which naturally comes to it in a session of less than three weeks once in three years and with pressure to shorten the session still more.

These propositions from the synods will be made public for the consideration of our people and especially for those who are to represent the Church in the General Convention, and it is fair to ask that they have thoughtful study. It is wiser to ask if the provincial system cannot be made of real value for the Church by wise legislation than it is to criticize it severely after the few years of its existence. There are plenty of critics in the world, and it is easy to criticize every institution, including the Church itself, but wise leadership and counsel based upon experience is needed more than criticism.

The writer's opinion after considerable experience in the endeavor to arrange synods and make the provincial system work is that the provinces ought to live with more authority given them, to relieve the overburdened General Convention, to care for missionary and educational interests in their own sections, possibly to consider subjects referred to them by the General Convention.

A PRAYER FOR SCHOOLBOYS

O LORD, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear, and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in that busy world. Now, ere I enter upon it, I would commit eye, ear and thought to thee. Do thou bless them and keep their work thine, that as, through thy natural laws, my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine for them, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at those times when my mind cannot consciously turn to thee to commit each particular thought for thy service. Hear my prayer, for my dear Redeemer's sake. Amen.—Dr. Arnold of Rugby.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

CROWDS HEAR MR. TAFT AT THE ASCENSION FORUM

Says League Is Essential to Save World from Chaos

Taking the ground that it was absolutely necessary for the United States to become a member of the League of Nations for the preservation of civilization in Europe and ultimately in this country, former President William Howard Taft appealed last Sunday night to an audience of 1,500 at the Public Forum of the Church of the Ascension, New York, for hearty support of the league. He drew a graphic picture of the chaos that would follow any plan that fell short of complete unity of the civilized world, and saw nothing but untold horror of wars ten times as destructive as the last, unless covenants were made among nations to prevent them.

When a voice from the audience called for the inclusion of the self-determination of Ireland in the peace settlement, Mr. Taft answered with an emphatic "No!" following it with the expression of his belief that no internal questions should becloud the issue of an agreement among the nations that have been at war.

The church was crowded to the doors long before the opening of the service and many hundreds were refused admission. Many times throughout the address the audience applauded with great vigor when Mr. Taft pleaded for American participation in the League.

The following resolution, offered by someone in the audience and presented by Mr. George Gordon Battle, was passed unanimously, except for loud "nos" by the Irish present:

WHEREAS, the American people stood unitedly behind President Wilson in his efforts to make the world safe for democracy by winning the war, it is just as necessary now for him in his endeavor to insure the peace of the world; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Public Forum, Inc., of the Church of the Ascension, stand behind President Wilson and the Honorable William H. Taft in their laudable efforts for a League of Nations, and that we favor the entrance of the United States into such a League as may be adequate to safeguard the peace that has been won by the joint forces of the Allied Nations.

Russian Church Convention send brotherly greetings to the Anglican and Eastern Association and begs you to accept its congratulations for good works.

PRESIDENT OF CHURCH CONVENTION.

Commodore Bourne Dies

Commodore Frederick Gilbert Bourne, widely known as a churchman, financier, yachtsman and clubman, and until a few years ago president of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, died Sunday afternoon at his country estate, Indian Neck Hall, Oakdale, Long Island. Commodore Bourne, who was in his sixty-eighth year, had been in ill-health for several months.

A son of the late Rev. George Washington Bourne and Mrs. Harriet Gilbert Bourne, he began his career as a clerk at the Mercantile Library, which was frequently visited by Alfred Corning Clark, who had inherited from his father, Edward Clark, an estate valued at $20,000,000, including large interests in the Singer Sewing Machine Company. Mr. Bourne also sang in the choir of the church of which Mr. Clark was a member.

Retaining from his younger days an interest in music, Commodore Bourne in April, 1914, presented $500,000 to the trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine as an endowment for the choir school connected with the cathedral.

Mr. Bourne was a trustee of the cathedral, and formerly communicant of the Church of the Incarnation.

CLERGYMAN'S SON RECEIVES RECOGNITION OF COURAGE

D. S. C. Awarded for Extraordinary Action in October

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—First Lieutenant Frederick DeVeber Sill of Cohoes, son of the Rev. Dr. F. S. Sill, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for acts of extraordinary heroism.

As a lieutenant of Co. F, 105th Engineers, 30th Division, A. E. F., in command of two platoons, on Oct. 8, 1918, near Panchaux and Geneve, France, he performed the difficult task of laying the tape for the jumping off line, and also for the support line on the night preceding the attack of Oct. 8. Despite the fact that one battalion had changed its line on the 7th, and that he had to face a continuous fire of trench mortars and machine guns, he performed a mission which would have been extremely difficult even under normal conditions, requiring technical and deliberate judgment, but under actual conditions it was almost impossible of execution. In spite of the heavy shelling and machine gun fire, Lieut. Sill successfully accomplished his work in ample time for the troops to form and move off with the barrage. The troops were the 117th Infantry of the 30th Division.

While returning to headquarters Lieut. Sill carried his wounded orderly through a heavy barrage of machine gun and artillery fire until assistance could be secured. His coolness and successful handling of his extremely difficult task was most praiseworthy and merits unstinted commendation. The wording of the above citation is taken from the General Orders No. 2 of the Headquarters 30th Division, January 10, 1919, Major General Lewis commanding, and from the Washington citation of March 1, announcing the award of the D. S. C.

New Bible Society President

The Board of managers of the American Bible Society at a meeting March 10 elected Mr. Churchill H. Cutting as president of the society. Mr. Cutting is a retired merchant, residing at 37 Madison avenue, New York City. He is a prominent Baptist layman.

EXTENSIVE WORK UNDER WAY FOR MERCHANT SEAMEN

Seamen's Church Institute of America Sets Machinery Going

Equipped to fulfill its dreams of many years, to establish in every port in the United States a work for seamen worthy of the Episcopal Church, the Seamen's Church Institute of America is now carrying out its plans. The Rev. George W. Davenport, recently appointed the executive secretary of the institute, is established at the organization's headquarters in New York.

The Seamen's Church Institute is the creation of the General Convention of 1907. In 1916 the institute adopted its articles of affiliation and was launched as an organization. In the fall of 1918 the executive committee, conscious of the need of an executive secretary through whom the extensive program planned might be brought to fruition, appealed to the War Commission of the Church for an appropriation which would maintain such a secretary in the field. The Seamen's Church Institute of New York had already generously provided $1,000 toward this purpose. The War Commission granted the appropriation asked for, $7,000.

The purposes of the Seamen's Church Institute, which will be carried into effect by Mr. Davenport, are well stated in the articles of affiliation, as follows:

The institute shall endeavor:

1. To initiate and arouse interest in religious and philanthropic work at every port where such work has not already been established.

2. To support, as may be advisable, such work in ports where local interests and resources fail to meet the need.

3. To develop interest in such ports, to the end that each local agency may become self-supporting as soon as possible.

4. To unite, so far as practicable, the several independent agencies operating in a single port.

5. To co-ordinate agencies at all ports by establishing common methods, activities, seamen's organizations, means of dealing with undesirables, general standards of conduct, etc.

6. To affiliate all existing church agencies to the end that the aforesaid methods, and such others as may be agreed upon, shall be carried out, due regard being had for the local autonomy of each affiliated agency.

The Church of England has maintained work for merchant seamen in the ports on the Pacific Coast, such as Seattle, Tacoma, San Francisco, San Pedro, San Diego and Portland. Arrangements are under way by the institute to take over the work in these ports, to reorganize and to enlarge it. The port of San Francisco has already been taken over, and it is the purpose of the institute to create work in every port in the United States which will compare favorably with the remarkable work already established in New York. The ports of Porto Rico, the Philippines and other dependencies will be counted as fields for such development by the institute.

The importance of the work among seamen was emphasized in a letter from the Rev. G. F. Wilson, general superintendent of the missions of the Church of England, written with the approval of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, in which occurred the following words:

"For sixty years the Church of England, through our society, has established seamen's churches and institutes in 124 ports all over the world, supplying chaplains, maintaining mission launches, and generally looking after our seamen. This work has been primarily among merchant seamen.

"Your country to-day is establishing a mercantile marine which will probably rival ours in tonnage and importance. Your leaders are urging your youth to adopt it as a profession. Your seaborne trade in future will be employing hundreds of thousands of American-born youths.

"We venture to think that a wonderful opportunity thus comes to the American Episcopal Church of influencing a vast number of American men. Your fine institutes in New York, Boston, and San Francisco are well known to us, and we are subsidizing similar places in Tacoma and Honolulu.

"We should like to suggest to you, if we may, that the moment has now come for the American Episcopal Church to put into active operation the machinery it created at the General Convention of 1907, and form a strong committee to co-ordinate existing Seamen's Church Institutes, and to found new ones, both on the American Continent and wherever abroad the American flag flies."

The Rev. George W. Davenport, formerly rector of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vermont, comes highly recommended for the task of executive secretary. For nearly four years he has been rector of the most important parish in Vermont, where he made a signal contribution to the development of the parish, and also made an impress by his leadership along moral and ethical lines upon the community at large. When we entered the war he was the first to organize his parish to meet the needs of the 8,000 men in training at Fort Ethan Allen and inspired other bodies to do the same, so that when the Fosdick Commission sent a representation to Burlington to organize the community for soldiers' welfare he found that Mr. Davenport had anticipated every suggestion which the commission was ready to make.

St. Paul's was one of the first of the larger parishes of the country to become free as a result of the war. For three years Mr. Davenport was provincial secretary of the Province of New England, and for eleven years previously had been rector of St. James' Church, Danbury, Connecticut.

Mr. Davenport purposes making a survey of the ports, getting into touch with the work already in existence, and then trying to build up in each port groups of clergymen and laymen who would be interested in helping to adopt the plan of the work.

Through the United States Shipping Board over 4,000 Americans are every month entering the service of the merchant marine. The Seamen's Church Institute of America, whose service is not limited by nationality, will appeal to the Church at home and in England for support of its work which will be of such supreme importance for American and English seamen.

BISHOP TUTTLE PREACHES ON WASHINGTON'S STRENGTH

Urges First President's Americanism as Example for Us

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—At a recent service at the Church of the Ascension, the preacher was Bishop Tuttle who set for himself the topic of George Washington as a leader in reconstruction after the war of the revolution. The service was under the auspices of the Missouri Society of the Sons of the Revolution, of which Bishop Tuttle is the chaplain.

The bishop took his text from the prophecy of Isaiah, "And I will fasten him as a strong nail in a sure place, and they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house." To demonstrate the aptness of the text, the preacher quoted Jefferson's words to Washington in 1793, when Washington was debating whether to stand for a second term: "The confidence of the whole country is centered in you. North and South will hang together if they have you to hang on." Referring to the constitutional convention the preacher said: "Into the cauldron of that four months' debate were cast thirteen separate sovereignties, eternally counteracting each other. Out of it came the new birth of a nation which had no existence before. Personal rectitude and his country's real welfare and liberty's entrenchment were the only considerations that had the value of an atom's weight with Washington."

"I bring to you Washington's own exhortation: 'Reverence religion. Diffuse knowledge throughout your land. Patronize the arts and sciences. Let liberty and order be inseparable companions. Control party spirit, the bane of free governments. Observe good faith. Cultivate peace with all nations. Shut up every avenue to foreign influence. Contract rather than extend national connection. Rely on yourselves alone. Be American in thought and word and deed.'"

Dr. Denlinger Is Deposed

WHEREAS, the Rev. Henry K. Denlinger, D. D., a presbyter of this diocese and sometime rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles in the Borough of Manhattan; and the Rev. Vicente A. Tuzzio, a presbyter of this diocese and sometime an assistant minister of Calvary Parish in the Borough of Manhattan, have each, in writing, renounced the ministry of this Church; and

WHEREAS, a sentence of suspension was pronounced in each case for six months, and the renunciation was not withdrawn within that period,

Therefore, Know all men by these presents, that I, David Hummell Greer, Bishop of the Diocese of New York, in the presence of the Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, presbyter, and the Rev. E. Briggs Nash, presbyter, at the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine in St. James's Chapel, on the twenty-fifth day of February, nineteen hundred and nineteen, in accordance with the provisions of Canon 33, Section 1 of the Constitution and Canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, do pronounce and record that the said Henry K. Denlinger and Vicente A. Tuzzio, for causes not affecting their moral character, are hereby deposed from the Ministry of this Church, and from all rights and privileges of the same.

DAVID H. GREER,
Bishop of New York.
New York, February 28, 1919.

BODIES OF AMERICANS SHOULD REMAIN IN FRANCE

Says Dr. Shipman in First Sermon After Return Home

The bodies of American boys who died in France should be permitted to rest there, declared the Rev. Herbert Shipman Sunday morning in the Church of the Heavenly Rest. This was his first sermon since his return last week from France, where he was chaplain of the First American Army Corps.

"May God over all, men and women, let them sleep in the soil of France," said Dr. Shipman, and he added that the French women and children vie with each other in caring for these American white crossed graves. He said the fact that American boys slept there would be a perpetual bond between the United States and France.

Dr. Shipman went over last May as chaplain of the 104th United States field artillery. His first promotion was as senior chaplain of the Paris district. His second was as senior chaplain of the First Army Corps, which took him to the front.

"That was the happiest day of my life," said Dr. Shipman. "This was because at last it meant the grim reality of the front," he said.

"Germany remembered and prepared for everything except that men have consciences and that there is a God," declared the chaplain. "God is still calling us. The victory is not all won. To make a League of Nations effective it must be under the command of Jesus Christ. That is your cause and my cause."

Dr. Shipman read a letter of appreciation which the men of the 104th artillery presented to him with more than one thousand signatures when he was ordered detached and sent to Paris.

"After the last service the boys formed in single file and we all cried together as they marched by shaking my hands goodbye," he said. "This change meant that I no longer had a body of men that I loved and could call all my own. Some of those men who wrote their names there will never write them again."

Dr. Shipman said that he had been sent to Paris to help to bury the dead.

"There had been complaints that our boys did not get decent burial," he stated. "But this could not well be helped. We were able to organize the work so that every American boy who dies in a Paris hospital is buried reverently, with military honors, in a coffin, and with the service of his own Church.

"The month that I was there not a day passed that I did not lay to rest from ten to twenty-five of our boys."

B. J. Davis Deposed

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—The bishop has issued the following notice of deposition:

"Notice is hereby given that on Tuesday, February 18, 1919, in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Paul, Los Angeles, in the presence of two Presbyters of the Church, the Very Rev. William McCormack, D.D., and the Rev. J. D. H. Browne, I deposed from the sacred office of the ministry Benjamin Joseph Davis, presbyter.

This deposition was pronounced at his own request and with the consent of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Los Angeles.

JOSEPH J. JOHNSON,
Bishop of Los Angeles.

BISHOP LAWRENCE URGES IMPORTANCE OF CONFIRMED

Church Ten Years Hence Will Be Moulded by Them

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—In his letter to those who have been confirmed in the Diocese of Massachusetts during the last five years, and who attended special services arranged for them on the same Sunday as a part of the twenty weeks' campaign, Bishop Lawrence said, in part:

"Since I was confirmed, many, many years ago, the changes of habits of thought and of practical life have been enormous. They will be greater in the next generation. Your religious future can be met by each one of you in one of three ways. You can stand rigid in everything, never change your opinions or your religious habits a bit, never move, and never grow. The result will be that your spiritual life will crystallize, harden and cease to be a life. You can go to the other extreme, and change your methods and opinions with every movement of thought, with the result that you will be nothing more than a bit of driftwood on the surface of life. You will have no strength or stability of character, and you will have the serious respect of no one. Or in the third place, you will, like a living tree, keep the roots of your deeper convictions strongly fixed in the Christian faith; you will, however, have such elasticity of thought and habit that you will, like a living tree, meet the storms and winds and sunshine swinging and elastic, but always firm, thus ever growing and bearing a richer fruitage.

"What, therefore, I urge is a deep and strong loyalty to the truths of Christ and His Church, guided by an intelligent and thoughtful conscience. This loyalty must show itself in a practical way by habitual faithfulness to the Church. We have no idea of the weakening impression that we give to others who have only a vague interest in the Church if we who are communicants of the Church are ready to put the Church last and everything else first. If the question comes of the convenience of a guest or a motor ride or a pleasant excursion, and we know that our duty is to the Church, and yet—at first occasionally and then habitually—put these things first and the Church last, going when it is convenient or when there is nothing else to do, we have shown to others what little value we put upon worship, and we are gradually disintegrating our loyalty to the Church.

"And when I say the Church, I mean not only the Church at large, but our own parish. Those who neglect their duty to their village are not usually those who do their duty by their nation. Loyalty to village means loyalty to country. Those who vaguely express their loyalty to the Church and do not turn in with definite activity to their parish are not the ones usually who do their best by the whole Church. Of course parishes are not all that we could wish; sermons are not always interesting; but what we who are communicants of the Church want to keep in mind is this, that as members of the Church our first question is not, 'What can we get out of the parish?' but 'What can be put in?' I can think now of men and women belonging to weaker parishes and missions who have by their devotion so thrown themselves into the work that they have made the parish strong and living.

"You who have been confirmed in the last five years will in ten years be the strength or else weakness of the Church. The final testing of the strength of the Church is in the character of its members. You recall the answer of King Albert of Belgium when the Germans rebuked him for not letting them march through. 'You would,' they said, 'have been paid in full. You would not have lost your people and your cities.' 'True,' was his answer, 'but Belgium would have lost her soul.'

"The experiences of the last years have shown people as never before the value of spiritual things as compared with material; the worth of the soul as compared with the worth of popular success; and the coming years will reveal a type of sainthood which we trust will be finer and nobler than that of any in the past. Keep your ideals. Refresh your spirit and life by daily prayer and the services of the Church. Be faithful at the Holy Communion, and in all humility seek for the finest type of sainthood."

Helpful Rule for Lent

Dr. Stires, of St. Thomas's Church, New York, has issued the following suggestions to his parishioners under the caption, "A GOOD RULE FOR LENT": 1. Make your daily prayers very real. 2. Regularly attend as many as possible of the services. 3. Try to bring some one with you. 4. Meditate daily upon some part of God's Word, and apply its comfort, warning or command to yourself. 5. Develop new resources in mind and soul by reading instructive books on the great moral problems of our time.

6. Refrain from the ordinary round of social functions and entertainments. Protect the spirit and atmosphere of Lent for yourself and others. 7. Forgive those who have injured you. Seek forgiveness of those you have wronged. 8. Practice self-denial often, and try to make the result helpful to others. 9. Pray for God's blessing upon your parish, that the clergy may be wise and devoted, the people loyal and responsive. 10. Thank God for the victory won in France. Pray that our country and our allies may extend the victory by applying the ideals for which we fought. Pray for vision, courage and devotion, that we may be worthy of those who died for us, and that we in our turn may win the victory of life.

WILL BE FIELD SECRETARY FOR TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

The Rev. Douglas Matthews Resigns His Rectorship in Nutley

NUTLEY, NEW JERSEY.—The Rev. Douglas Matthews has tendered his resignation as rector of Grace Church here to accept the position of field secretary of the Church Temperance Society. For a year and a half he has been acting as volunteer speaker for the organization, and now, upon invitation of the society, will devote himself entirely to its work, beginning April 1.

Under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. James Empringham, general superintendent, the society is enlarging its activities and is planning to develop and carry on its work in such a way that it will occupy the same relative position of importance in the Episcopal Church that similar organizations hold in other denominations. The staff has been steadily augmented and it is proposed to continue increasing it until it is possible to cover the entire church in its field of operation.

Mr. Matthews has held his present charge over seven years. During that time the membership of the church has been doubled, its finances have been placed upon a strong foundation, the rented pew system has been abolished, and the edifice has been beautified to an extent that marks it as one of the most beautiful churches in the country.

Advocating church unity, Mr. Matthews has exerted a decided influence in that direction in his community, bringing the various denominations together at times for union services.

While discussing the possibilities before him, as he sees them, Mr. Matthews said:

"The temperance forces of America today have a great vision; it is nothing less than that of ridding the whole earth of the curse of alcohol. We have arrived at a time in history when all of our great problems must be considered in world terms. Here at home in America there is a very definite propaganda organized and financed by the brewing interests to discredit the eighteenth (prohibition) amendment to the Constitution, and it's only fair to acknowledge that by dwelling upon the false issue of personal liberty, upon alleged increased taxation, and the assertion that this amendment has been passed before the people really knew what was happening, they are creating the counter current of opposition. The need for unremitting activities on the part of the friends of temperance was never so great as today."

At the Duluth Cathedral

DULUTH.—Trinity Cathedral has just received a most welcome gift of a font cover and ewer, both of brass. The gift is from Mrs. Parker M. Paine, of Duluth, the font cover being a memorial for her sister, Vida Mary Gurlitz, and the ewer a memorial for her little daughter, Vida Katherine Paine. The men of Trinity Cathedral have recently organized a Men's Club. Their first undertaking was to entertain the working forces of the women's organizations with a banquet, given in the parish hall. The club itself is to meet periodically for discussion on topics of the day relating to the church and to civic matters.

CHRISTIAN UNITY MOVE AT LOUISVILLE CATHEDRAL

Bishop Woodcock Asks Clergymen of Other Churches to Present Views

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.—Another milestone in the nation-wide movement towards Christian unity is expected to result from the action of Bishop Woodcock, in inviting representatives of seven of Louisville's leading churches to tell what they have to offer towards a reunited Christian Church.

The bishop's invitations have met with eager response and at a special 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon service, March 23, in Christ Church Cathedral, the first of seven special services, will be held. The speakers and the dates they will appear are as follows:

March 23—Baptists, the Rev. William Warren Landrum.

March 30—Disciples of Christ, the Rev. E. L. Powell.

April 6—Lutherans and Affiliated Bodies, the Rev. S. S. Waltz.

April 13—Methodists, the Rev. Frank M. Thomas.

April 20—Presbyterians, the Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden.

April 27—Roman Catholics, the Rev. Father Schuhmann.

May 4—Episcopalians, Bishop Woodcock. Bishop Woodcock's invitations to the Roman Catholics and the leading Protestant denominations to present their claims have caused considerable comment in Louisville religious circles.

NEED FOR CHRISTIAN UNITY.

The bishop's letter of invitation to the various non-Episcopalian clergymen follows:

"My Dear Brother—We have recently passed through bitter experiences which have drawn the hearts of men closer together during all the anxious days in which we have watched and prayed. As a result our common sufferings have united us in a closer bond of fellowship.

"During the dark days of the war there came a time when men felt the sore need of a common front, of a central purpose, and the unity of powers. Men did not deny loyalty to country, nor compromise principles in being known and proud to call themselves allies.

"To-day Christianity is more divided than the world. There is no lessening of belief, no greater weakness of faith, but there still exists our unhappy divisions over which we ourselves are unhappy. What may we do to heal the wounds in the body of Christianity? What are we willing to do?

"Christianity needs all her friends in this awakened world of a new era. Do we not feel the sore want of unity and hear the call of a common purpose? To us it is clear that Christianity is greater than any of its parts. The feeling of fellowship has grown until it is keen enough to desire brotherhood and unity. Just as a country is greater than any political party within that country, in the same manner Christianity is greater than any single body within Christianity. We are coming to feel that our honor is not that we are called by this name or that, but that we are honored by the fact that we are Christians. Whatever unifies Christianity strengthens the whole cause of Christ.

"To put ourselves on record as desiring Christian unity and as being ready and desirous to further this cause, a series of conferences has been arranged whereby great hopes are aroused that something may be done to advance this great end. "I am calling together some whom I believe to be deeply interested in this matter to take part in these conferences and among them is yourself. The committee which presents this invitation will explain the scope and purpose of these conferences to you. I am relying on your helpful assistance.

"It will be understood that these conferences are not, and ought not, to be of a controversial nature; that would destroy their purpose. The purpose is to draw us together in our agreements and common belief. Our differences have divided us, let them at this time sink out of sight. Our agreements can unite us. Let us bind up what is broken and heal the causes that separate us. In this spirit let us seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit for the healing of our unhappy divisions looking for the day when in spirit and in truth we shall rejoice in the blessing of Christian unity.

"Feeling that you have something to contribute in promoting the bonds of fellowship and unity, will you not accept my urgent and cordial invitation to tell this conference what your church is ready and willing to contribute to help bind up the broken body of Christianity? We must all pray and work if our hopes and prayers are to come true.

"Believe me, in the fellowship of Christ. Sincerely your brother.

"CHARLES E. WOODCOCK,
"Bishop of Kentucky."

MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP AT BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL

Fund in Memory of Only Theological Soldier-Student Killed

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—Among all the undergraduate students who went into the war from the divinity schools of the Episcopal Church it fell to one only to give up his life on the field of battle. That one was Harold Colthurst Mills of Berkeley Divinity School.

Some of Lieutenant Mills' fellow-students are working for the "Mills Memorial Scholarship." They desire to raise at least $6,000 to be given to the Berkeley Divinity School, the income to be used to prepare young men for the ministry of the Episcopal Church, primarily returning soldiers, then those who intend to give their lives to missionary work. They have formed a committee, of which the Rev. H. Daniels, Pittsfield, Massachusetts, is chairman, and the Rev. H. J. Edwards, Middletown, Connecticut, secretary. They will welcome contributions large or small toward this fund. Mr. Robert C. Hill, 143 Liberty Street, New York, is treasurer.

Lieutenant Mills was the embodiment of that fine spirit of chivalry and unselfish devotion which characterized so many thousands of our American youth when the great crisis came. He was a son of the parsonage; his father, the Rev. Seth A. Mills, is rector of St. Luke's Church, Troy, New York. As a boy his ambition was to become a soldier; then his thoughts turned to a higher warfare and he decided to give his life to the work of the Christian ministry. In 1915 he graduated from Trinity College, and in the fall of that year he entered the Berkeley Divinity School.

His two years in the Divinity School gave great promise of future usefulness, and showed that he possessed rare qualities of mind and heart. He looked forward eagerly to work in some missionary

ENGLISH BISHOPS SUPPORT THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Find Difficulty in Understanding At- titude of America

By James Cairns

LONDON.—With the opening of Parliament, Convocation was at last free to meet. The bishops attended the House of Lords to hear the King's speech, and thereafter assembled in Convocation. Their first business was to send an address to the King, in which they pledged themselves to further the scheme for the League of Nations, and to "work for a better England" (as the popular phrase now goes) after the war.

The Bishop of London spoke of the urgency of the housing problem: there were moral evils in the present overcrowding. And indeed every parish priest must agree with the bishop. You in America can scarcely imagine how pressing this problem has become to us: no houses built in the last five years, and many in bad repair. Parishes which have no clergy houses are at their wits' end to find accommodation for their curates. Bishops are necessarily out of contact with such difficulties, and the Bishop of London did well to make them realize their urgency.

On the League of Nations scheme the bishops seem to be unanimous, and the Bishop of Oxford found it difficult to understand the American attitude on the subject. We had "the utmost difficulty in finding out what was the attitude of America," notwithstanding the utterances of President Wilson and Mr. Taft.

APPEAL FOR INTERCESSIONS FOR PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

An appeal to Christians in the United States and Canada has been issued by the Committee of Reference and Council of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America asking for intercessions for the peace conference. Says the appeal:

"We issue this appeal for prayer, asking that the Christian public of the United States and Canada and also our missionaries abroad give themselves to such regular and occasional individual intercessions as may be possible until the peace negotiations shall have been completed; that they remember these great needs at the family altar and at all public services; and that the noon hour of each day be used as a momentary reminder of this great obligation to prayer and as an opportunity for such intercession."

field, Alaska being the special field of his choice.

In the summer of 1917 he volunteered, was trained at Fort Benjamin Harrison and Fort Niagara, and gained a lieutenant's commission. On the third of January, 1918, the day before his twenty-third birthday, he sailed for France.

All know the story of the United States Marines, and the stand they made at Château Thierry and Belleau Wood in June, 1918. Lieutenant Mills' regiment was in the thick of the fighting. On July 9 he was promoted to the position of quartermaster of the first battalion "in recognition of his efficient, cool, tactful, and persevering work," but on the same day he was severely wounded by a high explosive shell, and on July 17 he died.

GENERAL WOOD HELPS TO LAUNCH SEWANEES CAMPAIGN

Very Much Alive Organization Will Raise $1,000,000

CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE.—From the standpoint of organization of the Church for Christian education, the enthusiasm of those present, and the far-reaching effect of what was accomplished, one of the most important conferences in the history of the Church was held here on the occasion of the launching of a million dollar campaign for the University of the South at Sewanee. The meeting was held on Monday February 24 when it was difficult for clergymen to be away from their posts, and the notable fact about it was the large proportion of laymen present and the earnestness with which every detail was discussed and every action taken by the 300 delegates present from all over the South.

Heretofore adequate use has not been made of the machinery the Church possesses, but hereafter, at least in the dioceses which are affiliated with Sewanee, there will be an organization of laymen as the result of this campaign which will be a tower of strength for the furtherance of all Church purposes.

GENERAL WOOD GETS OVATION.

Major General Leonard Wood of the United States Army, who is chairman of the general committee, presided at the conference and was given an ovation to which he was repeatedly forced to rise and make acknowledgment. In taking the chair General Wood outlined the purpose of the meeting. "We are here" he said "to formally launch a campaign for a million dollars of endowment for the University of the South—University of the South in name, but in fact a university of the whole country, because Sewanee is one hundred per cent. American. As a result of the war new problems are facing our country, problems which can only be met and solved by men of Christian education from institutions such as Sewanee. It is not necessary for me to thank you for coming here, for those who know Sewanee love her and they have always shown their spirit by making any sacrifices and rendering any service asked in her behalf. We are all here for one purpose, to formulate the necessary plans to raise this million dollars. And so deserving is the cause and so faithful are the friends of Sewanee I am sure success will crown our efforts."

The invocation was asked by the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, chaplain of the University of the South. Leland Rankin was elected secretary. Many telegrams from prominent men expressing regret at their inability to be present and pledging their support were read by Bishop Knight.

Bishop Gailor of Tennessee spoke with eloquence and great power on "Christ in Education," declaring that without Christ there can be no education nor literature nor civilization.

Ex-United States Senator Leroy Percy of Mississippi speaking on "Sewanee's Relation to the South" referred to the world war for evidence that Christian education is the leaven the world must have. Through the ages and the nations he traced the need of the liberation of men from the bonds of ignorance and the belief that might makes right. Trained Christian thinking is necessary before men can appreciate their responsibilities. He declared that Sewanee stands without a peer as the one great opportunity of the Church and nation to recreate men and establish in their hearts and souls the human ideals and spiritual graces that make men great.

Bishop Knight, vice-chancellor of the University of the South, outlined the needs of Sewanee and the plan for the endowment campaign. Three years ago a debt of $300,000 had accumulated and a campaign was conducted by which that sum was raised, and the institution is now practically free from debt.

Anticipating question as to what would be done when this million dollar endowment is in hand Bishop Knight said that for one thing Sewanee would not be bothered by again running into debt and for another the salaries of professors would be increased. At the present time the maximum salary paid is $2,000 a year. "We have outstanding men at Sewanee," he said, "and we cannot keep them or get others when starvation salaries are adhered to and other universities are offering them better pay."

Mr. Wickes Wamboldt, director of the campaign, explained that his organization was based on business principles with intelligent energy and experience behind it. He said that three things would always be kept in view—to get a million dollars for Sewanee, to make the University intimately known in every locality and to more closely knit the machinery of the Episcopal Church.

Resolutions endorsing the campaign were adopted unanimously and diocesan chairmen were appointed. At night the conference was closed with a brilliant banquet given by the citizens of Chattanooga, at which further splendid addresses were made and great enthusiasm was aroused.

ENGLISH CHURCH DISCUSSES ST. SOPHIA RESTORATION

Would Supply Need of a Great Symbol, Says Bishop Gore

LONDON.—It is perhaps a pity that it has apparently been left to the English Church Union alone to advocate the giving back of St. Sophia at Constantinople to Christians. The E. C. U. has, however, secured the powerful advocacy of the Bishop of Oxford, who feels very strongly on the point. "The moment" he declared at a meeting, "demands a great symbol, and no symbol could be greater than the restoration of St. Sophia to its ancient glory." He scoffed at the fear of Mohammedan feeling.

The Church Times prints two letters, one from Theod. Velliantes, Deputy for Corfu, and another from the Rev. J. A. Sharrock, formerly a missionary in India, both of which claim that Mohammedans would perfectly understand the action of the Allied Powers if the church was taken away from the Turks, and handed over to the Greeks.

But the question is not so simple as it looks, and much depends on the future of Constantinople itself. There is indeed another body of Churchmen and Nonconformists who are agitating for the removal of the Turkish Government from Constantinople. Meantime the Challenge pours scorn on the whole movement. It believes that Moslem opinion would be dangerously inflamed by such an act, and probably our diplomatists take the same view.

Clergy of Other Churches Will Preach

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.—One of the features of the first lenten program of St. John's Church here will be a series of sermons by other than clergy of our own church. Six of the leading ministers of the city have accepted the invitation of the Rev. Dr. Murray to address the congregation on the general theme "Christ in the New Age."

PARISH HAS NEW KIND OF EVERY MEMBER CAMPAIGN

New Men's Club in Rome Works Out Unique Program

ROME, NEW YORK.—Zion Church, of which the Rev. Eugene S. Pearce is rector, is launching a unique, business-like movement to be known as an "Every Member Campaign for Greater Church Loyalty and Interest." The campaign began on Ash Wednesday and will continue during the six weeks of Lent. Thorough preparation has been made, literature prepared, much publicity has been secured, and about eighty members of the parish have been enlisted as active workers and carefully prepared for their duties.

The project began with the formation of a men's club some six weeks ago, which has chosen as a name "The Ignotus Club of Zion Church." Their motto is "Zeal for Zion," and their aim "More man power in the Church." The name of the club is printed as an acrostice on the literature issued.

Investigate our Aims.

Give liberally of your time.

Never forget our meetings.

Our members are hustlers.

Together we win.

Understand!! We need YOU.

Slackers not wanted.

Character is essential.

Loyalty is demanded.

Unity is expected.

Brotherhood is developed.

The club has prepared and will issue six circular letters to the men of the parish which the Boy Scouts will deliver on Mondays as a part of their lenten work. These will be followed up by telephone calls on Tuesday nights. The first letter contained the lenten program and called upon the men to begin keeping Lent by being present at church on Ash Wednesday night, and invited them to attend, after the service, the "open meeting" of the club. Attention was also called to the Sunday services and the men were reminded that whatever else may be their business, it ought to be their business to go to church. "To be absent from the ballot booth and to be absent from the services of the church are kindred failures in our duty to God and Society."

The open meetings to which reference is made are to occur weekly in the parish hall, and the men are allowed to smoke, if they desire. On all Wednesdays except Ash Wednesday and Wednesday in Holy Week doughnuts and coffee will be served. But the main feature will be that four men will assume the characters in Atwater's book, The Episcopal Church and Its Message to Men of Today. Leaders are appointed to continue the discussion so that other men will be tempted to ask questions.

The campaign canvassers have been instructed for two weeks and will start on no visit until they have knelt down and said a prayer for God's blessing on their work. They are to keep in touch with the people whom they have visited and regard them as special charges. These workers will be equipped with slips containing a "Pledge for Parish Service" and a "Pledge for Personal Service." The pledge for parish service is made by indicating a desire to join a particular parish organization of which there are six for women and girls, two for boys, and two for men; the Church School being listed for both sexes. The pledge for personal service includes Bible reading, prayer and service attendance.

BOSTON

Ash-Wednesday in Boston.—At St. Paul's Cathedral Dean Rousmaniere preached at the 10:30 service at which the Holy Communion was celebrated. He asked his hearers to consider Lent as a time when the call comes to view the world as Christ views it. He referred to the vision of John as recorded in Revelation, where the apostle was called to share the great vision with Christ.

"The unseen is constantly mingled with the seen, if only we have Christ's eyes to see it," declared the dean; "and so, in the hearts of men, there is coming a response to the call of God and we are asked to catch the same vision. It is only by seeing clearly that we can live aright. What Christ sees today is His own presence in human life: for, in spite of all appearances, the world is under divine guidance, and, of the many accepted facts, God is the most real of all. Once we catch the vision our own lives will be more sure, thoughtful, reverent, full of greater hope and poise and ease. Christ asks us to share in the larger vision, to enlarge our own sphere of possibility and to recognize in others a capacity for knowing God, a capacity for higher ideals."

At an earlier service St. Paul's Society at Harvard attended a corporate Communion service, at which the celebrant was the Rev. Ernest J. Dennen, archdeacon of Boston.

In his address at Trinity Church the Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., the rector, spoke of the importance of Jesus Christ entering into men's souls and dwelling there with a seven-fold power. He pictured world conditions in the light of the moral conflict that has been raging and claimed that the great victory that has been achieved cannot stand unless the world is prepared to welcome a new spirit of trusting, generous brotherhood. Lent, therefore, offers an opportunity for the practice of those Christian virtues which make men submissive to the things of the spirit; it is pre-eminently a season for self-examination, something, Dr. Mann declared, that is vitally necessary in everyone's life.

"It is our duty to seek our besetting sin and to gird ourselves for the conflict against it, so that we may be set free for the real work of Lent, which is to strive to live more within the compass of Christ's ideas, to engage more in prayer, to indulge in more serious thoughts, to seek more self-control."

At the Church of the Advent, where the Rev. W. H. van Allen, S.T.D., was both the celebrant at the Holy Communion as well as the preacher, there was a large congregation. He left with his people the thought that it was their duty to express in look and word and deed the spirit of kindness toward everyone. "Let us try during Lent," he said, "to be patient, to be gentle, to make allowances, to see if we cannot echo more sweetly the word of God. If we go apart, we shall find Lent a time of rest, and if we keep this season as we should we will all approach Easter in a new spirit and get a taste of what the immortal life is to be."

Lieutenant-General of Church Fraternity.—The Rev. George A. Barrow, Ph.D., of St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, Massachusetts, was the preacher at the annual pre-convention service of the Knights of Washington, held this year in Christ Church, New Haven, Connecticut. At the convention Dr. Barrow was elected Lieutenant-General of the order. This is a young men's fraternity of the Episcopal Church and is entering upon its tenth year. Its founder and General is the Rev. Floyd and was assisted by Dean Rousmaniere.

Funeral of Mrs. Osgood.—The funeral of Mrs. George Osgood, the wife of the venerable rector of Grace Church, North Attleboro, and the mother of the Rev. Phillips Osgood, of the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia, was held in Grace Church, North Attleboro, on Wednesday, February 26. Bishop Babcock officiated and was assisted by Dean Rousmaniere.

CHARLES CHASE WILSON.

ALBANY

Meeting of Clericus.—The March meeting of the Clericus was held on the afternoon of the 3rd in the Guild House of the cathedral; the Rev. E. W. Babcock of Troy read a very interesting essay on the New Hymnal. In the essay and in the discussion many interesting reminiscences of the making and use of the Tucker Hymnal were told and enjoyed.

Gifts and Improvements.—Trinity Church, Gloversville, the Rev. Donald M. Green, rector, has installed a new electric lighting system in the church. A new roof is to be placed on the church and the interior decorated. By the will of the late James Hull, for many years a devoted communicant, the endowment fund of the church has been increased $1,000.

Dedication of Flags.—At the Cathedral of All Saints, Albany, on a recent Sunday morning, Bishop Nelson dedicated six flags given in memory of Edgar T. Waring, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Waring of Albany. Mr. Waring served as landsman to quartermaster in aviation in the United States Navy and died in the United States Navy Hospital at Pensacola, Florida, June 23 last. The flags are those of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and Japan. A brass plate with inscription will be placed on the staff of the United States flag.

J. A. MARVIN.

EAST CAROLINA

Bishop Darst Special Lenten Preacher.—Bishop Darst will again return to Philadelphia as one of the special preachers during this season of Lent. The bishop will have the noonday service for a week at the Garrick Theatre. Bishop Darst will also preach at the lenten noonday services at the Church of the Messiah, Baltimore.

Every Member Canvass.—The Rev. W. H. Milton, D.D., rector of St. James', Wilmington, North Carolina, will devote a week to the Every Member Canvass to be conducted simultaneously by all of the parishes in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Dr. Milton will devote his time in the city of Philadelphia. Dr. Milton is eminently qualified for this work and we feel that he will make a valuable contribution to the success of that movement. St. James' Church, of which Dr. Milton is rector, is one of the largest contributors to missions in the South.

General Missionary Apportionment.—The Diocese of East Carolina for the year ending Dec. 31, 1918, was apportioned for general missions the sum of $5,270. It responded with an offering of $9,315.32, nearly double its apportionment.

J. H. GIBBONEY.

NEW YORK

The Services at Trinity.—Through an error at the print shop last week, several lines were omitted from the New York letter and the impression was thus given that Archdeacon Greig would preach at Grace Church during Holy Week. This is not the case. Dr. Slattery is the preacher at the noonday services at Grace Church in Holy Week and Archdeacon Greig preaches at Trinity Church. Archdeacon Greig will also conduct the Three-Hour Service at Trinity on Good Friday. The other preachers at Trinity at noon are: March 17, Dr. McComas; March 18-21, the Rev. George Craig Stewart; March 24-28, the Rev. Karl Reiland; March 31-April 4, Dean Rousmaniere; April 7-11, Bishop Woodcock. Bishop Lloyd was the preacher last week and Father Hughson, O.H.C., this week.

Other Lenten Preachers.—At St. James' Church during Lent there are special preachers Wednesday evenings, as follows: March 19, the Rev. George William Douglas, D.D.; March 26, the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D.D., Cathedral of St. John the Divine; April 2, the Rev. John R. Atkinson, Christ Church; April 9, the Rev. Milo H. Gates, D.D., Chapel of the Intercession; April 16, the Rev. Archibald R. Mansfield, D.D., Seamen's Church Institute.

Quiet Day for Clergy of Dutchess County.—On February 26 a quiet day for the clergy of Dutchess county, led by the Rev. Dr. Slattery, was held in Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, the Rev. A. G. Cummins, Litt. D., rector. The day began with the Holy Communion, which was followed by three meditations. Luncheon was served in the parish house, after which those present gathered in the rector's study for a conference with Dr. Slattery on various aspects of parochial work. The occasion was a most helpful one. Some of the non-Episcopal ministers of Poughkeepsie joined in keeping the day.

Battalion of Prayer at St. Luke's Chapel.—The following appears in the Trinity Record under the caption "St. Luke's Chapel": It is said that Lent is a time when kings go forth to battle, so St. Luke's Sunday School has organized itself into a battalion of Prayer for this Lent. There are privates and sergeants and lieutenants and captains. Commissions are assigned according to the amount of work done. Privates agree to say an "Our Father" every day at home for the school; sergeants agree to attend one weekday Communion service beside saying this "Our Father"; lieutenants agree to say their "Our Father" in church every day; captains attend the Holy Communion twice a week and make their Communion once a week for the school. The children of the school are not supposed to aspire to any higher rank than for a lieutenant, although when we organized the battalion a number of the boys with the true American spirit at once asked "What do you have to do to be a general?" Old Father Benson used to say Americans had vocation to be superiors.

Some Coming Events in the Diocese.

The Church Club is planning a meeting on March 26 for the discussion of new movements in church unity. The speakers are to be Dr. Manning and George Zabriskie, Esq. On the Eve of the Annunciation the Churchwomen's Club have their annual service in the Chapel of St. Martin of Tours at the cathedral. The Rev. William Austin Smith will preach; his subject is "How Women Can Help to Make the Church Masculine." The Church Mission of Help will have their annual service at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin on March 23 at four o'clock. Dr. Stires will be the preacher. Two interesting meetings are being planned for the first week in April for the purpose of enlisting the war workers now released from active service in the Red Cross, etc., in work for the Church. One of these meetings will be a luncheon for women at the Hotel Biltmore; the other, a supper for young men and young women. The speakers and the details of these plans will be announced later.

Dr. Shipman Back.—The Rev. Herbert Shipman, D.D., senior chaplain of the First Army, has returned to his parish and preached at the Church of the Heavenly Rest last Sunday morning.

Services Last Sunday.—At the cathedral on Sunday afternoon there was a special service for college students under the direction of Miss Mabel Stone, of the Y. W. C. A., with a sermon by Dean Robbins. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin was the preacher at St. James' Church on Sunday afternoon. Ex-President Taft spoke at the forum of the Church of the Ascension.

United Lenten Services.—As announced in THE CHURCHMAN last week, the churches of New York City are planning union lenten services.

In the Washington Square district the churches selected are as follows: Grace, Old First Presbyterian Church, Washington Square Methodist Church, Judson Memorial Church, Church of St. John the Evangelist and the Church of the Ascension; and in the Riverside district the churches chosen are St. Michael's, the Fourth Presbyterian Church, the Central Baptist Church, St. Paul's Methodist Church, and the Church of the Advent (Lutheran). In the Yorkville district the clergy have decided to have one union service in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church on Tuesday in Holy Week (April 15). Some of the churches in which services will be held March 11, are the Chapel of the Intercession at 155th street and Broadway, St. Michael's Church, Amsterdam avenue, and Ninety-ninth street, and Grace Church, Broadway and Tenth street.

BETHLEHEM

Another Success.—Again the Every Name Campaign has proven its worth in arousing and stimulating a parish. St. John's Parish, East Mauch Chunk, the Rev. H. E. A. Durell, rector, had an Every Name Campaign on Sunday, March 2, and in two and one-half hours twenty-two men, working in teams, increased their contributors from 90 to 230. The parish support was increased 120 per cent and $800 and more pledged for missions. One of the astonishing features of this campaign is that there are 30 per cent more contributors than communicants.

This is the third parish in the diocese of Bethlehem within four months to have used the Every Name Campaign and in each instance the success has been marked by unusually large returns.

MICHIGAN CITY

District Meetings.—The women of the diocese are divided into three districts, Michigan City, South Bend and Fort Wayne. All three districts hold two meetings each year, one in the fall and the other during the winter. This year the winter meetings became pre-Lenten, following closely one after the other. The South Bend district held its meeting in St. Paul's Church, Mishawaka, on Feb. 19; the meeting of the Fort Wayne district took place in St. Andrews' Church, Kokomo, Feb. 26; while the women of the Michigan City district assembled in St. Alban's Church, Indian Harbor, Feb. 27. A goodly number of women from the parishes were present in all three places and their missionary zeal added spirit to the programs. Many of the clergy of the diocese, by their presence, bespoke their co-operation in the work of the auxiliary and they added greater spirituality to the occasion. All three programs opened with the Litany of Missions and included reports on the Advent Call, the presentation of the United Offering, diocesan missions and the Diocesan Summer School. In Mishawaka Bishop White spoke on the work of the Auxiliary after the war; the Rev. Edgar T. Pancoast, the Bond of Church Fellowship; Mrs. L. S. Fickensher, Lenten Study Work, and Mrs. C. P. Shepherd, the Church Periodical Club. At this meeting Miss Marie Voedish of South Bend portrayed the needs of the United Offering.

In Kokomo the Rev. H. N. O'Connor of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, made an address on the vision of service. In all districts there was an election of officers, as follows: South Bend district—Chairman, Mrs. Walter G. Mussel; vice-chairman, Mrs. Winship; secretary, Mrs. Campbell; Michigan City district—Chairman, Mrs. G. H. True; vice-chairman, Mrs. William Meade; Fort Wayne district—Chairman, Mrs. William Brackenridge; vice-chairman, Mrs. E. W. Averill; secretary, Mrs. H. C. Bickel.

PHILADELPHIA

Lent Preachers at Garrick Theatre.—The usual noon-day services, arranged by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at the Garrick Theatre are to be addressed by the following in turn: Bishop Rhinelander, Bishop Stearly, Bishop Tabot, the Very Rev. Frederick Edwards, the Rev. F. E. Seymour, the Rev. Dr. Mockridge, the Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips, the Rev. W. G. Anthony, the Rev. Dr. G. C. Stewart, Bishop Woodcock, the Rev. H. Percy Silver, the Rev. K. M. Block, Bishop Garland, Bishop Darst, Chaplain Dickens. These services are held daily from 12:30 to 12:55.

Other Noon-Day Services.—At St. Stephens and Old Christ Church there are services at the noon hour, to which the people crowd to hear prominent preachers.

Bishop Garland began the series at St. Stephens, and Archdeacon Greig at Old Christ Church, on Ash-Wednesday.

Urge the League of Nations.—Bishop Rhinelander made an eloquent appeal for the League of Nations, as God's plan, and man's long sought goal, for the right relation of separate peoples. This at the first Garrick Theatre mid-day service.

Meanwhile Bishop Garland made a like plea for strong nations, and strong individuals, to use their strength for the weak.

Archdeacon Greig has, in all his addresses, urged that "we give to other nations the same respect, the same honor and the same love, that we give to our own."

Bishop Rhinelander's Lectures.—On Thursday afternoons in Lent, at the Diocesan Church of St. Mary, Bishop Rhinelander is to give a series of lectures on "The Church and the Home," "The Church and Society," "The Church and Labor," "The Church and Politics," "The Church and Religion." These are to be "Studies in Reconstruction." Diocesan Service for Soldier Churchmen:

On Sunday, March 16, at St. Mary's Diocesan Church, at 4 in the afternoon, there will be held the first of a series of services to welcome the soldiers of the church in the diocese.

Dr. Tomkins' Twenty Years at Holy Trinity.—A reception was given by the vestry of Holy Trinity Church, Rittenhouse Square, on Tuesday evening, March 4 to the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins. This was to mark the twentieth anniversary of his rectorship of the parish.

There has been no clergyman in the city more active or influential in the civic and religious life of Philadelphia. Boards, committees, meetings and movements have had the benefit of his advice and inspiration. This willingness to serve in every good cause has been most marked.

NEWARK

Ash Wednesday Services Largely Attended.—Lent began auspiciously in the diocese from the standpoint of attendance at Ash Wednesday services and of the more than usually full lenten schedules prepared for many parishes. There seems to be a reaction, as it were, from the restrictions placed last year upon public gatherings through the necessity of conserving coal, and the result is that greater opportunities are at hand at this time for spiritual uplift through the medium of services, study classes and conferences.

At Trinity Cathedral, Newark, half-hour noonday services are being addressed by various clergymen. Bishop Stearly gave the opening address Ash Wednesday, based on the text, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" He spoke of Lent as a time when individuals are especially called to reconsecrate themselves to the pursuit of the highest and noblest and best in life, to give expression to the deepest instincts within them.

Reality in religion is the thing which men everywhere are seeking; it is what the men who have been in the conflict overseas have found and for what they will look when they return to their homes, the bishop declared. That which makes religion real, that which is constant and abiding, is faith in its deepest and largest sense and faith is that which has been given by the Creator and is man's natural endowment, he went on to say.

Earnest-minded persons will respond to the call of Lent in seeking to see more clearly, to aspire more truly and to act more nobly, continued the bishop. They will gather up their strength and will persevere in the effort to attain higher and better things, he added, striving always for things which will bring benefit and blessing, and joy and peace in the world.

Canon Pennock Begins Course of Lectures.—Canon Gilbert L. Pennock began Tuesday night in St. Thomas's Church, Newark, his course of lenten lectures on "The Life of Christ." The Rev. John C. Donnell, the rector, has secured the co-operation of a Methodist Episcopal pastor and of two Presbyterian clergymen as speakers for lenten services.

The Rev. A. W. H. Thompson Assumes Large Responsibility.—The Rev. A. W. H. Thompson, rector of St. Mark's Church, Newark, has assumed responsibility for four and possibly five week-day lectures in his church during Lent. In addition to his regular Sunday duties and five morning and four afternoon services a week, he is conducting a Monday night service for the study of personal religion, giving opportunity for the discussion of various phases of life with its problems; is also conducting a Wednesday morning mission study class on "Our Church and Our Country"; is giving Friday night addresses on "The Life Hereafter"; gives a Thursday afternoon stereopticon lecture to children and has at his home Thursday nights a training course for church school teachers.

New Rector Begins Duties.—The Rev. Frederick A. Coleman, for more than eight years rector of Trinity Church, South Norwalk, Connecticut, began his rectorship at St. Paul's Church, Newark, on Quinquagesima Sunday. In his initial sermon he told of his plan to make a thorough canvass of the parish to acquaint himself with its possibilities and needs, but stated that he contemplated making no changes or inaugurating no new plans until fall. Last Sunday, Mr. Coleman began a series of Lenten sermons on "Life," under the caption, "The Modernized Life—the Call to Readjust."

About 1,000 Persons in Bible Study Guild.—About 1,000 persons belong to the diocesan Guild for Bible Study, an informal organization of those who follow daily the Bible readings suggested by Bishop Lines. Lists are sent out quarterly by the Bishop. The one just issued contains the following recommendations: For the first week in March, the Epistle to Philamon; March 10 to April 9, the Book of Job; April 10 to June 14, the Gospel according to St. Luke, with an interruption on Easter Sunday for the reading of I. Thessalonians 4; and June 15 to June 30, the Book of Joshua.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

MISSOURI

St. Louis Church Club Meets.—The Church Club of St. Louis held its annual meeting the last week in February. Dinner was served, and after the dinner the Hon. Frederick N. Judson spoke in behalf of the League of Nations. Mr. Judson is a vestryman of St. Peter's church, the author of many books and treatises on various economic and legal subjects, and is reputed one of the best qualified men in the country today to discuss this great question. The Church Club has recently had the election of officers, choosing as its president, Mr. Thomas K. Knight, one of St. Louis's busy railroad men and a communicant of St. Peter's church.

Laymen Speak.—Dean Davis of Christ Church Cathedral announces a series of Sunday night talks on "Public Problems and the Church," by laymen. March 9, Dr. Arthur E. Bostwick, librarian of the Public Library, spoke on "The Art of Seeing into Heaven." March 16, Mrs. Harry C. January, secretary of the Consumers' League, will discuss "Woman's Work: Its Source and Goal." March 30, the speaker will be Mr. Vincent L. Price, of the National Candy Company.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Confirmation at St. John's, Roanoke.—Bishop Thomson visited St. John's Church, Roanoke, Sunday, March 9, at the hour of morning prayer, and confirmed a large class presented by the rector, the Rev. J. W. Cantey Johnson. On Saturday a large number of Roanoke churchmen called on Bishop and Mrs. Thomson, who were "at home" to all who would call at St. John's rectory.

Theatre Services.—Bishop Thomson was the speaker at the noon-day lenten services held at the Roanoke Theatre on Friday and Saturday, March 7 and 8. The bishop struck the key note for these services, as he emphasized the need of Christianity in every phase of life, especially in business and social relations. These services have started well, and bid fair to fully come up to the expectation of those who are responsible for the plan.

Rector Receives Purse.—Members of Christ Church congregation presented their rector, Mr. Mead, a purse, and requested that he take a rest before the lenten work began. He spent nearly three weeks in Florida, and returns in fine shape for the heavy lenten schedule. The Rev. T. K. Nelson, of the Virginia Episcopal School, and the Rev. L. C. Birch, of Bedford, officiated during the rector's absence.

A Parish Dinner.—The vestry of Christ Church had a supper for the men of the parish on Tuesday, March 4, which was served by the ladies in the parish house.

Ninety-six men sat down to a bountiful repast at 7:30 p. m., and remained for speeches and business till 11:00 o'clock. The features were: A welcome to the returned soldiers; an organization of a men's club; plan and determination to raise at least $16,500 as an Easter offering, to go for the building fund; and emphasis and outline of work for the men during Lent.

PENNSYLVANIA

New Mission Started at Mount Union.—A new promising mission has been started at Mt. Union, Pennsylvania, on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. This town was once prosperous on account of the large powder plant operating here employing several thousands of men and women.

The Rev. Frederick James Compson, the new rector of St. John's Church, Huntingdon, within whose jurisdiction Mt. Union is located, at once began to revive Church interests in this place.

The mission was dedicated on March 2, and is called the Church of Our Saviour. About twenty-five people have signed the form of organization and plans may be later to build a permanent church.

At present the mission is conducted over a large store, the proprietor wanting to rent his room for such purposes. Many Greeks in the town speaking the English language have signified their intention of joining the Church, knowing the Bishop of Harrisburg is looking after their interests.

CHICAGO

Lenten Noon-Day Services.—On Ash Wednesday the first of the noon-day services was held at the Majestic Theater, with a large attendance. The Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D. D., was the preacher. The other speakers will be as follows: Dr. Freeman, Bishop Fiske, Dean Bell, the Rev. Robert J. Renison, D. D., Dr. William C. Sturgis, and the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler.

Mercer and Farmer Campaign.—Results of the work of Ted Mercer and Tom Farmer are being felt already in the parishes where they have been preaching. Their week at St. Paul's Church closed with two largely attended services on March 2. The week from March 3 to March 9 was spent at Christ Church, Woodlawn. On Sunday March 9 Tom Farmer spoke at the service conducted at the Bridewell by Mr. Gibson of the City Mission. Mr. Farmer told very effectively of the eighteen years that he himself spent in prison, and of his conversion to a better life.

Pew System Abolished.—At a recent meeting of the vestry of Emmanuel Church, LaGrange, the rector, the Rev. Irvine Goddard, suggested that the system of rented pews be abolished. The vestry agreed, and at the annual parish meeting the recommendation of the rector and vestry was enthusiastically received by the people, and it was voted that there should be free pews in the parish after May 1. Mr. William Ripley Dorr, until recently leader of the Sixth Regiment Band at Great Lakes, has been appointed choirmaster and organist at Emmanuel Church, and began his work there in February.

New Heating Plant.—The congregation of Christ Church, Streator, has undertaken to raise $3,000 to install a new heating plant, and make other repairs and improvements. The heating plant failed during Christmas week and all services for that period had to be cancelled. About $2,000 has already been raised.

COLORADO

Church Convalescent Home.—Among many activities lately in the way of raising money for this deserving work which, regardless of denominational affiliations, takes care of helpless and friendless women coming convalescent out of hospital without friends and without strength to get a living, many of the young ladies of the city took the cloakroom proceeds and services at the Governor's ball and soon after gave a tea dance at the Metropole Hotel from 4 to 7. Preceding the dance, Mrs. Harry English spoke on her experiences in France as a canteen worker.

Awakening All Around.—From over the diocese come indications of awakening life and earnestness. At Holy Trinity, Manistee, an open vestry meeting with everybody present resulted in a "drive" to raise $960 to lift a heavy worry of debt. Beginning Sunday afternoon the committees were able to meet Tuesday and report $970. This soon ran up to $1,065, with every dollar paid in. The floating debt was wiped out and a balance left in the treasury, which, together with pledges also secured, abundantly meets the budget for the year. This was not only a business advance. It was a spiritual forward movement resulting in larger congregations, a better choir, and an atmosphere of hope and joy. Very much of this spirit is manifested in Holland, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, St. Joseph, Niles, to say nothing of Grand Rapids, where it seems chronic.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Church Club Meeting Held.—The annual meeting and dinner of the Church Club of Western Massachusetts, Connecticut Valley division, was held at the Nyasset Club, Springfield. Officers for the ensuing year were elected. Bishop Davies and the Rev. John M. McGann both gave spendid addresses. The bishop and Mr. McGann have recently returned from the front, and in their speeches they applied the lessons of war to the Church at home.

Memorial to Archdeacon Sniffen.—In the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, South Lee, a parochial chapel of St. Paul's parish, Stockbridge, the Rev. George G. Merrill, rector, Bishop Davies dedicated a bronze mural tablet to the Ven. Charles J. Sniffen, late archdeacon of Western Massachusetts. The tablet was given by the people of South Lee in memory of their fellow townsman. At the same time the bishop dedicated a marble reredos, also a memorial to the archdeacon given by his widow. Addresses were made by the bishop and the rector. On the tablet beneath the name, title and dates, are the words, "The Shepherd of the Hills."

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Prominent Utica Churchman Dies.—Daniel N. Crouse, a prominent business man of Utica, and director in many prominent corporations, one of Utica's most venerable citizens died suddenly on February 19. Since coming to Utica many years ago, he had been a member of Grace Church, and took a keen interest in its welfare. For many years he was a vestryman of that parish.

Unusual Lecture.—The Rev. Rudolph W. Nickel, rector of St. Peter's Church, Bainbridge, who is a native of Bohemia, obtained lantern slides from Prague, the capital of the new Czecho Slovak republic, and gave an illustrated lecture on "Bohemia, Past and Present" in the guild hall of that parish on Monday last.

Bishop Talbot at Cornell.—Bishop Talbot of Bethlehem was the preacher in Sage Chapel, Cornell University, Ithaca at the morning and afternoon services on Quinquagesima Sunday. He has been heard at Cornell annually for several years and is a favorite with faculty and students.

Parish Secures Rector.—The Rev. Manning B. Bennett has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Stephen's, New Hartford.

Interesting Entertainment.—The Women's Parochial Guild of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, gave a novel entertainment in Lockwood Memorial Hall at which the Misses Hoyt of New York City presented a program exactly as given by them for the benefit of our soldiers at the front and for the wounded in French and American Hospitals. They also gave an informal talk on their own experiences abroad.

Progressive Parish.—The annual report of St. Mark's Church, Clark Mills, shows that through the every member canvass and duplex envelopes large financial gain has been made, the rector's salary has been increased one-third, and the parish has become self-supporting. The Girls' Friendly Society of St. Mark's presented a patriotic pageant last week.

Enters Sisterhood.—Miss Grace Neal Dolson, Ph.D., recently professor of philosophy at Wells College, Aurora, took her final vows as a member of the Sisterhood of St. Mary, at their convent at Peekskill recently and will be known as Sister Hilary.

Red Cross Chaplain Undertakes New Work.—The Rev. R. P. Crum, rector of St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, spent a few days recently in his old parish upon his return from abroad. As some months remain of his year's leave of absence he will spend the balance of the time at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, working among Harvard men returning from overseas, with the special purpose of establishing service clubs.

THEODORE HAYDN.

LOUISIANA

Church Club Annual Meeting.—At the annual meeting of the Church Club of Louisiana held recently, considerable business was transacted.

The club was advised through the advertisements in the Church periodicals that the price of the new hymnal with music in lots of one hundred would be $1 each, but if taken in less quantity the price would be $1.50 each. The club wishing to give the small churches and missions throughout the diocese the opportunity of purchasing at the reduced price, authorized the secretary to notify the clergy and the vestries in the diocese that the Church Club would purchase the hymnals at the wholesale price and would furnish them to the churches at the same figure.

A very important step was taken with regard to the midday services during Lent, which heretofore have been conducted under the auspices of the Church Club. This year, however, the Protestant Ministerial Association has decided to have united midday services for business men and women and many of our own clergy will assist, and consequently the club decided to discontinue their services.

Much interest has been evinced in these united services and our laymen are co-operating heartily with the laymen of the other denominations to make them a success.

Mr. F. H. G. Fry, the newly elected president, of the club is arranging for the reception for our communicants who have answered the call to the colors when they return to their homes in New Orleans.

OREGON

Northern Convocation Meets.—At the opening service of the Northern Convocation, at Grace Church, Portland, February 26, the bishop spoke on the "Church's Duty to the Citizen-Soldier." Among other points he emphasized a parish gathering to welcome him on his return; that he be asked to take an active part in church work; and have the man and his family come to a thanksgiving communion, there to reconsecrate themselves to God, the Church, and the community.

The next morning a paper, by the Rev. T. F. Bowen, on proposed improvements in certain of the offices aroused considerable discussion, and brought about the appointment of a committee to present to the coming diocesan convention resolutions on family worship.

The "Readjustment of the Provincial System" was clearly presented by the Rev. C. H. L. Chandler, a former traveling secretary of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, who illustrated the need and care required, from business knowledge of the subject.

In the afternoon three good papers by members of the Woman's Auxiliary showed how, as in the Advent Call, women—messengers, intercessors and others—could render efficient service in parish calling, and visiting Sunday School children.

In the evening Mr. T. R. A. Sellwood, now past seventy, gave an interesting account of his experience as a lay-reader in the early days, with recollections of Bishops Scott and Morris.

KANSAS

Clerical Conference Held.—A clerical conference and retreat was held at Grace Cathedral, Topeka, February 25 to 28, conducted by Bishop Wisc. The subjects discussed were, "The New Hymnal," "The Pension Fund," "The Diocesan Convention" and "Parochial Reports." The Rev. E. M. Cross, of St. John's Church, St. Paul, Minnesota, gave the meditation at the retreat. All but two of the clergy of the diocese were present.

Youth and Old Age.—Bishop Wise lately confirmed a class of sixteen persons at Emporia where the oldest person was Mr. W. A. Lewis who will be ninety years old his next birthday, and the youngest was Willard Romer, a lad of ten years.

The Rev. Richard Cox, of St. Paul's Church, Manhattan, was one of the speakers in the open forum at the First Congregational Church, lately, on the subject of "The Episcopal Contribution to Church Unity." He was the first speaker in the series, and discussed the many efforts in this country and England in the direction of unity, showing what the Churches of the Anglican Communion would be able to contribute in any project for union.

RHODE ISLAND

Bishop Perry's Return.—Bishop Perry has returned to the diocese after eight months service overseas as director of the Church War Commission and chief of the Red Cross chaplains. He will occupy the Diman estate, 300 Angell Street, until the fall, when Bishop's House will be reopened.

Noonday Services at Grace Church.—The lenten noonday services at Grace Church, Providence, have always attracted large congregations and have exercised a wide influence in the community. The following are the preachers this Lent: March 10 to 14, the Ven. J. H. Greig, Archdeacon of Worcester, England; March 17 to 21, the Rev. Alexander MacColl, D. D. of the Second Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia; March 24 to 28, the Rev. Edward M. Parrott, St. James's Church, Lake George, New York; March 31 to April 4, the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer, Emmanuel Church, Boston; April 7 to 11, The Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York; April 14 to 18, Bishop Perry.

Jackson, Church of the Ascension, Fall River, Massachusetts; April 4, the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, Grace Church, Providence; April 11, the Rev. Emery H. Porter, D. D.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

ALASKA

Hospital's Work for Year.—The annual report of the Arthur Yates Memorial Hospital, Ketchikan, for the year 1918, is as follows: Total number of patients cared for, 135; births, 16; deaths, 11; number hospital days of service, 1,849; number charity days of service, 271.

Financial report: Receipts from patients, $4,675.25; donations, $1,195.85; total, $5,871.10; cost of maintenance, $5,220.88; balance on hand December 31, $650.22.

This is the first time in the present matron's term of five years of service, that we have ever had any money to our credit at the end of the year. We feel very proud of the fact. Last year, with the constantly increasing cost of food, labor and surgical supplies, we were going in debt every day, until some of the cannery men took the matter up and raffled a pair of socks, knitted by Senator Heckman, which brought to us the sum of $1,015. These same socks had already been raffled for the benefit of the Red Cross, when $500 was raised. This does great credit to the knitter, even though the socks might not have passed a rigid inspector at the Red Cross work room!

We have been enabled to carry on our work without raising our rates. Of course, if it were not for the missionary boxes we receive, it would be impossible to keep open at all.

We were not as strictly quarantined as they were at Nenana, but escaped serious illness in the mission staff.

English Church News

Next Lambeth Conference.—The Archbishop of Canterbury made an interesting announcement at the meeting of Convocation, about the next Lambeth Conference. Immediately after the armistice was signed he communicated with the metropolitans of the Anglican communion asking their opinion as to when the conference should meet. It ought, of course, to have been held in 1918. It could not be held this year, as practically all the bishops wanted to be at their posts when the men returned from the war. The replies now received are unanimous in asking that the conference should assemble in 1920. Bishop Montgomery has undertaken the immediate secretarial duties.

Reform of the Lower House.—The Lower House of Canterbury has a new prolocutor, Bishop Kyle, dean of Westminster, who is democratic enough to ask that he shall be address as "Mr. Prolocutor" and not as "my Lord." The new house set to work at once to consider its own reform. It is notorious that its official members are out of all proportion to its elected ones. To increase the latter would make a very unwieldy body. Hence the idea was mooted that the deans, archdeacons, etc., should elect representatives among themselves, instead of claiming seats as of right. But here the house was brought up against an historical difficulty created by their predecessors in the reign of Henry VIII. In their Act of Submission they promised not to promulgate any new canon or constitution without the King's assent. Notwithstanding this legal difficulty, the house went on to consider what it would like to be if it had the power to be it. As a first step to reform the discussion was useful enough, and Dr. Temple had full scope for his ideas. The need of an enabling act is seen to be more pressing than ever. However, things move pretty quickly nowadays. Parliament is speeding up its own procedure, and we may expect some lightning legislation on social subjects. Possibly in some odd corner of time, the enabling act might pass. But whether it would do so without the condition of disestablishment attached to it, is very doubtful.

Dr. Orchard at Sion College.—We hear of Dr. Orchard nowadays a good deal, and more often than not it is at a gathering of Church clergy. His latest appearance was at Sion College, London, where he told our clergy some home-truths in his inimitable style. If only we could be assured that Dr. Orchard speaks for his brethren in the Congregational Church, the future would be very bright. Not that he thinks the divisions between us to be merely superficial: it might almost be said that Christ Himself was divided, owing to the difference of emphasis which Romans, Anglicans and Nonconformists lay on the offices of prophet, priest and king. No one of the three seemed to have the whole Christ.

As regards church unity, Dr. Orchard is looking to primitive times, rather than to the mediæval age. Organisation there must be, which includes orders. But he thinks it precarious to depend on the "physical" chain of succession. Episcopacy he thinks valid and necessary, because of its historic continuity. The immediate duty before us in the meantime is to explain our creeds to those who differ from us, and especially to explain the "underlying philosophy of Sacramentalism." This is always Dr. Orchard's great point: he is much more anxious for literal intercommunion than for exchange of pulpits. "Your communion might open for us a way to God—will you withhold Him from us?"

Reunion and Episcopacy.—It is not often that our bishops write on controversial subjects in our church press, but an interesting exception to this rule has been made by the Bishop of Winchester, who contributes to the Challenge a long article on reunion and episcopacy, taking as his text a previous article by Dr. Carnegie Simpson on the second report of the Faith and Order Committee. Dr. Talbot deals with Dr. Simpson's suggestion that an offer from the non-Anglican side should be met by a similar concession from ours; we should acknowledge other communions as "churches," and offer "intercommunion," in the sense that Dr. Orchard claims. As to the first point, says Dr. Talbot, it is largely a matter of courtesy to speak of others as they would speak of themselves. But there is more than courtesy involved: "the fault of schism is distributed among all." And there is a practical difficulty: the Society of Friends, which has shown signs of the Spirit's work, would not be regarded, even by Dr. Simpson, as a "church." As to intercommunion, Dr. Talbot believes that episcopacy has to be maintained as a sacred trust: can it be so maintained if we acknowledge a ministry which lacks episcopal authority as equally valid and interchangeable? And further, Dr. Talbot sees the danger of modern sentimentalism in religion, seeking an escape from an "ecclesia" and all its works, because of the human perversities of ecclesiasticism. "The Gift of God in Christ and in His Church slips (to use a familiar word) through people's fingers." The bishop is sure that Dr. Simpson, as a Presbyterian, must be equally anxious about this. I hope to deal with Dr. Simpson's reply next week.

the vestry of that church, to take effect on April 15, and has accepted a call to Christ Church, Baltimore. During his residence in Wyoming, Mr. Huston has won for himself an enviable position. As president of the State Board of Education and a member of the board of the State Humane Society, he has served the interests of the state. As dean of his convocation, president of the Council of Advice, chairman pro tem of the examining chaplains, one of the trustees of Church property, and as a member of various committees, he has filled a most responsible position in diocesan life. In the departure of Mr. Huston, the people of St. Mark's feel that they are losing not only a beloved pastor but a warm personal friend. With him and with his charming family go the wishes of his Cheyenne parishioners for all success in their new field of endeavor.

Senate Chaplain Receives Gift.—At the closing session of the Fifteenth State Legislature, the Rev. George C. Rafter, D.D., rector emeritus of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, was presented with a handsome gold watch chain as a token of appreciation of his services as chaplain of the senate. Dr. Rafter has held this post in the senate almost continuously since 1883, at which time the "Council of the Territory of Wyoming" was housed over a saloon on Sixteenth Street, in Cheyenne.

MILWAUKEE

Speakers at St. Paul's Are Laymen.—The special speakers, all laymen, at the Wednesday evening services at St. Paul's Church during Lent will be: March 12, Wheeler P. Bloodgood; March 19, George A. Chamberlain; March 26, T. Chalkley Hatton; April 2, Dr. J. L. Yates; April 9, Mrs. John W. Mariner. Their subject is "Readjustment from the Laymen's Standpoint."

LONG ISLAND

Union Lenten Services.—Arrangements have been perfected for a remarkable series of noon-day lenten services in Brooklyn, in which thirty-three churches and ministers of various denominations are interested.

These services began on Ash Wednesday in the Church of the Holy Trinity, whose rector the Rev. J. H. Melish has offered it for all the services.

A representative committee of clergymen and laymen has formulated the program. Dr. John R. Carson, of the Central Presbyterian Church, was the speaker on Ash Wednesday. Dr. J. G. Baechus, rector emeritus of the Church of the Incarnation, Thursday, and Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Friday. A long list of prominent clergymen will follow.

Community Services.—Fifteen churches in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn, representing ten denominations, united in a community service recently, with more than 1,500 people in attendance. Three ten minute addresses were delivered, by the Rev. W. J. Zirbes, of the Second German Baptist Church, on "Private Prayer," the Rev. H. E. Schnatz, Bushwick Avenue Presbyterian Church, "The Bible in the Home" and the Rev. John Williams, Calvary Episcopal, on "Public Worship."

The second of these services is to be held on Monday in Holy Week.

Social Values of a Fair.—The Rev. W. C. Charlton, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, in commenting on the parish fair, puts before his people, the fact, that "our Lord constantly used social affairs to win men, women and children to Him."

It was the means of gaining two new members for their confirmation class, and there was a notable increase in the attendance at service the following Sunday.

Communion Set As Memorial.—The Missionary Society of St. George's Church, Brooklyn, has just sent to the Mission St. Jacques, at L'Archahai, Haiti, a beautiful Communion set of five pieces.

This is a memorial to Miss E. C. Holman, who died recently, and who had for almost thirty years been a devoted and faithful worker, and for a long time president of the society.

This mission is one of the stations where the Rev. Mr. Lloyd is doing effective work. The undertaking was started and brought to a successful issue by Miss E. W. Atwater.

Jr. O. U. A. M. Attend Church.—A patriotic and religious service was held Sunday, March 2, for the members of the Jr. O. U. A. M. of Brooklyn at St. Thomas' Church, and the rector, the Rev. D. M. Genns preached on "America's Mission."

Dr. Lacey Praises Slovaks.—At the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, Sunday March 2, Dr. Lacey delivered a most interesting sermon on "America's Greeting to Czechoslovakia."

Dr. Lacey who is a student of Slovak affairs, said that the Bohemian immigrants are a valuable asset, and that we would do well to further our personal relations with them, as they respond so quickly to American ideals. Archdeacon Webb was in the Chancel, which was decorated with the flags of the Allies.

Hear From King and Queen.—In reply to a letter of sympathy sent on behalf of the boys of the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, to the King and Queen of England on the death of their youngest son, the Prince John, aged thirteen and one half years, the Rev. H. P. Hames assistant to the rector, the Rev. St. Clair Hester, has received from their majesties at Buckingham Palace a very interesting communication.

WEST VIRGINIA

Speakers at Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.—The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, was addressed by Mrs. Arthur Van Harlingen, of Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, recently. Mrs. Van Harlingen is one of the mission study leaders of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Great inspiration was brought to West Virginia by Mrs. Van Harlingen, as would always be the case were there more frequent intercourse among the various branches of the Auxiliary.

TEXAS

Called to His Old Parish.—The Rev. Mr. Cadman has again been called to the rectorship of All Saints' Chapel, Austin, and took charge recently. He resigned to enter war work in Canada and was absent from the parish about six months. He was called for the third time to this parish.

In Charge of the Archdeacon.—The archdeacon has been asked by the bishop coadjutor to take charge of the parishes at Rockdale and Cameron until such a time as he can locate a man and give him charge of this work. The archdeacon recently made a six days' visitation of the work at Giddings, Cameron, Moody, Smithville and Georgetown. The people gladly welcome the ministrations of the Church and it seems that possibilities here in the diocese of Texas are boundless. The new bishop coadjutor is receiving cordial cooperation everywhere. The new dean of this, the north west convocation, the Rev. L. C. Harrison, is taking an active interest in the missionary work. The north west convocation is to meet some time in the near future at Temple.

JOSHUA B. WHALING.

ATLANTA

For Soldiers.—All Saints' Parish, Atlanta, has taken advantage of its proximity to Camp Gordon to do some effective work among the soldiers. In the beginning, hot suppers were served to them from five to seven o'clock every Sunday evening and on holidays, in the parish house.

When the convalescent men came from overseas to Fort McPherson Hospital, the parish assumed the responsibility for the Y. M. C. A. Hut No. 2, which they attractively furnished. The grounds also received much care, shrubbery, flowers and grass being planted and swings set up. There is an interesting program of music from half-past two until five o'clock every afternoon, with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays; games and refreshments are also provided.

The hut committee are intending in the near future to add a large porch to the building and more conveniences to the interior, as the hospital at Fort McPherson is expected to be permanent.

E. S. TAYLOR.

MAINE

Woman's Auxiliary Study Class.—The Educational Secretary of the Maine branch of the Woman's Auxiliary inaugurated an interesting series of studies on the mission fields. The meetings were six in number, and were held every Friday afternoon at the Bishop's House, from February 7 to March 14. The general subject was: "The Church in our Country." The weekly topics included the following phases which were taken up by the various study leaders: "Christian Citizenship," by Miss Mary M. Burgess; "Bishop Kemper," by Miss Mary B. Chadwell; "The Indians," by Miss Harriet M. McCobb; "The Southern Mountaineers," by Miss Mary M. Burgess; "The Negro," by Miss Carolina H. Burgess; "The Church in our Rural Districts," by Mrs. Seth A. Moulton.

Bishop in Other Dioceses.—The Rt. Rev. Benjamin Brewster, D. D., has been doing duty in Rhode Island for Bishop Perry previous to his arrival from service in the army in France. The bishop is at present similarly occupied in Connecticut. But after March 14 it is expected that Bishop Brewster will take a well-earned rest for two weeks from the work of his expansive diocese.

Rector Quarantined.—St. James' Church, Oldtown, suffers the misfortune of having its rector the Rev. D. R. Bailey quarantined by reason of the illness of Mrs. Bailey, who is a victim of scarlet fever. By location in a near-by town, this parish is of actual and potential importance because it is called upon to minister in the interests of the church among the students in the growing University of Maine.

Rector Resigned.—The Rev. George A. Hunt, who for a few years past was rector of St. John's Church, Presque Isle, has resigned his parish, which is an event deeply regretted by his bishop, the parish and the community. The members of the parish gave voice to their appreciation of the retiring rector at a reception where he was the guest of honor and a purse of $300 was presented to him as a token of kindly regard.

A prompt call was extended to the Rev. J. Martyn Neifert, assistant to the rector of St. James' Church, New York, who with equal promptness has accepted and entered upon his new duties March 1.

A Church Burned.—A wire just received announces the destruction by fire of St. Paul's Church, Fort Fairfield, but the parish house was saved.

St. Paul's Church ministers to a very prosperous farming district of Maine. And we can hope that the fruit of self-sacrificing labors of former years will be quickly restored.

Reception to a Clergyman.—When the rector of St. Mark's Church, Augusta, left for service in France, the Rev. J. Alexander O'Meara, formerly assistant at the Cathedral Church of St. Luke, Portland, consented to take charge of the parish during the protracted absence of the rector, Dr. O'Meara's personal qualities and wide experience in many lands have made him very acceptable to the congregation. This kindly feeling took on special form in a reception given to his honor at the parish house, February 26.

Unity in Diversity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It is well that so much attention is being given to the thought of church unity, but if any permanent good is to be attained from it some system conformable to the nature of the Church is essential. The fact must be recognized that the Church is one already and that the divisions in it are not divisions of it; that the task is not to create a new unity out of disconnected parts, but to do away with separations which obscure and impair a true unity.

There must continue to be diversity. Diversity is a law of the Church's nature. God has made its members to differ. If arbitrarily repressed, diversities must result in division. Our present divisions are largely due to attempts at arbitrary repression. Liberty must be the law of a united Church, the liberty with which Christ makes free.

If the Church were recognized as a divine organism, and all attempts at organization conformed to the nature and requirements of that organism, our attitude would be a very hopeful one. Evidently the unit of such organization must be the community. That is the natural unit of the Christian Church, assumed by the primitive Church, recognized by the Apostles, required for its internal welfare, demanded by the nature of the work it has undertaken or should undertake. Disunity in the Christian community was forbidden by apostolic authority, and it is the great evil of the present state of denominational division.

The great task, then, is to devise some form of organization of the Christian community with which all Christians may voluntarily associate themselves. Men must not be asked to deny conscientious convictions. Christians are to receive one another. No one is justified in refusing Communion with another unless that other is vitally out of harmony with essential truth.

The desired consummation, then, would seem quite simple and feasible. The only need would be that the denominations should withdraw from their individual congregations such constraint as hinders them from adjusting themselves to the community in which they exist, and then the binding together of these congregations in some simple organizations which should express their true unity. Probably the majority of Christians in this country could thus adjust themselves to the true unity of the Church without difficulty. Long used forms and methods would not need to be given up, nor need new ones be adopted. The central body at the head of the community would naturally have a permanent presiding officer, and to satisfy the convictions of those who hold to the historic episcopate, such a chief pastor could be set apart to his office by bishops of Churches claiming such an episcopate without going counter to the convictions of those who have not the succession in this particular form. Even the one who claims that laymen can ordain will hardly claim that bishops cannot.

These individual Christian communities, varying in size from those containing hundreds of thousands of members in the great cities to those in smaller communities which are just able to be self supporting, would naturally group themselves together in larger associations following political divisions. But here again and especially freedom should be maintained. Each Christian community, a unit in itself, might naturally have somewhat the status of an episcopal diocese or a congregational association in its association with other units of like kind.

But these and other matters may safely be expected to work themselves out. The great present need is to get rid of the divisions which obscure the unity which already exists.

EDWARD C. WILEY.

The Church and Publicity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The editorials in your paper have been enjoyable as a rule, but in this week's issue there is an annoying exception. It is your plea for experts in publicity for the Church. Such expressions as "the drive as an efficient method," "the science of publicity," "a high salaried publicity man to present the cause of missions to the Church," etc., etc., shock and sadden me. When you say "we dare prophesy that not one of the great organizations within the Church will in a decade think of attempting to conduct its affairs without employing experts in publicity" I for one, say God forbid.

Have we not yet enough of business methods and worldly contrivances in the Church?

Does your project of publicity chime in with "He shall not strive, nor cry, neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets . . . till he send forth judgment unto victory"?

Will learning "the art of raising money" help us to raise the dead and cast out devils?

How intimately connected is it with "provide neither gold nor silver nor brass in your purses?"

"Freely ye have received, freely give" is the command of Jesus. What did the Twelve receive? "A science of publicity"—a principle of the drive for efficiency, a high salary to present the fact that the Kingdom of God was at hand?

Do we consider the Gospel of the Kingdom as impracticable? Trust we so to the amazing success of worldly schemes that we are willing to put our trust in getting millions of dollars because the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light?

If we think that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is something that must be modified to adopt it to our worldly civilization before it can take root on earth we have no faith.

We read somewhere that God hath chosen the weak things and the foolishness of the world to confound the wise and the mighty.

The drive—efficiency (so-called) and publicity seem to you to be wise and prudent in conducting the affairs of the Kingdom of God, but He who came to establish that Kingdom on one occasion said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes." The old saying "for love or money" touches many phases of life—I am not sure whether money can carry on the work of the Kingdom of God as it was put into this world by our Lord Jesus Christ. In fact, I think it often hinders the progress of the Kingdom. If we read the story of the first three centuries of Christianity we find it expanding through its law of love, that it rejected all worldly methods, and by the vitality of the Gospel, the meekness and patience of the followers of the Way, spread so wonderfully that the day when "the meek shall inherit the earth" seemed not far distant. It was a kingdom of the poor and unlearned, taking into its service the slaves, its domination was over human hearts and silver and gold it had not.

Then the wise and prudent seeing the increasing power that there was in this kingdom thought of world dominion and the glory of it, and accepted the offer of Constantine and the Roman Empire sat upon the tomb while the faithful kept alive the germ of Christianity in the catacombs.

Love, not money, is the greatest of all powers, and it does not work by "the drive" nor by "publicity," and is even quite careless of "efficiency," that modern idol. When I read your article I said to myself, "What! shall I bow down to money, the power that has almost wrecked our poor semblance to civilization and call on it to save the Church and its missions?"

Is the story of the missionaries and martyrs who went on the great adventure to win souls to God to be put on the shelf while we call in the advertising man and on a 50-50 basis save the world?

Is not the mind saturated enough with what can be done with money?

"Money talks." It standeth in the top of high places and in the market places it shouts "I am indispensable, inevitable, all powerful, you can't do anything without me."

Its loud cry has entered into the porch of the church and is even heard in the sanctuary and THE CHURCHMAN is its prophet. Woe worth the day.

The Price of the New Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The availability of the new hymnal for small parishes and missions, is being questioned by many of our missionaries. A large proportion of these congregations have never been able to purchase the old hymnal with words only, but have depended on the several Prayer Book and hymnal societies for free distribution. For the majority of the small congregations, the purchase of the new hymnal at $1.00 per copy is impossible. In the average small congregation, only a few can sing by note and except for the "choir," there would be no need for a musical edition of the hymnal. I would therefore ask if the commission on the new hymnal has made any provision for the many hundreds of congregations which cannot buy and do not need the musical edition?

T. TRACY WALSH.

York, South Carolina.

[For the sake of such parishes the Pension Fund will issue copies of the new hymnal containing a hundred hymns with music and several chants for each canticle. The book, strongly bound, will be sold for twenty-five cents. These hundred hymns are the hymns most used. It would perhaps be a gain if the whole Church used this smaller book, that the whole Church might learn to use only the greatest hymns. —EDITOR.]

The Church in the Cave of Adullam

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The caption to this letter expresses an ideal actually realized 3,000 years ago.

David, the son of Jesse, strange to say, was once an outlaw. He was reduced to this necessity by the powers that be. Several times his life was attempted by King Saul, in consequence of which he fled and organized a band of outlaws, whose rendezvous was a mountain stronghold known as the cave of Adullam. Hither resorted "every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, and he became captain over them." A sort of Bolshevik army!

The attitude of the privileged class toward this motley crowd, when they asked for justice, was voiced by Nabal the churl: "Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? there be many servants nowadays that break away every man from his master."

The cave of Adullam today is about 10,000 times as large as it was in David's time. It is called a menace. And the attitude of the Church, alas! is strikingly similar to that of Nabal the churl. Why cannot the Church today act the role of David? Why cannot we churchmen organize and direct the democratic aspirations of the great army of discontent?

David taught his 600 to respect the powers that be, and to exercise mutual justice. Hence the cave of Adullam became the school for the best reign that Israel ever enjoyed.

The same possibility resides in the present social unrest. If the Church will consecrate herself to the God-given task of sympathetically directing the democratic aspirations of the surging mass of humanity, she will evolve a great army of justice-loving men who will prepare for the new age and the coming Kingdom of Christ.

Impracticable? Not a bit. Let the clergy, individually or in groups, mingle in the meetings of the discontented and counsel with them. Invite them into our parish halls for open forums. Visit their homes. They are God's children. Crude indeed may seem some of their methods to get justice, yet they are personally men of noble sentiments and impulses, as the few clergy who know them can testify.

Doubtless there are in the Church many noble laymen who are ready and eager to follow the clergy in such heroic work. Are we actually with David or Nabal?

A New Right-Hand Help for Writers and Speakers

Fifteen Thousand Useful Phrases

A New Book for Building the Vocabulary

This is a practical handbook of felicitous phrases, striking similes, and literary, commercial, conversational terms for the embellishment of speech and writing. Greenville Kleiser has designed the book for the convenient use of business men, public speakers, writers, lawyers, clergymen, teachers, students and all persons who wish to write and speak the English language with facility and power.

In gathering the material for this book Mr. Kleiser has drawn freely from the great masters of English, including Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Goldsmith, Lamb, Macaulay, Browning, Carlyle, De Quincey, Newman, Ruskin, Pater, Stevenson, Tennyson, Arnold, Kingsley, Bulwer-Lytton, George Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Hawthorne, Emerson, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Mable, and many living writers.

There is an interesting introduction by Frank H. Vizetelly, Litt.D., LL.D., and a practical plan of study by the author. It is believed that this is the only book of the kind so far published, and that it will fill a distinct and valuable need. It will be a useful supplement to the dictionary and regular book of synonyms.

It is as if St. Gaudens, making the Sherman monument, had shaped the lips of the angel into a derisive smile. "Friends," says the angel, "I bring you here a hero, but I can hardly keep from laughing when I think of some of the exceedingly unheroic things he did." Thus does Mr. Strachy present Cardinal Manning, Florence Nightingale, Doctor Arnold and General Gordon. His attitude toward them all is that which Mr. Sargent, the painter, is said to have taken toward some of his sitters, whom he depicted in such a manner as to make their women friends weep, and their men friends gnash their teeth. They were all more or less mad, he says in effect, especially in the matter of religion.

"During the year 1883," says Mr. Strachy, "a solitary English gentleman was to be seen, wandering, with a thick book under his arm, in the neighborhood of Jerusalem. His unassuming figure, short and slight, with its half-gliding, half-tripping motion, gave him a boyish aspect which contrasted, oddly but not unpleasantly, with the touch of gray on his hair and whiskers. There was the same contrast—enigmatic and attractive—between the sun-burnt, brick-red complexion—the hue of the seasoned traveler—and the large blue eyes, with their look of almost childish sincerity. To the friendly inquirer he would explain, in a low, soft, and very distinct voice that he was engaged in elucidating four questions—the site of the crucifixion, the line of division between the tribes of Benjamin and Judah, the identification of Gibeon, and the position of the Garden of Eden. He was also, he would add, most anxious to discover the spot where the Ark first touched ground, after the subsidence of the Flood; he believed, indeed, that he had solved that problem, as a reference to some passages in the book he was carrying would show. This singular person was General Gordon, and his book was the Holy Bible."

"At about this time," he says in another place, "the curate of Littlemore had a singular experience. As he was passing by the church he noticed an old man, very poorly dressed in an old grey coat with the collar turned up, leaning over the lych gate, in floods of tears. He was apparently in great trouble, and his hat was pulled down over his eyes, as if he wished to hide his features. For a moment, however, he turned toward the curate, who was suddenly struck by something familiar in the face. Could it be—? A photograph hung over the curate's mantelpiece of the man who had made Littlemore famous by his sojourn there more than twenty years ago; he had never seen the original; but now, was it possible—? He looked again, and he could doubt no longer. It was Dr. Newman. He sprang forward with offers of assistance. Could he be of any use? 'Oh, no, no!' was the reply; 'Oh, no, no!' But the curate felt that he could not turn away and leave so eminent a character in such distress. 'Was it not Dr. Newman he had the honor of addressing?' he asked, with all the respect and sympathy at his command. Was there nothing that could be done? But the old man seemed hardly to understand what was being said to him. 'Oh, no, no!' he repeated with the tears streaming down his face. 'Oh, no, no!'"

There is an interest in this manner of writing which is irresistible. And the book is full of it. Whoever begins it will be impatient of interruption till he finishes the last page. Probably these characterizations are true and just; they are convincing; they have every look of real life. Few readers, however, will claim that they are kind. Not one of these eminent Victorians could read the description of himself without a sinking of the heart, and a mounting of blood to the cheeks, and a strong desire to get Mr. Lytton Strachy by the back of the neck. Dr. Arnold would have illustrated upon him that sturdy theory of "personal correction" which he practised at Rugby. Cardinal Manning would have wished for the chance to hold him under in that lake of fire and brimstone in which he so un-faithfully believed. The note of the book is touched in a phrase of the introduction to the account of Manning. Elusive person—Manning, says Mr. Strachy. Did he become a leader of the procession by his merits, or by a superior faculty or gliding adroitly to the front rank? Let us examine the matter. "It may be instructive, and even amusing, to look a little more closely into the complexities of so curious a story." So with all the others.

Kindly step forward, Miss Nightingale, says Mr. Strachy. You are remembered, I believe, as the Lady with the Lamp, and you accomplished great things for wounded soldiers sixty years ago, and ever since. You will not deny, however, that the benevolence and public spirit of your long life were equaled only by its acerbity. You worked Sidney Herbert to death and made Arthur Hugh Clough tie your brown-paper parcels. Listen while I read to our friends selections from your foolish theological correspondence with Dr. Jowett. Here, too, are a number of prayers which you wrote in your intimate journal, some of which seem to me rather amusing.

You, also, Henry, in your cardinal's robes; I have quite a collection here of your confidential meditations, good resolutions and prayers. How odd it was of you to speak of the death of your young wife as one of "God's special mercies"; not, of course, at first, when you used to write your sermons beside her grave, but afterwards. What a queer way you had of balancing your spiritual accounts, benedictions on this side, maledictions on that, like Robinson Crusoe. And your ambitious and unscrupulous schemings and plottings for ecclesiastical promotion, were they not somewhat detached from your private pieties? You say, "I am conscious of a desire to be in such a position (1) as I had in times past, (2) as my present circumstances imply, (3) as my friends think me fit for, (4) as I feel my own faculties tend to. But, God being my helper, I will not seek it by the lifting of a finger or the speaking of a word." Was not that because old Talbot, the Pope's private secretary, was lifting all the necessary fingers, and speaking all the determining words? I saw your Red Hat the other day, Henry, hanging over your tomb in the crypt of Westminster Cathedral; it was covered with dust; what do you think of that?

Of course, even the saints had their faults and follies, the remembrance of which is pleasant and profitable (or, as Mr. Strachy puts it, amusing and instructive) to us, because we are thereby assured that they were human like ourselves. Our blame of them is thus a kind of praise, showing, as it does, the difficulties through which they made their way to sanctity. It is like the game of Hit the Halo, which the gods played in Valhalla with Baldur the Good. The friendly gods pelted Baldur with sticks and stones, believing that nothing could do him harm. But one time there came in Loki, an unfriendly god, whose throne was the Seat of the Scornful, and that day the halo of Baldur was pretty badly shot to pieces.

From American History

THOMAS JEFFERSON. By David Saville Muzzey, Ph.D. JEFFERSON DAVIS. By Armistead C. Gordon. Charles Scribner's Sons. New York. 1918. $1.50 each.

Just as there is no more interesting field for reading than biography certainly it likewise would be difficult to find more interesting subjects for the biographies than the men whose lives and work, according to the announcement, are to be included in this series, and Thomas Jefferson and Jefferson Davis are Americans whose careers afford the picturesqueness, importance and romantic fascination sufficient to make a proper beginning. But the two books are markedly unequal both in scholarship and in successful accomplishment.

Professor Muzzey has produced here by far the best short life of Jefferson yet written. It is scholarly, judicial, and yet brilliant. While the reviewer would dissent from many of the author's views and is unable to agree with him as to the measure of Jefferson's greatness, yet he is glad to acknowledge the value of the interpretation put upon Jefferson's life and the suggestive treatment of many of the great events in the early years of our national history.

On the other hand, Mr. Gordon hardly has measured up to the opportunity afforded by the life of Jefferson Davis. The book is in large part an attempted apology for and justification of the discredited cause of secession. The author must forget that a civil war (which was not a "war between the states") has been fought and its issues decided years ago. Certainly the strong nationalist policy of the party now in power, in spite of its prevailing southern leadership, would tend to show that "much water has flowed beneath the bridge" since the days of 1861!

The succeeding volumes of this new series will be awaited with eager interest by readers of American history.

Salem a Hundred Years Ago

CALEB AND MARY WILDER FOOTE. Reminiscences and Letters. Edited by Mary Wilder Tileston. Houghton, Mifflin Company. Boston. 1918. $2.00.

Those who are interested in the quiet but cultured life of Massachusetts a century ago will find this a book of rare charm. The Footes lived for the most part in Salem and were intimate friends of that strange genius, Nathaniel Hawthorne. The letters abound in such intimate touches as the account of the first sermon preached at Cambridge by the Rev. Ralph Waldo Emerson and one of Daniel Webster's great speeches for the defense in a famous criminal trial. It is a refreshing record of the plain living and high thinking of New Englanders a hundred years ago.

From the "East Side"

A CHANCE TO LIVE. By Zoe Beckley. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. $1.60.

A great authority on art once said: "Don't do all you can." When an author knows her subject she secures confidence from her reader. When she feels it deeply she often defeats her purpose in her effort to "get her message over."

Zoe Beckley knows those interesting New Yorkers of the East Side. She has written a story, A Chance to Live, and it is filled with her knowledge of the wrongs they endure. She proves her points, the Triangle fire, and all that led up to it, the bread riots, and the underlying motives—there is no chance of argument. You and I could not stand up against such conditions one week, but in her efforts to make you realize the social problems, the machinery of the mere story, squeaks, and sometimes almost stops. There is a vivid etching of incidents with characters dimmed by contrast.

The author is a master of that greatest of all arts, the short story; she proves it in every chapter. Annie Hargan, the heroine is well worth knowing, but if you are allowed to meet "Aunt Moggie" you meet the real stuff. Everyone who can ought to claim an introduction, for you will have a friend who is as much a living personality to you as flesh and blood.

Here is an interesting summary of the author's belief. "There are two ways the system can work, it could crush you into soddenness or it could rouse your fighting spirit. Perhaps they could put on a bit more steam, generate more power, achieve one more push, and so climb up, and out, and help the others."

Lord Northcliff

NORTHCLIFF: BRITAIN'S MAN OF POWER. By W. E. Carson. Dodge Publishing Company. New York. 1918. $2.00.

For four years three kings have reigned in England. One of them reigned, but did not rule. King George officially led his people, but only as the carriage dog leads the carriage; he stood at the cross roads until he found out which way they wanted to go,—then he went before. The other two ruled. They found out which way the people ought to want to go, and along that road they made them go. They led.

Each of these last was Thomas Carlyle's type of king: the man who can. They are David Lloyd George, born in Wales, and Alfred Charles William Harmsworth, born in Ireland, known today as Lord Northcliff.

"Who were your ancestors?" a certain English nobleman asked with a sneer of a "commoner." And the other answered "I haven't any. I am the ancestor." The first king had ancestors. That is the reason that he is a king. The other two are ancestors. That is the reason that they are kings.

If you want to learn about Lord Northcliff, how he became "king," how he has used his royal power and how he is using it today and will probably use it tomorrow, read this absorbing history by W. E. Carson. You will admire him because of his friends, and perhaps even more, because of his enemies.

Exhibit Planning

THE A B C OF EXHIBIT PLANNING. By Evert G. Routzahn and Mary Swain Routzahn. New York, Russell Sage Foundation. 1918. $1.50.

This is a detailed technical study of how to plan, present, and use exhibits. The volume is largely made up of reproductions of exhibit charts, good and bad, with careful interpretative comment. One of the chief dangers against which the authors warn is the widespread tendency to make a chart tell more than it ought to. A chart, in other words, is not intended to take the place of a pamphlet; it is to be absorbed at a glance, not read at leisure. Significant instances are given of the results of exhibits and even of single charts carefully planned and cleverly executed. A limitation of exhibits has been their prevailing static character. Lately, however, the motion picture and "flash" devices have been used with profit. It is essential to dramatize the material presented, so that it will stimulate the imagination; too many exhibits are mere appeals to the intellect. On the whole, the volume is to be commended to all students of social methodology.

HYMN OF THE FREE PEOPLES TRIUMPHANT. By Herman Hagedorn. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. 75c.

These verses are a comment on the inspiration of the dictum of Job—"That the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment" as exemplified by the Great War, in the brief blatant triumph of William the Damned, who lives to see his people covered with sackcloth and ashes. The theme is a noble one, and it is refreshing to meet in a modern poet with recognition of the power of God. One cannot, one is sorry to add, say as much of the execution. That seems scarcely to justify the issue of so brief a poem in a separate volume at the price asked.

PASSING OF BISHOP GIBSON

By Frederick W. Neve

IN the early hours of Monday morning, February 17 Bishop Robert A. Gibson of Virginia passed to his reward. On the night of his death his mind went back to the time, when as a soldier in the Civil War he fought for the South. It seemed to him, apparently, that he was looking for some officer to come and inspect the guard, as he asked one of his daughters: "Who is on guard tonight?" and then tried to arrange himself, so as to be ready for the officer's inspection. In the following lines I have tried, as simply as possible to bring out the significance of this beautiful and touching incident as a tribute of love and esteem to the memory of my friend and bishop, Robert Atkinson Gibson.

WHO IS ON GUARD TONIGHT?

"Who is on guard tonight?"
Said the brave old soldier-priest.
"We must keep this post till the morning light
And then we shall be released.

"Who is on guard tonight?"
The Captain will soon be here,
And we and our arms must be clean and bright
And then we need not fear.

"Who is on guard tonight?"
He may come at the midnight hour,
But we, who have fought with Him many a fight,
Can trust in His Saving Power."

An angel stood guard that night,
By the side of that warrior-priest
And the Captain came 'ere the morning light
And the soldier's warfare ceased.

PEACE PROBLEMS FOR THE CHURCHES

By the Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D.D.

WHEN our boys come home from France they will be asking some pointed questions, which the Churches must carefully consider. Their experience "over there," in camp, and on the battlefield, is leading them to ask why Christianity cannot be simplified—reduced, as it were, to its simplest terms—and purged of both ecclesiasticism and dogmatism. They have found that the personal Christ, the Friend and Saviour, is what their souls have cried out for in their lonely hours, or in the hospital, or in the solemn moment when they have looked in the face of death.

Can the Church give them a simpler creed? A more practical, a more helpful Gospel? Like those Greeks of whom St. John tells us, they will be saying to their preachers and spiritual guides: "Sir, we would see Jesus."

And another question they will press when they come home will be: "Why cannot the Churches draw together in a closer bond of real fraternity? Why must the barbed wire entanglements be kept up? Why not cut them down and have true fellowship, leaving every Church the privilege of its own peculiar beliefs, and customs, but recognizing the higher unity of a common Christianity?" They have not seen a bit of use "over there" in these barbed wire fences between Christians of different names, and they will be for opening up communicating trenches instead.

We cannot doubt that these men will be a vital force in our Churches when they come home. Perhaps they will be the most vital element in our congregations, and it will not be surprising if they will insist on a broader fellowship and a closer unity than the Churches have ever known before. To them it will seem that the most important matter—beyond all sectarian banners and distinctions—is whether a man has a real grip of the Christian virtues and a real fellowship with the Living Christ. The figure of the crucified Christ in the way-side calvaries or in the ruined churches has brought help to Protestants and Catholics alike, and it is His Cross which is in their minds the great symbol of practical and helpful religion. The idea of sacrificial love is very familiar and very real to them, and that is what they will want to hear about.

And further, they will be asking why all Christian people cannot come freely to the Lord's Supper without challenge and without pronouncing any shibboleth, but the love of Christ and their fellowmen.

There have been many illustrations of this new spirit of fellowship and unity, for instance, in that unique and impressive Te Deum Victory Service held here in our largest Episcopal church. When distinguished divines of four different Christian communions made addresses of thanksgiving to God from the same pulpit, they were listened to with a quite unusual intensity and solemnity by the great congregation, and when the benediction was pronounced by the Bishop of Washington, there was a deep and grateful feeling that the war had broken down sectarian barriers at least for that evening. Let us hope there was in that service a foregleam of Christian unity and a prophecy of a new era of Christian brotherhood among all who profess and call themselves Christians.

It was a life too full and rich to be analyzed briefly. culture of his mind nor the high breeding which made him so rare a gentleman; but rather upon an inner glory of spirit which marked him as one who had seen God, and lived in the light of that vision, day by day. To us he would have been great had his lot been cast in comparative obscurity, and himself counted only among those hidden saints whose presence in this gray old world preserves its sweetness, and quickens our halting faith in the capacity of human beings to become the sons of God. Yet I must choose, and choosing I must limit our consideration to certain phases of a life whose many-sided charm tempts one to wide roving in the field of biography.

For I call upon you to recognize that the first, and perhaps the greatest service performed by Bishop Hare for this commonwealth of South Dakota was that of chief missionary to our Indian tribes. I know it is not unusual for men—even for some who call themselves Christians to utter the word missionary with a belittling accent, if not a supercilious sneer. A "missionary" is to them an anemic visionary, or a meddlesome fanatic, who goes messing about trying to frighten people into the Kingdom of Heaven. He is a person to be merely tolerated by red-blooded two-fisted men; his chief value is that he furnishes a little amusement for those who are engaged in the real business of life, but it is not to be expected that he will be taken seriously.

I wish to challenge this attitude of mind. I wish to show you that when we speak of missionary work in the newer parts of our country we are talking about a great patriotic task. We mean the Church of God co-operating with the state in the production of a Christian civilization. We mean the development of that spirit of honor and righteousness, of loyalty and brotherhood and godly fear which is the very foundation-stone of all lasting liberty. You here in South Dakota have had a most conspicuous demonstration of its efficiency—and it was accomplished by the grace of God through the life of His devoted servant, William Hobart Hare.

I will give you a modern instance: On St. Bartholomew's day, August 24, 1917, I opened our Niobrara convocation on the Pine Ridge reservation. Gathered in and near the great booth was a congregation of 800 Indians, and round about us lay a camp sheltering between two and three thousand who came long journeys to spend four days in prayer, conference and worship. On either side of me, as I looked out over that great assembly, stood two men who thirty-eight years before, on that very morning, had stood by Bishop Hare on that same reservation to hold our first Christian service among the Ogalala Sioux. It was not hard for the imagination to reproduce that earlier scene. About the slight form of the young bishop a group of scowling, painted savages, squatting upon the ground; their hands still red with the blood of soldiers and settlers, their hearts seething with rebellion and revolt. They had made their last stand against the encroaching white man; they had fought their last fight and had failed. Driven in from every side, they were ringed about with soldiers' bayonets, and held in check by superior force. Scarcely one among them professed Christianity, and the majority hated the white man's religion as whole-heartedly as they hated everything else which reminded them of those whom they counted their persecutors.

Here was a tremendous and threatening problem—a sinister obstacle in the path of civilization and progress. Yet thirty-eight years after, in the presence of those very men—still hale and vigorous—who had supported Bishop Hare in his first service I conducted the worship of God in the presence of a great Christian congregation devout and reverent, on a reservation where white and Indian dwell side by side in peace, and where there are more loyal Christians in proportion to the population than in any other community within the borders of our state, outside of the Indian reservations. What had wrought this change? Many things, of course, had conspired, many agents had been working toward this end, but the chiefest was embodied in the life and work of that man of God who for more than thirty years went in and out among them.

Let me state the case, not in any words of my own, but through the mouth of a government official. In the later years of his life, helpless from the ravages of the disease which caused his death, Bishop Hare asked a friend to take a message from him to the Indian office. The messenger, finding the commissioner deeply engrossed, before a desk piled high with papers, began by making an apology for intrusion: "But" he concluded, "I come to you from Bishop Hare." The commissioner, pushing back his papers, replied: "Bishop Hare can command, at any time, and to any extent, the attention and co-operation of this office. He has performed a task which the army of the United States failed to accomplish. He has pacified the Indians of South Dakota by making them Christians."

I wish I might tell you how this building of men went on; how that man of finesse and cultivation, peculiarly fitted to take an honorable place in an intricate and highly organized civilization, made his way among the redmen of the plains. From the beginning he touched their hearts and influenced their lives as no other man had ever done. Your own secretary, Mr. Doane Robinson, has told me of an incident which is typical. One day in the parching heat of summer, in company with the old chief himself, he sat before the home of John Grass. Far off on the prairie appeared a cloud of dust, which slowly grew larger and came nearer. After a time it was possible to identify the familiar traveling outfit of Bishop Hare, whose team was plodding wearily through the blistering heat. Just as he approached the dwelling a cloud passed over the sun, and even as the chief stepped forward to greet his guest, a gracious rain—the first in many weeks, began to fall. With the unfailing courtesy of the Indian and the sincere accent of a friend, John Grass, extending his hand to Bishop Hare, turned to his other guest and said: "This good man always brings a blessing!"

The flavor of Coca-Cola is a composite of natural fruits so delicately blended that the palate is unable to distinguish any one of the component parts—the result is a distinctive flavor.

The art of compounding flavors has become a science which requires a lifetime to master. That is why it is so difficult to imitate the distinctive flavor of Coca-Cola.

The slightest deviation from the delicate balance of flavors reveals the imitation. When you ask for Coca-Cola demand the genuine by full name—nicknames encourage substitution.

minister. This, I fear, will mean a decrease in church attendance, and as going to church is an important factor in the religious life, and as Sunday afternoon in France is the equivalent of Saturday after-many people have, I fear that when their only church service comes on Sunday after-from church altogether.

TREASURES IN HEAVEN

LENT is a convenient time to survey the question of treasures in heaven, for Christians are definitely committed to a consideration of the problem. When we read in the sixth chapter of St. Matthew's gospel the melodious words of the Christ, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," we know that that kind of treasure, whatever it may be, is the most precious possession that a man can win.

The Master saw people all about Him then, as we do now, laying up things, saving treasure against the day of need. One was putting money out at usury, another storing away precious gems and fabrics. People in the countryside, people in the towns were amassing things. When Jesus walked the streets of the city and villages He saw what He might see today, a world of men at work upon their treasures, saving, building, adorning the home in which they spend their earthly life. They were finding happiness, too, in the work of their hands. Arm and brain were growing strong. They were satisfied, some of them, with their treasures. Others were earning their bread in sorrow and degradation. They were coining their very souls into the treasure which others were amassing. And then Jesus made two observations and He gave a command. First He said that none of this could last. Moth and rust would destroy it. Houses, money, jewels, all of it, yea, the lands that we till, are doomed. Even the planet on which we live "is as mortal as any son of Adam." It, too, must pass like a dream or a cloud or the wake of a ship in the waters. That was the first observation. Then He made another. He said that any treasure laid up in heaven is one that will last; moth and rust cannot corrupt it; no thief can break through and steal. How natural, then, the command which follows: "Lay up therefore for yourselves treasures in heaven." It is worth while for Christians to inquire what are the treasures which people are permitted to lay away with God.

When we begin to think about eternal values, we turn instinctively to the Christ to learn what kind of treasure He spent His life in amassing. There we know that we are on firm ground, for whatever else slips from our grasp, His treasures will endure. And here we get our acid test of the durability of treasures. In every appraisal Christ makes of deeds and motives, it is love that is the unit of value. Whatever other treasures, which we may amass, belong in heaven, we know that the love which we put into life, belongs there. We are told with authority that God is love. If that be true, love must be of the very air of heaven. We can be certain that love has amassed more lasting treasures than any other gift of man. No matter how conscientious we try to be, no matter how just we try to be, it is only through our affections that we can discover our most gracious opportunities in life. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light. He sees straight. He sees farther and deeper than other men. We ought to be fearful of the times when men hate, when voices grow strident, eyes flash fire and pity shrivels in the heart. There may be cause for anger, but it is a costly thing, because St. John tells us that the man who hates walks in darkness and knows not whither he goes. He stumbles and makes false moves; he assigns wrong motives; he never sees straight into the heart of things. Nothing we ever did in hate added one grain of treasure to the world's store of good. We are sure of this because we know that God is love and that only as we work in those clear upper currents of life where kindness and loving enthusiasm move do we deal in things eternal. The best in history is the story of deeds done, never in hate, never in anger, but always in love. It is the men and women who have loved most that have filled heaven with its treasures. We know we shall find not one deed there that was done in hate. Let us think of this in the days that are coming, while we are trying to build again a world of peace upon the fragments of a world destroyed by hate.

But the making of love the sole test of Christian treasure does not mean, of course, that mere amiability is a substitute for durable work. The spirit and quality of a man's work is surely a test of his loyalty to life. Whenever we apply the Christian principle to the world's work, we find ourselves coming back to William Morris' masterful definition of art. "Art," he once wrote, "is the doing of the work we have to do, better than we need to do it." The mere artisan works for a wage, his eye upon the clock. The artist gives himself freely for the love of the work itself. He does his work better than he is required to do it. It is just that "better" that gives the touch of eternity to the things we fashion by our hands and brain.

What a world this would be if all the workers in it showed that type of loyalty to life! Better, more beautiful buildings than we are compelled to build, better roads, better factories, better fabrics because we are loyal workmen, and in the joy of our consecration we are eager to do the thing better than we need to do it; better physicians, better teachers, better fathers and mothers—just because we are loyal workmen and want to give back our best to the God of life; better homes than we are compelled to make because we want to give our best to our children and to the race; better churches and charities and politics than the world demands.

It takes only a little imagination to see the vast and majestic sweep of that thought, how its application would cleanse life, dignify its toil, bring joy and fellowship into the workshops of the world until the day's task would become veritably a hymn of praise to God. Under these conditions, could our day's work be other than the amassing of eternal treasures? Love would be put into it. All sordidness would go, all cheats and shoddy things and hateful competition and envy, because we should not be asking how little we can do, but how much. It is the willing, surplus effort, the extra tug that makes work a spiritual exercise, a heavenly treasure. The sordid, the shiftless covetous worker, squanders eternal treasure. As we enter into the anxious problem of the future when classes, now at enmity, must somehow come to see eye to eye, the only solvent of our jealousies and suspicion is a new, a Christian attitude towards our work. From drudgery on the one hand and selfish ambition on the other, it must be transformed into a gift we make to God and our fellowmen.

The Roman Church, in her practical way, has tried to encourage interest in heavenly treasure by specifying deeds of special merit. We occasionally read announcements of such deeds in the vestibule of the churches. Men and women are taught that by the performance of certain surplus deeds of virtue they are laying away treasures in heaven. The process seems to us mechanical and the deeds prescribed appear sometimes to have little eternal value. It seems a childlike view of life and one's relationship to God. But, after all, we are all of us only children groping to find our way to heaven. Might it not inspire us to give an extra tug in the day's work if, like children, we were to count over very often the things that we have done and said and suffered because of our love for men and God. Whatever else fails us, these we know are safe forever in the treasure house of heaven.

COMMODORE BOURNE'S GIFT

THE trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York are to be congratulated on the munificent bequest of $100,000 made in the will of the late Commodore Bourne for the nave fund. The codicil, making the bequest, was added to the will on March 8 of this present year and the gift is to be Mr. Bourne's Easter offering.

A BIT PRUSSIAN

IF Congressman Dent's bill for universal military training in the United States is to have smooth sailing with the people, it would be well not to have many pleasant little Prussian exhibitions of "discipline" such as that to which Major General John F. O'Ryan treated one of our New York theatre audiences the other evening when officers in the audience wearing Sam Browne belts and guilty of other delinquencies were called before the theatre and reprimanded. As one of the New York papers remarked: "He was right but he was wrong." It was where he was "wrong" that fundamentally matters.

THE ROOSEVELT MEMORIALS

AMONG the many suggestions for the permanent Roosevelt memorial, those which have to do with Americanization work seem to be most fitting. Mr. Roosevelt never touched a finer chord than when he summoned men of every tongue and race living in the United States to become "straight Americans." But we should like to see the memorial go deeper in its purpose than merely the teaching our foreign populations to understand American customs and institutions. We should like to see a nation-wide crusade to penetrate the slums and the backward country districts with light, health, economic opportunity and sound morals. It can be done if we will it. It is the biggest, the most inspiring missionary campaign that ever presented itself to a people. We commend the purpose to the Churches, the missionary organizations and all the philanthropic agencies of America. Now is the hour to strike.

THE RUSSIAN CHURCH AND BOLSHEVISM

"CRUELITIES by the side of which the persecutions of the Christians in the first three centuries paled"—this was the English primate's description in Convocation of the manner in which the Bolshevik fury is working its revenge upon the Church in Russia. Eleven archbishops, many bishops, and a great number of priests have been killed under circumstances of atrocious cruelty. Churches have been violated and their artistic treasures destroyed. As yet there seems no end in sight of this bloodshed and rapine.

SECOND BEST

WE hail heartily every suggestion from Paris that looks towards the destruction, root and branch, of Prussianism. Prussia is lucky to get off with her life. She has been a public nuisance for generations. But there was also a time when France was a little troublesome to her neighbors. We want to see Prussia's teeth drawn; we want to see her arsenals destroyed, but we don't want to see French militarism in the saddle of Europe, either. Every move in Europe towards universal disarmament is a move towards permanent peace. Every move towards an alliance armed to the teeth to keep the peace is a move towards another war. We shall be compelled to take a second best in the settlement, but we must not be too gullible. We must not think that the battle against militarism is won, when a league has been set up. The league to enforce peace is not so idealistic a document as some of us suppose. It is only a modest step. The situation in Europe at this hour has more storm clouds on the horizon than have existed for three generations.

VIENNA AND PARIS

WE have just been reading A Peace Congress of Intrigue (compiled by Frederick Freska, translated by Henry Hansen, the Century Company, New York, $2.50). Anyone who is downhearted, as we all are at times, about the peace conference, should refresh his memory of what took place more than a century ago at the Council of Vienna. The cynicism of these titled diplomats who tossed about from one king to another helpless peoples of the earth, swapped territories, jested and danced, made merry with their mistresses and sycophant followers, with never, apparently, a compassionate thought for the agony of the helpless millions of people in Europe into whose hearts and homes the war had brought desolation! The diabolical cruelty of it all! There is much to give us anxious thought as we face a new democracy today, but it is certainly a more Christian world when men like President Wilson, Lloyd George, Clemenceau are permitted to meet at the council table to work out a just and merciful peace. Pessimists are handling the wrong data. Why not utter a thanksgiving that God has put into better hands the destiny of peoples in our generation than those that divided the rulership of the world a century ago?

THAT SETTLES IT

“WHILE still at sea the President received a message from the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, purporting to represent 18,000,000 Protestants, and expressing an earnest desire for the league.” This is from an editorial in the New York Evening Post. There are a good deal more than 18,000,000 Protestants in America for the League of Nations, but I wonder if they knew they had voted for it. They must have done so, for the War-Time Commission of the Churches represents them and appears to have sent the telegram. Have we heard from the Federal Council of Churches on the question of the league? The gentlemen in the central office represent another thirty or forty million Protestants, on all matters pertaining to religion, morals, politics and life. Let us call it forty million in good round numbers; that added to the eighteen makes 58,000,000 Protestants, all voting through these powerful organizations. The question is settled. If any of us ever had any qualms about the efficiency of these great church bureaus, their ability to function quickly in getting at the sentiment of the American people and voting for them, disposes of even the surliest critic. Of course some of us who have paid our dues both to the Federal Council of Churches and the War-Time Commission may have voted twice for the league by this method of representation, but why quibble over details? The system has not been fully worked out. Mr. Wilson will understand perfectly that there is no intention to deceive.

THE REPLY OF THE GERMAN PROFESSORS

THE Deutsche Liga für Völkerrecht (German League for Peoples' Rights) has sent the following reply to the Christmas greeting to the German people which was sent by a number of representative men and women in England. This message expressed “the earnest hope that the shadow between the nations shall pass away.” The German reply is as follows:

Owing to unfavorable times and the difficulty of communication, the Christmas greeting which a number of high-minded British women and men sent to the German people has only now become known in Germany.

Heartily gratified by the spirit of conciliation expressed in that British demonstration, the Deutsche Liga für Völkerrecht expresses sincere thanks. The Deutsche Liga für Völkerrecht confidently hopes that such a spirit of reconciliation between the nations, after long years of force and intoxicated blindness, will lead Great Britain and Germany to renewed joint efforts for the sake of humanity; and that in the future it may become the common possession of the whole of civilized humanity.

The Deutsche Liga für Völkerrecht is confident that in Germany the conviction of the necessity and justness of such development is constantly growing, and begs groups with similar tendencies among all other nations to strive energetically for the extension of such a feeling.

The executive committee of the league is composed of Count Arco, Under State Secretary Bernstein, Count Bernstorff, Dr. Dernburg, State Secretary Erzberger, Professor Francke, Professor Jaekel, Dr. Junck (member of the Reichstag), Dr. Paul Nathan, Prof. Niemeyer, Prof. Beer, Prof. Ludwig Quidde, Fräulein Elisabeth Rotten, Professor Schücking, Frau Helene Stocker, and Herr Max Warburg. Among the members of the General Committee are Prince Max of Baden, Fräulein Gertrud Bäumer, Professor Bonn, Herren Ebert, Giesberts, Haase, Hermann, Müller, and Scheidemann; Dr. Solf, Dr. Suedekum, Professor Franz Oppenheimer, and the following deputies, Herren Gothein, Wolfgang Heine, Von Liszt, Dr. Naumann, and Dr. von Richthofen.

THE PROBLEM OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

EVERY important event in the history of the Church is about to take place: namely, the transfer of the jurisdiction of the Virgin Islands, formerly the Danish Islands, from the English Diocese of Antigua to the American Diocese of Porto Rico. The whole question of ecclesiastical polity as applied to national Churches is bound up in this transaction. Its implications are enormous. In the present editorial no more can be said than that the Church of England by its cheerful and generous relinquishment of jurisdiction in the Islands of St. Thomas, St. John and Santa Cruz, is building a new monument in commemoration of the national Church idea.

It is a very serious moment for those of us who are specially concerned with the progress of the American Church in the West Indies because it will be no easy matter to take up and carry on the splendid work which has been done by our brethren from across the seas. As a matter of fact, the only thing that has disturbed them has been the question as to whether we could carry on. We have the money and we have the men, but do we possess the right kind of men—men of marked ability who will be willing to devote their lives as have the English to work in those islands of the sea.

To give an idea of the problem immediately confronting Bishop Colmore it should be said that he has just received a cable stating that two of the English clergy have sent in resignations to take effect at the end of May. This means, apparently, that the transfer of jurisdiction will have been arranged between the Presiding Bishop and the Archbishop of the West Indies by that date; it also means that before that time we shall have to be prepared to put the vestries of St. Paul's, Fredericksted, and All Saints', St. Thomas, which has been vacant for some time, in touch with American priests of the type to which they have been accustomed.

These parishes are much more important than one realizes. They have long and honorable histories, having been self-supporting since the days when some of our largest parishes in New York were but missions.

St. Paul's, Fredericksted, has 700 communicants and 2,500 baptized members; All Saints', St. Thomas, has 620 communicants and 2,800 baptized members; St. John's, Christiansted, has 560 communicants and 3,500 baptized members; Holy Cross, Lower Love, in the centre of the Island of Santa Cruz, is a flourishing mission of St. Paul's, Fredericksted, ministered to by the curate of St. Paul's.

The immediate need is for Americans whom the bishop can suggest to the vestries of St. Paul's, Fredericksted, and All Saints', St. Thomas. But where are we to find them? It is all well enough to talk about the Church following the flag, but we must be prepared to pay the price, which in this instance amounts to the finding of worthy successors of the splendid Englishmen who have served so faithfully for a century or more.

The Secret Working of Silent Forces

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The house when it was in the building, was built of stone, made ready before it was brought thither; so that there was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in the building. I. Kings VI:7.

SILENTLY, with no dissonant clang of implement to break the solemn quiet, the Temple of Solomon arose: beam of cedar and olive wood, each fitting into its socket; gold and silver and brass and precious stone, finding its appointed place. And when this silent upbuilding had lasted for seven years, the magnificent structure stood complete.

And why this repose? Because Solomon was seeking to imitate God. He would build the Temple as the Great Creator builds the forest, the sun, the moon and the stars; as you and I, little creators, are building those things which are most eternal—silently; where “there is neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it is in the building.”

The mightiest forces that we know anything about are silent. Stand in the midst of the forest in summer time. Listen! God is pumping up the sap to the outermost twig of a million trees. All the energy of all the enginery in all the world shaking the earth with its rattle and its roar could not do that. But hark! The Creator is at work. And in this vast factory you cannot hear the opening of a valve.

The Atlantic Ocean covers an area of 25,000,000 square miles. As we are saved from death by the circulation of the blood through our bodies, so every living thing is kept alive by the circulation of the earth's waters. The sun comes, and in the silent vapors which arise, it lifts in its arms millions and millions and millions of tons, re-distributing them. It pours them out in rain upon the mountain tops, so that our rivers are always full, and our springs are never dry.

We all know of this process, but how many of us have paused to realize what it means? The average fall of rain during the year is about sixty inches, but suppose it were only one inch. In order to provide that rainfall of one inch, over the Atlantic Ocean, the sun has had to lift up in its arms eighteen hundred thousand millions of tons! No mind can conceive the significance of those figures. But did you ever hear the sun at work? It is silent as the footfall of Destiny.

Now, what is true in Nature is true in Life. The mightiest forces are those which are silent. Consider the power of association; if evil, noiseless, but deadly as the sirocco, creeping into our homes, and laying its unseen ghastly hand upon our children and ourselves; if good, then, like the inspiration of a summer's morning, noiseless, but filled with life, and energy and joy.

Every one of us today is what our associates have permitted us to become. There is a chemical mixture which they call invisible ink; the page written all over seems a blank, until you bring it near the fire, and then the inscription, curse, or blessing appears. You and I are writing in our homes, in invisible ink. The message, benediction or anathema, is that unconscious, noiseless influence which goes forth, not from what we try to appear, but from what we really are. And the pages on which we write are human souls.

As I look back through the experiences of a ministry of more than fifty years, the saddest picture which I remember is that of a white-haired old man, kneeling in my study. His whole frame trembling, he sobbed and tried to pray for pardon, because years ago, when, in those hands he held the page of a human soul, the invisible ink of his selfish and self-indulgent influence had written a curse instead of a blessing.

What are the associations with which you are surrounding yourselves? They are marking you for heaven or for hell. What are the associations with which you are surrounding those whom you love better than your own life? What are you? Do you ever have family prayer? Do you ever read the Bible to your boy? Do you ever try to teach him what God is—by silently showing him what you are? That is the ink with which you are writing. What is the message?

Another secret force, closely connected with this of association, and quite as omnipotent in its silent workings, is the force of unspoken character; for goodness is imparted, not primarily by instruction, but by contagion.

There are people into whose presence you come, and they make you unhappy. It is difficult for you to resist it. And it is not because of anything these people say, nor of anything they do. It is because of what they are, in their real subterranean selves. It is because, deep down in their character, beneath all surface appearances, there lies selfishness, or hauteur, or envy, or jealousy, and the presence of these attributes darkens the whole horizon of your hope as noiselessly but as surely as the falling of the night.

But, on the other hand, you know people, many, many of them, and so do I, whose presence makes life bound with good cheer and courage. In that presence, you spring to your work. Their very features glow. They are like Moses, coming down from the mountain top where they have been talking with God, and their faces shine, and they know it not. And this is not by anything they say. It is simply by what they are.

We are taught, and we teach, by something about us which never goes into language at all. We speak of this elusive something as “personality;” but in every instance I believe it can be traced back to three silent elements—a belief in the prevailing goodness of God, in the innate goodness of people, and a determination to exemplify what is good instead of what is evil in one's own life.

These are not the qualities which make men brilliant. Such an one may often say within himself, “My life doesn't amount to very much. What have I done?” Well, a lighthouse does not do very much; but it shines. Or a woman in the home may say, “My life is somewhat humdrum; pretty monotonous.” I know it. I know it. There is not very much that is exciting in the rearing of a family; just the same round of duties. It is as commonplace as gravitation—and as mighty.

“Monotonous.” Doubtless that woman thought so who, in those western wilds, three-quarters of a century ago, sought to rear her boy for God. Only a common everyday life. But as this nation watched with tears that once unknown woman placing her kiss upon the brow of her son, when James Garfield took the oath as President of these United States, they heard God speaking to every faithful mother in our land and saying again, “In quietness and confidence shall be your strength!”—in life's silent forces.

THE CHURCH AND THE NEW ERA—I

BY THE REV. GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER, D.D.

EVERY churchman who loves the Church must be frank, critical and constructive in his appraisal of its relation to the new era. There is a growing conviction that some of our present methods are inadequate. It seems scarcely necessary to explain that our faults are largely outgrown methods that, having served their purpose, must be abandoned. It is in no spirit of unkind criticism, but with a desire to conserve the permanent values that I am attempting to analyze the conditions and methods which now exist and which must be changed.

The first message that came to us from "over there" in regard to religious conditions that seem to prevail there, and therefore are likely to be perpetuated, is, that there exists an indifference to religious divisions and denominational boundaries; that old systems are disregarded and a structureless religious content prevails, where any prevails. Denominationalism is an outworn phase of religious experience. And America sits up and takes notice as if it were getting a startling message from overseas. It greets this idea with astounding eagerness, just as a man whom you scarcely recognize at home becomes a bosom friend when you meet him by chance in Paris. But this is not a new message at all. American religious life has been so analyzed by our despised "intellectuals," for a generation.

But it is true that we can no longer ignore the problem. The war has merely accelerated what was inevitable under any circumstances, a readjustment to the actual conditions underneath the scenic effects produced upon the sky line of our large cities by the turrets, towers, domes and spires of denominationalism.

So the first problem of the Christian forces seems to be Christian unity. We are told that by unity alone shall the spiritual forces aroused by the war be conserved. The returning hosts will avoid the divided Church. Again this is not a new phase of the problem. This diagnosis of the failure of the Church to contribute its best values was made long before the war. The thinning congregations of many churches have been pointed out, for several years, as the result of a divided front in the Christian forces, assisted by the automobile and the movie.

But, even if not new, the problem is not solved. How shall effective Christian unity be attained? Not by amalgamating faulty systems! Unity will only be achieved when the denominational units prepare themselves for survival by a more adequate adjustment to their real tasks.

Since this is my firm conviction, I feel it my duty to approach the subject of reconstruction with a consideration of the duty of our Church alone. It would be a national calamity for the Episcopal Church to weaken in its convictions that the outward expression of the Kingdom must be more than it has been able to attain, not less.

These are personal conclusions. From these conclusions alone, however, could I justify an appeal to the Episcopal Church to make essential Christianity safe for our land by a mighty forward movement that by its very fruits, its very results, shall vindicate, not itself primarily, but the faith and essential practices of which the Church is the vital organism.

Our first duty is to prepare for a program of work that may not culminate for a generation. No foundations are too deep for the magnitude of the superstructure which must be reared. At no matter what sacrifice of immediate results, this Church must co-ordinate its primary efforts for a cumulative and synchronized result. We should condemn our government if it built airplanes and did not at the same time train aviators. Yet we scatter mission stations with a lavish hand, while we face the possibility of a decreasing ministry. We should condemn any commanding general if he permitted a great fortress to be daily attacked by a single company that was at once annihilated. Yet we attack great problems with such a small force that we are at once embarrassed. The Panama canal was not dug by a gang of men with spades, scattered over the route.

The Church will never realize that it has a new opportunity unless it prepares itself for it. Our task in the Church is not to glow, like a firefly, from the internal warmth of our enthusiasm about the new era. Ours is the grim and arduous task of preparation for converting the rising spiritual values into structures which will give to them permanent expression. In whatever way social structures shall be transformed, shall disintegrate, or shall become the empty shells of former potentiality, we shall have social structures. They will be shaped, in general, upon models with which we are familiar, even as the modern house has essential features quite like the dwellings of pagan Pompeii. Courts, schools, churches, will endure in familiar form, even though the justice, education and religion fostered therein shall have been reborn. To consign to the scrap heap the accumulated treasures of the past in the Church, in order to be pioneers of religious effort in a new era, whose nature is as yet unknown, is as empty of satisfaction as would be the idealism of the man who deserted his humble house, and tried to shelter himself and his children under the fluttering sheets of the architect's drawings of a proposed and pretentious abode. But the comparison is misleading. A house may not evolve into a mansion. But the Church, which is a living organism, may develop until it adjusts itself to new conditions, and until it enlarges its structure to shelter the new nation.

We must face two outstanding facts that have become apparent in our structure.

(1) The Episcopal Church is the most adaptable in principle, but the most resistent in fact, to newer conditions, of all the leading religious organizations in our land. Its life is based on the principle that it is the temple of the Holy Spirit, and therefore every fresh outpouring of the Spirit of God ought immediately to be reflected in the Church. In fact it drags along many of the shells of its previous incarnations. It is almost too old, and its beautiful traditions, its age-long associations, its ancient customs, its memorable historical expressions in art, custom, liturgy and music are overlaid like wonderful mosaics, upon its breastplate of righteousness and its shield of the Spirit. It is reflective of the amenities of the contest upon the Field of the Cloth of Gold, while its adversaries are using high powered ordnance. Nevertheless the Episcopal Church has within its structure the divine power to grow to its new task without rending its body.

(2) Again, the Church has, in principle, an essentially simple faith, a faith not alterable by the storms of time, a satisfying and enduring hold on the facts of the divine plan for man, as fresh and as unexhausted today as when they were embraced by the men of the first century. This faith, in itself, will be the faith of any new era, no matter how changed from the old, even though its implications receive a fresh expression. But, in fact, the Episcopal Church has the most elaborate teaching of all religious bodies. We have failed to convince the general public that we are not teaching the customs of the household as matters of faith. Our substance and our method are confused. Some children in eating grapes have been known to swallow the skins and throw away the pulp. Some converts do likewise. Nevertheless, the Episcopal Church has for the coming generation a message on the issues of life and death, unsurpassed in its importance to individuals and society.

The first duty of the Church, therefore, is not to be absorbed in a maelstrom of disintegrated religious effort; but to give to the structureless mass its permanent outlines; not by presenting the adventitious elements of its organism, but the abiding framework of its fundamental truth. To do this effectively the Church must realize that though its principles will not change, and though it has sufficient spiritual vitality for any new age in which human life is involved, yet its methods may become the subject of scrutiny and of readjustment.

Frankly, I am trying to narrow the subject with the object of becoming practical and to discuss methods.

There are many prophets in the land, men of fine capacity, who are giving thought to our newer problems, and setting forth the majestic outlines of the new day. In fact, we have two schools of prophecy: in one of which are gathered those who interpret the Church to the world, and in the other of which assemble those who would interpret the new world to the Church. We must remember this in judging the ringing messages from our bishops and priests. Some have taken their stand within the whirling eddies of the world's social and philosophical thought and are summoning the Church to come to the aid of a world struggling for new and consistent self-expression. They are like leaders in China who appeal for men who speak the language and understand the racial characteristics of the Chinese. Throughout our land are clergy who have left their comfortable studies, left their biographies of Isaiah and Moses, and the mediæval saints, and the Mid-Victorian English clerics, all of whom are today of a remote past, and have tried to understand the modern mind and modern sins in individuals and society, and modern social ambitions and aspirations. They have a social appeal to the Church. They would save the ship, and not only some of its passengers. No wonder their appeal to the Church is a searching cry to the heart and not to our entrenched customs.

Again there are those who, with equal courage and will, and with equal convictions, see within the Church the living waters that would quench the thirst of the peoples. They say we must make a new creature and the new creature is in a new creation. A new race, a renewed race, will evolve a new environment. On with the Church's simple task. Save the passengers, and if the ship sinks we may build a new and better one.

Our first duty is to respect the convictions of each school of prophets and to realize that they are really the exponents of a larger synthesis, the forerunners of a larger conception. I cannot believe that the Church can ever grow to the point where it coincides with the world, or that the world will ever shrink into the boundaries of the Church. It is my conviction that the Church must make the world problems its own and never rest content until it becomes a true exponent of the Gospel to the world as it is today; searching out the principles and powers and programs which will meet the world's social needs, and making such application of them within the sphere of its active operations as would, if geographically and socially extended, transform the nation. And then, by example and by teaching, by becoming a participator in the burden sharing, and a preacher of the Gospel of its experience, not its deductions, the Church will give to all society its substance if not its form.

In the new era of the Church's work we have had many expositions of the Church's principles, and its message, and its attitude toward society. There remains to adjust its methods to the new day. For the duty of the Church, as I have tried to make plain, is not to fade out, but to become bold in its efforts, and in the presentation of its everlasting truths. If that is its duty, then we must analyze our methods. They are important for the results sought, not in themselves, even as war is not to be justified by victory, but by its aims. Methods are important because by our methods the Church will succeed or fail. I simply cannot be numbered among those who believe that the Church is so completely divine that it will prevail in spite of our human contribution of an unwise method. The force of gravity is eternal, but the channel must be built to the turbines for the water which reacts to gravity.

Consequently I venture to scrutinize, sympathetically, our methods, and with every appreciation of the high purpose and earnest and sacrificing contributions of those who have wrought in the past, I venture to suggest, in black and white, what has certainly been expressed by many of our clergy and laity in various ways, during the past few years.

HIS VIEW OF PRAYER

HIS view of prayer was nothing else but a sense of the presence of God, his soul being at that time insensible to everything but Divine Love. When the appointed times of prayer were passed, he found no difference, because he still continued with God, praising and blessing Him with all his might, so that he passed his life in continual joy; yet hoped that God would give him somewhat to suffer when he should have grown stronger.

AWAKENING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND—II

BY JOHN O'LONDON

IN my previous article I tried to give a general summary of the movements which have arisen within the Church of England as a result of the National Mission. Of the five committees appointed by the archbishops to deal with the failures or defects of the Church none is more scathing in its report than the Committee on Evangelistic Work. "It appears from the evidence," says the committee, "that a parish in which men and women were being converted has been abnormal. . . . The great object for which Christ died has too often been forgotten or neglected. . . . The Church awakened and advancing in many aspects of her life and work is as yet asleep to her evangelistic duty to masses of our countrymen."

This is a strong indictment, but those who know the condition of England sorrowfully admit that the statements are neither unjust nor overdrawn. Practically all our military chaplains are agreed that so far as the men in the new armies are concerned, the Church has lamentably failed in her primary duty of evangelizing and teaching. Although about seventy per cent of the men are entered as "Church of England," the vast majority are untouched by organized Christianity and their ignorance of the elementary tenets of the Christian faith is appalling. Our leaders now realize the seriousness of the situation, and the committee called upon the Church to concentrate its whole thought and activity upon "nothing less than the evangelization of England and the English people." There is an urgency of tone about this appeal that has deeply stirred the Church. Scores of conferences have been held to discuss the position. As a result evangelistic councils, with women as well as men representatives, have been formed in practically every diocese. Their functions are not only to undertake specifically evangelistic work, but to bring about a change of mental outlook regarding the place of evangelization in the Church's life. It is strange that this should be considered necessary after 2,000 years of Christian history, but such is the case!

Another promising movement of the past year has been the organization of "Evangelistic Crusades" in great industrial centres. Several of these have been held in huge munition areas which sprung up during the war. About one hundred "crusaders" (clergymen, laymen and women) concentrated upon a town or district for ten days or a fortnight. A series of outdoor meetings are held daily during the dinner hour and again in the evening. Services are also arranged in the churches in the evenings and sectional meetings in halls or tents for men and women. Factories are visited and the crusaders endeavor to get personal talks with some of the workers. A noticeable feature is the effective part which women have taken in these campaigns. "It is probably the first time," writes one of them, "that the clergy have admitted women into anything approaching comradeship." Their success has been a revelation to many of the clergy. The crowds soon realized that these cultured women had a definite message of their own to give to men as well as to women. Further, women have been wonderfully successful in organizing and carrying out Pilgrimages of Prayer in the rural districts. The "pilgrims," who wear a distinctive dress, are sent by direct commission of the respective bishops and go from village to village. Besides holding services in schoolrooms and occasionally in churches, the "pilgrims" stay in various homes, which gives them an opportunity of talks with the family and of conducting prayers. They aim at visiting all the houses in the parish, big and small, and they endeavor to make it clear that the visit is for a definite spiritual purpose.

There can be no doubt that in the near future the "ministry of women" will become an important factor in the life and work of the English Church. Women are not likely to be admitted to the priesthood, but the present order of deaconesses will be extended and strengthened, so that women may not only enlist as "crusaders," but they will be permitted to give addresses in churches and serve on church councils and other official bodies. The Committee on Evangelistic Work boldly declare: "If we are to have the fullest service of the laity, women must have adequate scope for the use of those charismatic gifts which they so often possess. A great proportion of the Church's work is being done by women, and the hidden power of their devotion has been one of the greatest influences in its spiritual life. We have received evidence to show that the Church is losing the services of many women who feel that an untrue distinction has been drawn between men and women who are members of the same spiritual society." The whole question of women's work is now being considered by a representative committee whose report is likely to be issued in the course of a month or two. I understand that several of the waverers have been converted with the result that a strong pronouncement may be expected.

Arising out of the admitted failure of the evangelistic work of the Church is a resolute movement to overhaul and improve the training of the clergy. I recently attended conferences of workers engaged in a special evangelistic effort. Frankly I was amazed at the lack of training and meagre equipment possessed by some of those taking part in the project, and yet these were men who had been carefully selected as "specialists." To remedy this defect "schools for clergy" have been organized in two or three dioceses and have been found to be helpful and stimulating, but it is our system of training candidates for holy orders which is inadequate and ineffective. The Church is certainly awakening to this need and in a later article I hope to describe what is being done. Sufficient has been said to show that the Church is doing her best to set her house in order. "God has been very patient with us," writes a keen thinker, "and the people have been patient, too. Perhaps the time is not far distant when our candlestick may be removed out of its place unless we turn and repent and bring forth worthy fruits of repentance." It is in this spirit that the movements I have alluded to are being backed up by those who really care for the well-being of the Church of England.

STRENGTHEN our wills, O Lord, by the gift of Thy grace, that we may overcome our temptations, and daily increase in spiritual life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

REFLECTIONS OF A CHURCHWARDEN

Wages—II

IN the preceding part of this study of Father Bull's system of National Guilds the substance of the plan which he advocates was stated, and it was pointed out that in respect to the wage system, which he so severely denounced, no wage earner objects to receiving wages or to getting pay for his work; and that the objections, if there are any, are not to receiving pay for work, but to giving work for pay. It was shown, by way of example, that the choristers who sing in our choir, the curate who assists the rector, even the rector himself, when subjected to the criteria of what Father Bull calls wage slavery, are wage slaves; and further, that with three or four apparent exceptions, all our congregation are wage slaves. And yet they do not seem to be conscious of their servitude or to resent it.

How are you going to argue with a person who calls this system wage slavery?

It will not do to dismiss this illustration as trifling, for it is not; it satisfies every one of the conditions that Father Bull calls slavery, even though the servitude extend to no more than eight or nine hours a week. "Under chattel slavery," he says, "the owner bought a man entire; under wage slavery the owner buys only so much of the man, and for so long, as he needs." Our choristers who are old enough work forty-four or fifty hours a week in various other employments, in which they have probably no more to say about conditions, foremen, and locality than they have to say with reference to their service in church. The reason why in that work they are no more slaves than they are in the service of the Church as clergy or as choristers is because their wills are free to promise to do it or not to promise, and because they are able to break the promise after they have made it. If they break it, they may incur such penalties as their employer might incur if he broke his promise; but this circumstance does not make them slaves to the employer any more than it makes him a slave to them. Here I think lies a broad distinction between the free man and the slave; the free man can make a promise and assume an obligation; the slave cannot. The free man can bind himself; the slave is bound by another.

We are familiar with the argument that workmen are not free because they have not the means to wait until they find an employment to their taste, or to travel from place to place until they reach the conditions that suit them or to fashion their conditions according to their preferences. But to say this is the same as to say that I, being a civil engineer, am a slave to circumstances because when I should like to spend the winter at Santa Barbara I am compelled by the exigencies of my business to spend it in the uncongenial weather of the town in which I live; or to say that I am a slave because I am compelled to practise the profession of engineering for the reason that I do not know any other; or to work on a dam in Idaho when I should much prefer to work in Connecticut, because no one offers me an engagement in Connecticut. The fact of the matter is that no one on this earth, artisan or capitalist, peasant or pauper, is exempt from the compulsion of circumstances. In this sense the savages who dwelt in the caves of Dordogne were slaves because they had to live where they could find food.

3. I suppose, however, that without knowing it we all, clergy and choristers and congregation, both on Sundays in church and on weekdays out of church, are slaves to the wage system. Will Father Bull's remedy of National Guilds emancipate the wage slave? Will he no longer have to go where employers want his labor, or will he control the conditions under which he works, or choose the foremen whom he shall obey? The answer seems clear: the Guild, we are told, would have the entire control and arrangement of wages, hours of labor, election of foremen, managers, and all in authority. It would simply substitute a new wage system for the old one, and under the new he would have less control of conditions than at present. He can now, wherever unions permit, make his own bargain for wages and hours; and if he does not like the foremen and managers he can quit. Under the guild system all his bargains are made for him. He cannot even strike, for "in matters of dispute each guild will retain the power to strike."

One of the strongest safeguards of the wage slave as matters now stand is that he can acquire capital by economy and thrift, and in his efforts to better himself can fall back on what he owns. Under the guild system he is deprived of this safeguard, for "the State would take the place of the capitalists." The State will also see to it that the emancipated slave does not get his hands on any of this capital which it is going to take from the capitalists, because "the State, while retaining ownership of the capital so acquired, would lease it to the guild for each particular industry." The individual slave under the existing wage system frequently has for his better security some capital in the form of savings in the bank, or a little house, or an automobile, or a cow, or chickens, or something else; and all these commodities he can dispose of, as well as his labor, at pleasure. But the guild system transfers all his capital to the State, and declaring that his labor is not a commodity transfers the control of that to the guild; and thereby strips him completely.

Under the new system the State also is the universal consumer. "The State would make its demand upon the guild for what it needed." As nobody but the State has any capital with which a guild can carry on production, the guild must accept such prices for the labor of its members as the State shall choose to pay; and if the guild is dissatisfied and strikes, "the State in conjunction with the other guilds will deal with it by a just and righteous judgment, and raising the tax on the offending guild, and in the last resort by cutting off supplies."

As the individual under this system would have no power of himself to help himself, he would be quite certain, under the influence of "original sin, that bias to selfishness which cannot be ignored," to seek his advantage through the partiality of the bosses of the guild. The bosses are no more exempt from that "following after Adam" than the slaves. Here we have the elements of a new feudal system, or a new system of correlated rings.

It does not much help the individual slave that the officers of the guild might be elective, and that its affairs might be managed by elections. The same bias of original sin would maintain the arts of management which in other relations manipulate majorities. Be this as it may, the individual is certainly not free with respect to his capital, for he has none; nor his labor, for that is controlled by others; nor his person, for where his work is appointed there must he stay.

4. One other point requires notice. The evil of the present wage system is said to consist in part in this: That "it directs production to profit instead of to goodness, utility and beauty." We are not distinctly told that the new system would not direct production to profit, but his is the implication; at least, "work will no longer be a mere striving for private gain." On this subject there are two things to be said.

In the first place, so far as I know, there is nobody within my acquaintance whose motive of work is "a mere striving for private gain." Whether or not my case is exceptional I cannot say, but it is a fact that all the men and women I know seem to take a pride in their work and like to produce something of "goodness, utility and beauty." They are more or less hampered in this ambition by the unions to which they belong.

In the second place, profit is the increase between the cost of producing an article and the price for which it sells. If, as appears to be implied in the guild system, there is no profit, there will be no margin for saving, and consequently no increase in wealth. As the capital acquired by the State from the old system is exhausted there will be nothing to replace it, and the accumulated wealth of the community will rapidly be consumed, with the result that all men will be living from hand to mouth. This is the way savages live.

If, however, the system leaves room for profit, who shall get it? At least not the individual worker, for profit when realized becomes capital, and all capital, according to the theory belongs to the State. For the worker, "not selfishness but service will now be the chief motive," and he will have to be satisfied with the recognition of his work as "a real contribution to the commonwealth." For the same reason the guild will not get the profit. The guild cannot even intercept some of it to acquire tools for the individual worker, for "all the means of production," as well as all the capital, belongs to the State. Whichever way you take it the individual gets no profit from his work—only a bare living, which as the wealth of the community diminishes, must also fall away correspondingly. In short, a better incentive not to work could hardly be devised; and to meet this result we are told that "the refusal to work can rightly be treated as a crime." So in the end our system of National Guilds becomes a system in which the community at large are the slaves of a dominant oligarchy of foremen, overseers and managers; which is precisely the ideal of the community which the philosophical minds of the Young Turk Committee of Union and Progress constructed and tried to establish in Turkey, and which Mr. Lenine with indifferent success is trying to domesticate in Russia.

It should not be supposed that churchwardens who find imperfections in Father Bull's scheme are in favor of wage slavery, or any other kind of slavery; or that they are opposed to improvement in the conditions or the rewards of labor. It is precisely because they believe strongly in liberty and in progress that they feel bound to protest urgently against a plan whose inevitable result would be the degradation of the individual under a relentless system of tyranny and poverty.

THE FOURTH WORD

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

IT has been said that our Lord had Psalm xxii. in mind when he spoke these words; that He started to repeat it because its latter part so perfectly expressed the triumph of His own faith over His terrible situation in that hour, but that His strength failed, and only the words of the first verse passed His lips. But the whole psalm was in His mind, we are told, and therefore, though the only words He actually spoke sound like the cry of a crushed spirit, nevertheless we ought to understand that in fact our Lord's spirit was not tried, but serenely calm. He was merely too weak to say more. And so these few words must serve to suggest the rest of the psalm to us.

It may be so. For myself, it is easier to take these words in their natural sense; to regard them, not as a quotation, but as words rung from our Lord by His agony. Was it not natural that our Lord should utter just such an appeal?

We don't know what called out that cry. Whether it was some spasm of pain almost beyond bearing; whether, in His agony, something happened to Christ which often happens to us when we come to the hardest part of some heroic task, and for a moment the rightness of what He was doing faded in distinctness. That is an experience that comes often to us. When all the world is fair we make some fine decision to take up a righteous burden and carry it. We do it deliberately. While we still have power to draw back we see that to go on with this thing will bring us toil and trouble. Nevertheless we choose to go on, because we see that the toil and trouble will be well spent. So we go forward. Then the toil and trouble descend upon us in good earnest, and we wonder why we ever undertook this thing. The toil and trouble now seem altogether too high a price to pay for the little good we can do. Why has God deserted us, we ask then. Why, if He really called us to this task, has He now left us to wrestle with it alone? Perhaps He didn't set us the task at all; perhaps it was just our own excited fancy. Then it takes all our will power to hold on to the conviction that this thing is our duty, and to persevere with it.

Thousands of Americans, under no obligation to offer their services, went to fight in the greatest war of history under banners of other nations. They went because they could not be at peace at home. They could not rest till they had a part in the service of a great cause. But when they got into the trenches, and for the first time crouched in the mud under the falling shells, I warrant some of them cursed themselves for fools. They tried to feel the glory of their self-sacrifice as they had felt it at home, and could not, and wondered why God had forsaken them.

Was it some momentary inability like that to feel it was worth while for Him to hang and suffer there that brought this cry from our Lord's lips? We don't know. But we do know that "only suffering enables men to reach certain heights." We wish it were not so. We try to think it is not so, and pray that our children may never have to face the hardships we faced. There shall be nothing to hinder them from growing sweetly and naturally into splendid men and women. How many fathers who have won distinction by the hardest kind of battle plan to have their sons win it without any battle at all! They forget that they got their own strength by their long struggle against odds. And they wonder what is wrong with their sons because they seem unable to develop the same strength of character under much easier conditions. The trouble with their sons is chiefly those easier conditions. What they need to make them as strong as their fathers is the handicaps their fathers had to overcome.

"Only suffering enables men to reach certain heights." That is one of the truths which help us in the days when troubles come upon us. We do not think the trouble is a punishment, nor can we understand why God, who loves us, permits this blow to stun us. The one certain fact that stands out from the confusion is that if we bear this cross with the right spirit we shall come out of the shadow better men than we went in. Thomas Arnold is the only man I ever heard of who asked for suffering, who felt to pass through life without it would be to miss a blessing. But if we could know what things are really our blessings, I suppose we should often pray for suffering, for ourselves and for those we love.

"Only suffering enables men to reach certain heights." And Christ could reach the summit only by the same path human feet are treading. In the fair home beyond the sky that we call heaven it may be possible for children to grow in righteousness without any knowledge of pain. Even there, if the heavenly life is to be truly joyous, and truly life, there must be stir, and action, and a purpose to achieve. But here on earth we know only one way by which human souls can be refined until they flash and shine with spiritual splendor—by suffering. That is the only instrument that can cut the jewel. And could our Lord live the perfect human life without coming into the great, purifying human experience of pain? Could He be truly the leader of our kind unless He went ahead up that narrow, arduous path by which alone we can gain the heights? "It became him, for whom are all things, and through whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory to make the author of their salvation perfect through suffering."

And not suffering of the body only. If that had been all, Christ would never have known the worst troubles men have to bear. Sufferings of the spirit, too. Sufferings such as come with doubt, when the vision fades and God seems to be deaf, or, for all we know, heartless. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

SAMUEL M. DORRANCE.

A CARPENTER

BY UNA HUNT

I AM a carpenter of Nazareth.
Before the war,
Intent upon the daily round
I never wondered about Him,
That other one,
Who watched the cloud shadows float across the plain
As He pared the clean white shavings
From some board,
Perhaps on this same spot.
And yet the pilgrims
When they came to visit, this,
The place where He once lived,
Stood at the entrance to my shop
And gazed as if I too were sacred,
And in surprise exclaimed together,
"There is a carpenter at work,
Just as He worked, those centuries ago."
They never noticed that I used
A modern plane and saw.
As the shavings curled about my feet,
I cursed them in the name of Allah, silently.
Most of the pilgrims were shrill and restless,
And had not the faces of those who think great thoughts.
I did a good business,
In those days,
With crosses of olive wood.
I spent my whole time making them,
Except when word came that pilgrims were on the way.

Then I would pose at the entrance to my shop
Hewing on a beam,
It was always the same beam.
Their Christ, before He preached of Heaven,
Worked daily building houses in this town.
I sold many crosses from hacking at that beam.
But now that the war is here,
And the pilgrims come no longer,
Having no sale for crosses,
I work in earnest as He worked,
Building houses.
And as I trim the ends of beams,
I have begun to wonder,
Was He only a man like me,
A common man of Nazareth,
Or a Prophet,
Who watched the lives of men and women,
And the seed time and the harvest,
From the bench beside His workshop door?
And sitting there
Heard the whisper in His heart
Of the great voice of God.
It seems to me that Nazareth
Among its hills,
Is very close to heaven,
And it would be easy, if one had faith,
To hear the voice of God.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

DR. PATTON TO BE DIRECTOR OF NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN

Board of Missions to Undertake Missionary Education Propaganda

The Board of Missions at its last meeting adopted a resolution looking to the inauguration as soon as possible of "a nation-wide campaign of missionary information and education." A committee was appointed to take this into consideration and their report was presented to the executive committee on March 11. The committee recommended that such a campaign be inaugurated at once. In looking for a leader they naturally turned to the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D.D., who has made such a conspicuous success of the missionary mission. They asked that he be appointed director of the nation-wide plan. They hope that there will be very close cooperation between the Board of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education, and the Joint Commission on Social Service, and that all of the organizations in the Church, especially the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, will also cooperate. The executive committee expressed its cordial approval of the plan in its general outline.

The Bishop of Porto Rico was present and told the executive committee of the solemn obligation offered the Church in the island of Santo Domingo. Fully 20,000 negroes, all affiliated with the Church of England, are in the island at the present time. The bishop knew of one place where there were at least 10,000 of these Church of England negroes and no ministrations being given them by our Church, or in fact by any one except the Moravians. We have but one missionary in the whole island.

The bishop asked that provision be made for at least two more. He felt sure that if the salaries of the workers were provided, that the equipment necessary could be secured in the field. These people must and will be taken care of. The responsibility is ours, and we must not shirk it and saddle upon others the care of these people who belong to us. The executive committee expressed the greatest interest and concern in this statement of the bishop and asked him to submit to the committee in time for its careful consideration at its next meeting a detailed statement of the needs.

The treasurer reported that $232,712 had been received for the two months of the present fiscal year. Large as these receipts have been, unfortunately they have not been large enough to meet all the appropriations. It has therefore been necessary to withdraw $64,000 from the reserve deposits to make up the deficiency.

Bible Societies Exchange Felicitations

The good feeling between the American and British peoples is indicated in a letter from the Duke of Connaught just made public by the American Bible Society. Answering a letter of congratulation, Captain

Philip Ashworth, Aide-de-camp for the Duke of Connaught, writes to the American Society:

"I am desired by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught to write and ask you to convey to the American Bible Society his most grateful thanks for their greetings and good wishes on his becoming President of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

"His Royal Highness sincerely hopes that the good feelings and co-operation that exist between the Bible Societies of two great English-speaking races may long continue."

BP. REMINGTON WELCOMED TO SOUTH DAKOTA DIOCESE

Men of Cathedral City Show Good Will at Dinner

SIOUX FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA.—On his return from his trip East, where he has been over a month, Bishop Burleson brought back Suffragan Bishop Remington with him. This is the first time that Bishop Remington has been in his district for work. He arrived on Shrove Tuesday. That evening he was introduced to the cathedral parish at a men's dinner and was greeted with splendid enthusiasm by the largest number of men that have ever gathered at such a function in the parish.

Dean Woodruff, as toastmaster, introduced the speakers. The first speaker was the Rev. William Campbell, who has just returned from France to take up work in the district, and who gave a vivid account of his experiences. Bishop Burleson next told of his observations of the political and social unrest of the East. He was followed by Bishop Remington, who thrilled the men by his stories of the work at the base hospital at which he was a chaplain.

On Ash Wednesday evening Bishop Remington preached his first sermon in South Dakota in the cathedral. His talks roused a great deal of enthusiasm and as a result after the service on Ash Wednesday evening a church attendance campaign was started. Each man promised to attend each one of the Sunday and Wednesday evening services during Lent and to bring one more man with him.

The two bishops left the next day for the Black Hills to look over the field out there, it being probable that Bishop Remington will make his headquarters in that part of the field.

Fire Damages Butte Church

BUTTE, MONTANA.—Fire originating in the basement of St. John's Church on the morning of March 5, just as communicants were arriving for Ash Wednesday services, did damage to the amount of $15,000, it is estimated by Rev. C. F. Chapman, the rector. The fire, which was due to an overheated furnace, destroyed the chancel and pulpit and an altar lately installed at a cost of $1,000. The pipe organ, a valuable instrument, was also badly damaged. The loss is covered by insurance.

GENERAL CONVENTION PLANS ARE NOW WELL UNDER WAY

Two Houses to Meet Far Apart— Bishop Brent Is Preacher (Special Correspondence.)

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—Plans for the entertaining and housing the great General Convention of the Church are now beginning to take definite form. Many committees are at work and tentative plans can be discussed. The House of Deputies will hold its sessions in "the Arcadia." This hall was to have been greatly enlarged so that the House of Bishops and many committees would also be taken care of under the one roof, but because of the war and the consequent difficulty in procuring steel this could not be done. Detroit has no large convention hall. The Arcadia is one of two large halls which are used for dancing on four nights of the week, and at other times for symphony concerts, grand opera, recitals and mass meetings. This hall will be used by the General Convention during the days, and on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings. On the other evenings of the week it is a public dance hall.

The House of Bishops will hold their sessions in the convention hall of St. Paul's Cathedral three quarters of a mile up Woodward Avenue from the Arcadia. Old St. John's Church and Parish House is a like distance down Woodward Avenue, and will be used extensively during the convention.

A daily forum is being planned by the Social Service Commission. This will probably be held at the Jewish Temple Beth El, directly opposite the Arcadia.

The convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will open in Detroit on the first day of October. On the sixth the provincial synod will be conveyed, probably at St. John's Church.

On the eighth the General Convention will open with an early celebration of the Holy Communion at St. Paul's Cathedral. At 10:30 A. M. at the Arcadia will be the opening service of the convention with Bishop Brent as the preacher. That evening at the Arcadia will occur a great missionary mass meeting on the subject, "The Meaning of the War to the Church and the World." Bishop Brent will preside and this session will probably be one of the most inspiring meetings of all the convention. Bishop Brent said he would work out plans for this session on his voyage to France. On October 15 will occur the reception to the bishops at the Hotel Statler.

Besides finding headquarters for the Board of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education and the Social Service Commission, the committee on arrangements is locating headquarters for seven other organizations. The Girls Friendly Society are planning renting a house where they can entertain and serve tea afternoons. The headquarters for deaconesses will probably be at Christ Church House on Jefferson Avenue.

KENYON COLLEGE FOSTERS INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

General Kenyon to Receive Degree— Two French Students at College

GAMBIER, OHIO—Cordial international relations with England and France are being promoted in a definite way at Kenyon College.

On Friday, March 21, the college will at a special assembly confer the degree of Doctor of Laws upon Brigadier General L. R. Kenyon, C. B., Head of the Department of Inspection, British War Mission, and grand-nephew of the second Lord Kenyon, founder of Kenyon College. General Kenyon, together with Mrs. Kenyon and their young son, will be present to receive the degree in person. In connection with the ceremony the Rev. Dr. Smythe, dean of Bexley Hall, will give an historical address and an appropriate portion of the Founder's Memorial commemorating the English donors will be read.

Two French students appointed by the French government have come into residence at Kenyon College. These men were appointed through the French High Commission on the basis of their previous educational and military records. They will study English and other subjects at the college for the next two months. Both men have taken the bachelor's degree in France, have seen several years of military service and have been wounded. Both have been awarded the French War Cross for personal bravery. One is machine gunner in a battalion of Chasseurs Alpins and the other is an artilleryman who under the most dangerous conditions saved the life of a wounded French officer.

REFINEMENTS OF THEOLOGY HAVE DISCREDITED CHURCH

Metropolitan of British Columbia Pleads for New Emphasis

In a letter to the press, in which he pleads for a new emphasis in the Church, the Most Rev. F. W. Du Vernet, Metropolitan of British Columbia, writes:

As soon as the early Church began to lose its fresh zeal for genuine religion it endeavored to make up for its declining spiritual life by its greater emphasis upon the refinements of the theology. Bitter controversy, shifting from point to point with each succeeding century, has been the result until the cry of those who really long for the simple religion of Christ ascends to heaven: "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid Him."

All refinements of theology should be subjected to the test of practical value. Do they tend to make men less selfish in spirit and more Christlike in character? Do they help to bind together in mutual service all classes in the community? If not, they may be a detriment to true religion, helping to choke the life of God in the soul of man.

It is an historical fact that it has been the refinements of theology which have split the Church of Christ into so many conflicting sects and shorn it of its spiritual power, and it will only be by shifting the emphasis back to the few grand essentials of religion that there will be a drawing together of the different denominations in one great comprehensive Church, the leading characteristic of which will be that it puts the Christ-spirit first.

Let there be such a general uprising in all our churches in response to the trumpet call of the new era that the refinements of theology, which have been the cause of so much division in the past, will be swept into a corner and the few grand essentials of the Christian religion put in the very forefront of our reconstructed society, so that the spirit of Christ in the souls of men may have the opportunity to bind together in brotherly love and mutual service all individuals in the family, all classes in the community and all nations in the world

DENVER'S LEADING CITIZEN CELEBRATES 81st BIRTHDAY

Dean Hart Is Felicitated by Many Representative People

DENVER, COLORADO.—A crowded gathering met in the chapter house of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, to celebrate the dean's 81st birthday on March 3. Amongst representative people were leaders of all schools of religious thought, notably Rabbi Friedman, Dr. Morse of the First Baptist Church and Dr. Boyle of the Central Presbyterian. The Ministerial Alliance presented an address of congratulation by Dr. Morse and Presbyterians in synod congratulated the dean with a message by Dr. Boyle.

It is with good reason that Dean Hart has been called "Denver's leading citizen," having stood for uprightness and often fought a hard fight for it through all the forty years of the city's growth from frontier conditions to being the center of the Rocky Mountain region. In his time the cathedral property has grown from $25,000 to $467,000 with a loss of $100,000 due to fire not covered by insurance and defective building.

Dr. Jowett Will Not Return

Although overtures were made to him to do so, the Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett, pastor of Westminster Chapel, Buckingham Gate, London, will not return to the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

He sent this decision by Cornelius R. Agnew, who recently returned from England, where he went on a business trip.

The Rev. Dr. John Kellman, pastor of St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, also declined to consider a call, but both he and Dr. Jowett will come over in the fall for a few weeks to preach and lecture.

Honored by Greek Community

TARPON SPRINGS, FLORIDA.—The Greek community of this place met recently and unanimously voted to make the Rev. T. J. Lacey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, New York, an honorary citizen of Tarpon Springs and member of the Greek community.

Dr. Lacey is the first man, not of Greek descent, to be thus honored. He has shown great interest in the Greeks, has made a study of them and loves them very much.

WAR SECRETARY IS URGED TO BACK CHAPLAIN CORPS

Bishop Brent Says Lack Is Greatest Weakness of Service

Just before his departure from Washington to inspect the Western military reservations, Secretary Baker received from the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, through its chairman, Bishop William F. McDowell, a letter urging the organization of a chaplain corps for the army. This memorial was signed also by the officers of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, bodies representing practically all of the Protestant denominations in the United States. This action was taken after conference with Roman Catholic leaders who expressed their sympathy and their intention to present a similar communication to the Secretary of War.

Secretary Baker expressed his gratitude on receipt of the communication. "These suggestions," he said, "are most welcome at the present time, as we are engaged upon a general study of Army organization, and I can assure you for them a most careful consideration."

The letter cites the fact that the chaplains are now the only branch of the service without corps organization, and urges that this be given. It pleads also that adequate recognition of ability and the assurance of promotion be given, in order to increase the effectiveness of the chaplaincy as part of the army organization.

In his recent visit to America, Bishop Brent stated that the absence of a staff organization on this side for the army chaplains was the most disabling feature of their work. With General Pershing's approval, the bishop as Senior G. H. Q. Chaplain of the A. E. F., had effected an organization of the 1,300 army chaplains in France that has rendered splendid service.

It is now desired to extend to the whole army this same idea of organization that prevails with all other branches of the service and which proved so effective for the chaplains in France, so that the representatives of the Church with the soldiers will have equal military footing with the officers of the medical corps and other organized branches of the service.

Bishop Fiske Talks to Workmen

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—On Monday evening, March 3, Bishop Fiske addressed 600 people at a special gathering of the employees of the Shepard Electric Crane Company of Montour Falls. The meeting was held in the local theatre under the auspices of the Shepard Progress Club, an organization of the workmen. This is one of a series of similar meetings which the bishop is addressing in factory and mill towns.

C. P. C. Will Meet

The regular monthly meeting of the Church Periodical Club will be held on Monday, March 24, at 11 o'clock at the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, 3 East 45th street, New York. The speaker will be Mrs. Thomas Wetmore of Christ School, Arden.

DR. CHARLES H. BOYNTON GOES TO THE HOLY LAND

Sails in Interest of Children's Gifts for Armenian Relief

The Rev. Charles H. Boynton, D.D., of the General Theological Seminary, sailed on the Leviathan, March 14, with representatives of twelve other communions. He will land at Brest and proceed by way of Marseilles to Port Said, Cairo, thence to Jerusalem, Damascus, Beirut, Aleppo, and return by way of the Black Sea and Constantinople.

The committee goes to observe the methods of relief and the conditions found in Armenia and to report to the respective churches.

This is preliminary to the campaign for Armenian relief which will be carried out by the Sunday Schools of North America during the Christmas season; it will extend from Advent to January 19, the latter date being the Armenian Christmas. It is proposed that the Sunday School money be devoted entirely to the care of the thousands of orphans who are now wandering homeless and helpless about the land that has been freed from the Turks. Last year the Sunday Schools of the Church contributed about $25,000.

Dr. William E. Gardner of the General Board of Religious Education received an invitation from the American Committee for Relief in the Near East to be its guest with leaders from other communions on an investigating trip in Armenia.

After consideration and consultation, Dr. Gardner decided that it was impossible for him to absent himself from the office. He therefore urged Dr. Boynton, secretary of the board, to accept the invitation. Dr. Boynton will return about the first of July.

CHURCHES ARE ORGANIZING TO SERVE RETURNING MEN

Campaign Launched by Brotherhood to Help Men from Front

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. — That every church in the country can give invaluable service to the home-coming soldiers, sailors and marines is the basis of a campaign launched by the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew following a conference of its camp secretaries, held at Camp Gordon early this month. The plan is to organize in each church a committee composed of its active laymen to be known as the Church Welcome Committee. The object of the campaign is to extend a warm personal welcome to the men as they return home, absorbing them into active fellowship within the Church and enlisting their constructive co-operation to the end that the functions of the Church may be conserved and quickened.

To give practical help in organizing these Church Welcome Committees, the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood is sending many of its experienced camp secretaries into the several provinces to engage in this work. A booklet has been prepared by the Brotherhood under the title "When the Boys Come Home—A Practical Parish Plan," and has been sent to the rector of every parish in the country.

Members of the committee visit the men's homes. If anything is needed there, they take steps to provide for it. They extend a hearty welcome personally to the man and his family and aim to bring both into closer relationship with the Church.

Active business men on the committee interview the returned man and give him counsel and advice, as well as help, so that he may be fitted into the job best suited to his ability. There is no duplication of efforts here in that the committee co-operates with the U. S. Employment Service and other agencies organized to supply jobs for men discharged from the service. The committee also interviews local business men and keeps in close touch with jobs that are open.

Every effort is made to bring the returned men into the various active organizations of the Church's work and to provide work in the Church for every man according to his ability and opportunity.

Parishes desiring further information on the working of this plan, or those who desire a visit to the parish by one of the Brotherhood's camp secretaries now engaged in this work, should communicate with F. S. Titsworth, executive secretary, Army and Navy Department, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Philadelphia.

STREET SERVICES FOR JEWS WILL BE HELD IN NEW YORK

Bolshevism Said to Be Spreading Among Jewish People

With the purpose of holding noon-day meetings for Jews on the streets of New York City, Mr. B. A. M. Schapiro, a Jewish churchman, is raising a fund of $2,000 to carry on the work. In his undertaking he has the backing of several of the clergy of New York.

"For some time, we have felt that more should be done for the teeming thousands of Jews, who are thronging our streets daily between the hours of twelve and one, during lunch time on Fifth Avenue," says Mr. Schapiro. "We have done some personal work among them, and have found them courteous and receptive, in accepting our tracts, and it was very encouraging when passing along the streets after distributing several hundred of them, to find not a single tract thrown away.

"It is sad, but true, that Bolshevism and extreme Socialism are on the increase among that class of Jews. The Church ought to make some overture to them with the Gospel of our Lord and Master. We, Christians, believe that the most important thing in this world is character and character-building, but what is the greatest character-builder, if it is not the Word of God? The Gospel is the thing that puts the policeman on the inside of the man.

"The situation we now face is a menacing one and something must be done and done quickly. The only democracy that is really safe for the world and for us is a Christian democracy. We wish to hold noon services, with eminent speakers whose message shall be Christian and patriotic, and who shall help these people in our midst to an understanding of the country in which they live."

D. S. C. HAS BEEN AWARDED REV. MERCER G. JOHNSTON

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—Award of the Distinguished Service Cross to the Rev. Mercer Green Johnston, former rector of Trinity Church, now Trinity Cathedral, was announced in citations made public by the War Department recently. Mr. Johnston, whose present home is in Baltimore, was in France with the Y. M. C. A. and his decoration was conferred for his heroism in taking charge of litter bearers who had become disorganized under intense artillery fire. He continued to direct the evacuation of the wounded while suffering severely from gas.

Mr. Johnston's heroic act was performed October 27 in action near Verdun, and is thus described:

"After volunteering and going to the front line through heavy bombardment for the purpose of burying the dead, Mr. Johnston found the litter service of the 101st Infantry badly disorganized on account of heavy casualties, and intense shelling. He immediately took charge of the litter bearers, reorganized the service, took care of the slightly wounded himself, saw to the procuring and loading of ambulances, and, although badly gassed and suffering severely, refused to leave his post until all had been taken care of."

STARTLING REFORMATION MOVEMENT IS REVEALED

Action by Congress of Roman Priests in Bohemia

By the Rev. Elliston J. Perot.

With the approval of the translator, Prof. Louis Francis Miskovsky, of Oberlin College, Ohio, a native of Bohemia, publicity is given, in English, to the following startling document, which speaks for itself. The influence of Bohemia (or Czecho-Slovakia) in world affairs, both political and religious, is a factor greatly underestimated; and the significance of a movement such as that here described, in the very heart of the former Austro-Hungarian Empire, is beyond present powers of calculation. It is evident that forces are there at work which should be watched, as carefully by those in sympathy with the spirit of the movement, as they are, doubtless, being watched by those whose concern it is to restore the status quo ante bellum.

Congress of Bohemian Roman Catholic Priests, in Prague, Bohemia, held in the Community House, Old Town, January 23, 1919.

Present, 2,209. Of these 1,744 gave their full, 410 their partial consent, and only 55 refused their consent, to the following proposition:

1. To do away with patronage, and to adopt a just and equitable appointment of priests to parishes.
2. To elect bishops freely, both by priests and laymen.
3. To provide adequate material support for priests, both in service, and in retirement.
4. To introduce wherever possible the mother-tongue, (the Czech, or Bohemian,) in religious services and ceremonies.
5. To do away with the celibacy of the clergy, both of priests and bishops.
6. The democratization of consistories and vicariates.
7. To remove the requirement of shaving, and of the wearing of the clerical garb.
8. To remove the prohibition of including those who have been cremated, in administering the sacraments for the dead.
9. To completely revise the Breviary, and compile a brief Book of Prayer, in the Bohemian, (Czech,) language.
10. To abolish Episcopal visitations, in their present form.
11. To require that all pastoral letters be submitted to the consistory, by the bishop, before their publication, and that they be in the Bohemian, (Czech,) language. Note. The bishops were enjoined to desist from speaking in insulting terms, about the Slavic nationalities, and from issuing injunctions in direct opposition to the spirit of the Gospel.
12. That the Holy See be put on an independent financial basis. Until this is worked out by international agreement, the necessary funds to be raised by an assessment of one per cent on all priestly incomes.
13. That the system of the education of the clergy be radically changed. "Their training has hitherto been such as only to deprive them of the respect of the educated public. It was disgraceful when theological students, who were expected to excel in intelligence, were not allowed to read books and periodicals, in the seminary. Hence they could not compete with other intelligent people, and merely became the butts of ridicule and contempt. Only ignoramuses are held in contempt, and we do not want to be ignoramuses."

14. Note. A large majority of the priests present demanded a revision of the trial of John Huss. "The fact is that John Huss's case was tried in an age of universal ecclesiastical corruption, and that every man of sense and judgment is convinced of the necessity of the revision of his trial. If a possible link to rehabilitate the Papacy with the Bohemian Nation can be found, it is the revision of the trial of John Huss. The Church will only gain by it, because she will have demonstrated that she is not concerned with defending privilege wrong, but the truth. It is a truth that in the case of John Huss a judicial murder was committed. It is a fact that nothing has injured us more than the calamity which befell in Constance. It is indeed rather late to reopen the case, but for the righting of wrong it is never late. Let us have the courage to demand the righting of this wrong, and many a sting of hot and bitter scorn aimed at the Catholic Church will be removed thereby. Here also belongs the proposal that the day of the death of John Huss, July 6, be made a saint's day, and that the day of St. John Nepomucene, (May 16,) be made a common day."

COMMODORE BOURNE LEAVES $100,000 TO N. Y. CATHEDRAL

In a codicil executed the day before his death Commodore Bourne provided for a gift of $100,000 as his Easter offering for the building of the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and for a lenten gift of all his shares in the Provident Loan Society for the use of the choir school. This choir school had already received a very generous gift in the form of the Bourne Fund from the late commodore.

Commodore Bourne had always been interested in church music. In the sixties he sang in Trinity choir. Recently he had taken a very great interest in the cathedral choir school, and at his request was made a member of the cathedral choir. The choir accompanied Bishop Greer to Oakdale last week to officiate at Commodore Bourne's funeral.

Among many other charities, Commodore Bourne left $10,000 and one thousand shares of the City and Suburban Homes Company to each of the following: Sheltering Arms; Emmanuel Church, Great River; St. Ann's Church, Sayville (in memory of his son); Church Charity Foundation of Long Island; New York City Mission. He also left $1,000 each to the rectors of the Great River and Sayville churches.

Party Sails for Haiti

The Rev. Arthur R. Gray, D.D., secretary for Latin America, and the Rev. Wilson Lloyd Bevan, Ph.D., accompanied Bishop Colmore when he sailed for Haiti last Saturday. The party will visit the Haitian mission.

BISHOP GREER RECEIVES GIFT FROM HIS CLERGY

Gold Watch Presented on Occasion of His 75th Birthday

On the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday Thursday of this week Bishop Greer received from the clergy of his diocese a gracious token of their affection and loyalty. At three-thirty on that afternoon a committee of three New York clergymen went to the home of the bishop, and presented to him a very beautiful gold watch made by Tiffany, the finest product of their shops.

Inside the case were inscribed the following words: "To the Rt. Rev. David Hummell Greer, D.D., on his 75th birthday, March 20, 1919, from the clergy of the Diocese of New York, with grateful and affectionate loyalty."

The arrangements for making the gift were undertaken some weeks ago when an informal meeting of the clergy of the diocese discussed the matter and appointed a committee to carry it through. The committee consisted of Dr. Slattery, Dr. Sedgwick and Mr. Atkinson. Letters were sent to the clergy throughout the diocese giving the opportunity of contributing to the fund for the gift, and limiting the contributions to one dollar. The response was immediate and general. The committee was enabled to buy from Tiffany the best watch they produced.

Bishop Greer celebrated his birthday quietly. He has been deluged with letters and telegrams of congratulation and felicitation. A few weeks ago the bishop completed fifteen years in the Episcopate.

REUNION WITH ROME IS "AN ABSURD OBJECTIVE"

Says Priest, Declaring There Is Nothing with Which to Unite

"An absurd objective" was the term applied by the Rev. Walter Drum, a Jesuit, Sunday at high mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, to the visitation of bishops of the Episcopal Church to Pope Benedict XV to discuss reunion with the Roman Catholic Church.

"The thing is simply absurd," declared Father Drum. "Reunion of what? There is nothing definite in the Anglican Church with which to reunite; and whatsoever there is is dead and rotted. Of all the Protestant churches the Anglican is, perhaps, the least united in its teachings."

"The thirty-second of their thirty-nine articles of religion says that 'priestly ab-with which to reunite; and whatsoever the sole prerogative of God'; and yet there are Episcopal ministers who hear confessions and simulate absolution."

G. F. S. Leaves Missions House

The central office of the Girls' Friendly Society, which for so long has been in the Church Missions House in New York, is to move to an office building on Fortieth Street near the Public Library. This has become necessary because the Board of Missions needs the rooms heretofore occupied by the G. F. S. for its own work. The move will take place about May 1.

Our Weekly News Letters

BOSTON

The Twenty Weeks—Bishop Lawrence wrote the following note in his Message No. III to the diocese:

"The Twenty Weeks and what they have meant to thousands have filled me with gratitude. The diocese seems to have become more than ever one big family. Handing the message by one person to another, the call at the house, the pleasant word of greeting, the quiet surprise—"I am glad you called and brought the message from the bishop"—such little threads of thoughtfulness make strong cords which bind the people of a parish and of a diocese together.

"Have you any idea of the number of these threads? There have gone out: of Message No. I, 105,238 copies; of Message No. II, 104,034; of Message No. III, 106,000. Besides these, several thousand have gone to parishes outside the diocese, and also to Congregational and Methodist parishes, to schools, and to people everywhere who have asked for them. They are being used from the Pacific to the Atlantic, in England and in France. Over 5,000 pamphlets also of the 'Suggestions for Service' have gone out. The call for these has been most gratifying. Is it not a sign that the people of this diocese are more than ever alert to their duty to society?"

"To the members of the central staff who have been my strong support, to the various committees, and to all I give hearty thanks.

"The Twenty Weeks are over at Easter.

"This is the last paragraph of the Twenty Weeks. I trust that we are every one of us finer, purer, more Christlike, for the training, the 'going into camp,' and that we can meet the men returning with a more helpful word and example. I hope, too, and am confident that we can face the problem of a true democracy in a spirit of Christian brotherhood.

"WILLIAM LAWRENCE."

St. Paul's Cathedral 100 Years Old—Wednesday of this week was the 100th anniversary of the first meeting of a group of 92 persons who later organized the parish and built the church which is now the cathedral church of the diocese. The church was completed and consecrated in June, 1820. The anniversary of the first meeting of the future congregation was observed with a special service and an historical address by Dean Rousmaniere.

CHARLES CHASE WILSON.

NEWARK

The Rev. R. L. Scofield Ordained—The Rev. Raymond Leeds Scofield, in charge of Christ Church, Belleville, was advanced to the priesthood last Sunday by Bishop Stearly. Those who took part in the service were the Rev. James W. Van Ingen, chaplain of the New Jersey State Reformatory at Rahway; Canon Elmendorf, Canon Pennock and the Rev. Donald Wonders.

City Missioner's Work—The Rev. Dr. Charles L. Cooder, chaplain of the City Mission of Newark, baptized during February 24 persons, administered the holy communion thirty-eight times to the sick in the various institutions and officiated at fifty-four burials. Persons visited during the months in the wards of the institutions numbered more than 600.

Dean Dumper's Class—A lenten opportunity of unusual value is being offered residents of Newark and those to whom Trinity Cathedral is accessible, through the classes in personal religion which the Very Rev. Arthur Dumper, dean of the cathedral, is conducting from 4 until 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoons. The classes constitute a weekly quiet hour for prayer, meditation and the contemplation of a message bearing on the essentials of the Christian life.

"I can do all things through Him that strengtheneth me" was the text upon which the initial talk on "Faith" was based. This statement, the dean said, is not to be regarded as mere words, or a pious sentence, but as the translation of experience, as part of the race experience in its walk with God. It expresses the power of God in a personal life.

"Let us never think that the only energy in the world is the mechanical or the physical energy; we have to do with other forces—the forces which God starts in the heart," said the dean. "Shall we see the fact of trusting men made strong through the Divine Helper Who never leaves us and shall we say He is not able to do these things for us? Religion is the most practical thing in the world. It means self-surrender. Commit yourself, your dear ones, your lot, your all to Him.

"There is no other conquest for worry, anxiety or fear than faith in God. Trust Him and not yourself. There is a place for confidence in your life—it is in the presence, the gifts, the strength and the confidence of God in you."

GRACE MCKINNEY.

NEW YORK

To Discuss Unity—The March meeting of the Church Club on the 26th will be devoted to a discussion of some recent movements toward church unity. Two members of the Commission on Faith and Order will speak, Dr. Manning and Mr. Zabriskie. The mission of the delegation which has just sailed for Europe and the Near East under the leadership of Bishop Anderson, will be discussed and also the plans for organic union proposed by the Presbyterian Church.

Christ Church Fund Partly Pledged—As has already been told in THE CHURCHMAN, Christ Church is making a fine effort to raise a fund of $155,000 with which to pay off the mortgage on the parish. $25,000 was pledged before the campaign opened. $18,000 has been pledged since then of which $8,000 is for the support of the parish, and the rest for the payment of the mortgage.

Dr. Shipman as a Preacher.—The New York Tribune is running a series of intimate studies of "famous pulpit orators." The first article which appeared last week, described Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick; the second article published this week describes Dr. Herbert Shipman, the rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and senior chaplain of the First Army. The writer of the article finds Dr. Shipman one who has carried on his work with an unobtrusiveness that is in conformity to the appearance of his church, hidden in the heart of a Fifth Avenue block. But he also finds him in the pulpit "a man on fire," who chooses obscure texts and vitalizes them, who is never at loss for a word or an application. Dr. Manning's Military Honors.—Dr. Manning last Sunday afternoon was invested with the Cross of the Legion of Honor at a meeting held at the Engineers' Club in New York for the men of the 302nd Engineers, whose honorary chaplain he is.

The investiture was made by Admiral Groult, commander of the French forces in the North Atlantic, and was very impressive.

MICHIGAN CITY

Seventieth Anniversary.—March 10 was Bishop White's seventieth birthday and he received, during the day, messages and expressions of affection from clergy and laity both in and out of the diocese. In honor of the bishop's attaining his three score years and ten a simple supper was served at which were present the Rev. and Mrs. L. C. Rogers of Mishawaka, the Rev. R. E. Carr and the wardens and vestry of St. James Church, South Bend, and their wives. As an expression of their love for the bishop the men of the vestry presented the bishop with a very handsome traveling bag.

A New Rector—Trinity Church, Peru, has called to be its new rector the Rev. Edgar T. Pancoast, formally priest-in-charge of St. Andrew's Mission, Hartford City, Indiana. The Rev. Mr. Pancoast entered upon his new rectorship March 16. Bishop's Visitation.—Bishop White made his annual visitation to Trinity Church, Michigan City, March 9. A good congregation filled the church at 11 A. M. and the service was bright and inspiring. A class of seven was presented for confirmation by the rector, the Rev. James A. Miller. The parish is progressing in a happy and successful way.

Memorial Tablet for Rev. John Addams Linn.—At 11 A. M., March 16, a mural tablet was dedicated in honor of the late Rev. John Addams Linn, former rector of St. Paul's Church, Mishawaka, who made the supreme sacrifice on the battle fields of France in the world war. A special service was arranged at which the dedicatory address was given by the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White of South Bend. The tablet of brass in base-relief is in an oak frame and will be placed on the chancel wall of the church, as a memorial to the man who not only gave his life for the world cause but under whose direction the present St. Paul's Church was built. The Rev. John Addams Linn became rector in 1902 and served until 1909. He was a nephew of Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago. The tablet in the rector's honor is the gift of hundreds of his friends in Mishawaka. It was made by J. and R. Lamb, New York and is a beautiful piece of work. The Rev. John Addams Linn enlisted in the Y. M. C. A. work and while tending the wounded was killed by a shell on the battle fields at the Argonne Forest, October 8, 1918.

Continues in Service—Miss Katherine White, daughter of Bishop and Mrs. White, who has been in France serving as a U. S. Army nurse has been returned to this country. She will continue in the service of the government and has been commissioned to the Post Hospital, Camp Grant, Rockford, Illinois.

SAN FRANCISCO

Bishop Nichols Addresses Clergy.—On the Monday before Lent Bishop Nichols held an ad clerum in the crypt of the cathedral with a celebration of the Holy Communion. In a deeply devotional address, from the rich storehouse of his own experience, he gave helpful counsel touching the lenten work of the clergy, stressing the importance of self-discipline, Bible study, prayer, open churches for meditation, the present guidance of souls and the constant seeking for candidates for Baptism and Confirmation.

Work at Seaman's Institute.—The Seaman's Institute has removed its activities from the old location on Steuart Street to a more strategic situation near the waterfront, at 58 Clay Street. Here the Rev. C. P. Deems with his staff of assistants is conducting a most successful work. A fine canteen has been opened and meals prepared by a competent chef are served to the sailors of the merchant marine, and clergymen and laymen have pledged themselves that, whenever they take their luncheons down town, they will patronize the institute. The worthy superintendent greets them, as well as the sailormen, in that whole-hearted manner which makes all feel the desire to return soon again.

Large Lenten Congregations.—During the lenten season united service are being held in the San Francisco churches. Special preachers have been selected for the respective Wednesday evenings and large congregations are attending. Under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew daily noonday services are conducted in the Merchants' Exchange building for the business men during Lent. A goodly sprinkling of women is also seen. Brief addresses are made by the clergy of different communions and the heartiness of the singing of familiar hymns is a feature in these services.

Successful Canvass.—An every-member canvass for increased pledges at Holy Innocents' parish on Sunday, March 9, was a gratifying success. The committees of canvassers reported, mostly from new families, an increase of over thirty-five per cent in the promised income of the parish.

Monday Club Organized.—A Monday Club was organized by the San Francisco clergy on the last Monday of February, with Dean Thackery as president and the Rev. W. T. Holt as secretary.

WESTERN COLORADO

Death of the Rev. P. C. Bissell.—At Gunnison on March 6, the Rev. P. C. Bissell died at the beginning of a most useful ministry in this district, from pneumonia following upon a severe cold contracted in the pursuance of work in his outlying field. Mr. Bissell came to Colorado from the diocese of Newark last November and was placed in charge at Gunnison with several missions in the neighborhood. At the time of his arrival the quarantine ban was on and he was held in Denver two weeks. Arriving at his town he was placed under quarantine for several days. But during the last few weeks and with the gradual lifting of restrictions he had applied himself to making up for the lost time and had already laid the foundation for a splendid work; and he has already left a tradition which will be an asset to the Church in her work in this part of the country.

Convalescence of Bishop Touret.—Bishop Touret is at Colorado Springs recuperating from his recent operation. It was erroneously reported that he had gone to Rochester, Minnesota, for appendicitis. The operation was a much more serious one and the success of it is the more gratifying. The appendix was removed at the same time. The bishop hopes to be back at work by April 1.

Subsequent Waves of the Epidemic.—In most of our towns there have recently been new waves of the influenza. Olathe has been closed again for some three weeks. No other closing of town activities has been reported, but people generally have shown a disposition to be extremely careful and attendance upon school and church are in some places notably affected. Some churches and church schools have voluntarily closed or have modified their schedules.

NEBRASKA

Woman's Auxiliary Notes.—During the month of February Miss Elizabeth Bowen was a guest of the Woman's Auxiliary in Nebraska. Miss Bowen is a mission worker at Monterey, Tennessee among the mountains. Her home is in Omaha and the inspiration to be a mission worker came from her rector and the Woman's Auxiliary. She came home for a month on vacation and told of her work very modestly but in a most interesting way to several groups of women. Her friends found that many things were still needed to equip the mission at Monterey, and set to work to raise $500. This fund, now almost complete, is called the Elizabeth Bowen Fund. The Nebraska women have taken great pleasure in contributing to this fund and probably many barrels of second hand clothing will follow. Each of the four districts has had a meeting or conference during the year, and will have very creditable reports to present at the annual meeting in May.

FANNY M. POTTER.

DULUTH

Women's Work.—The Woman's Auxiliary of Trinity Cathedral Duluth, is meeting every Wednesday during Lent, for Bible Study, and sewing for the "French Relief." The Guild of the Cathedral has arranged to have speakers each month, at their regular meetings, to give inspiration, and information upon some branch of social service. At their last meeting it was decided to assist systematically in the canteen work being done in Duluth, for returned and unemployed soldiers and sailors.

HARRIET M. MORRISON.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Tempting Offer Refused.—Recently a man representing a large business firm of New York City attempted to obtain a long term lease of the property now occupied by St. Paul's Church, Syracuse. The Rev. Dr. Henry Harrison Hadley, rector of the parish, said that the proposition would not be considered. It is understood the sum offered was $300,000. St. Paul's Church occupies an important corner in the heart of the business district of Syracuse. The property is valued at $255,000 in the last diocesan journal.

Baptistry to Be Built.—The Gorham Company have been engaged by Wm. S. and Chas. A. Dunning to design a marble baptistry for St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, to be erected in memory of their father, Wm. D. Dunning, for many years a warden of the parish, and also a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese.

Auburn Boys Win Honors.—St. Peter's Church, Auburn, seems to produce heroes as well as churchmen. Of the members of this parish in military service no less than six received decorations. Charles Bouck was given the Croix de Guerre; Norman Stone, the D. S. O. of the British Government; Harold Williamson and Harry Ward were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross of the U. S. A. (the latter posthumously); William Hodder, Captain, and Leroy Whitney received the British Distinguished Order.

Devotional Address to Clergy.—Bishop Olmsted gave a devotional address to the members of the Utica Clerical Union in Grace Church, Utica, on Monday, March 10.

Many Adults Confirmed.—The Rev. Lewis E. Ward, priest-in-charge of Emmanuel Church, Elmira, recently presented a class of eighteen adults to Bishop Fiske for Confirmation. On the same day eleven persons were confirmed at Millport, which is also under his charge. THEODORE HAYDN.

NORTH DAKOTA

Notes.—The Rev. L. G. Moultrie, who for nearly twenty years has been rector of All Saints' Church at Valley City, has resigned, and left on March 1 for Fort Snelling, Minnesota, to take charge of the Red Cross work there.

Deaconess Adda Knox, after three years' work in the District of North Dakota, has resigned and taken up war nursing in Letterman General Hospital in San Francisco.

The Rev. D. J. Gallagher, rector of St. Luke's Church, Detroit, Minnesota, has accepted a call to All Saints' Church, Minot, and will enter upon his duties there immediately after Easter.

Latest reports from the Board of Missions show that North Dakota has paid $3657.15 for the Apportionment, which is a good deal more than our apportionment, so we have again gone over the top.

Mrs. J. P. Aylen, of Fargo, has been appointed by Bishop Tyler district president of the Women's Auxiliary to succeed Mrs. George Hancock who resigned some weeks ago, after having served so acceptably in this capacity for about seven years.

March 22, 1919

SAVANNAH

Bishops and the Epworth League.—At the Marine Hospital for Sailors and Soldiers, Savannah, Bishop Osborne, who visits the men and has held Sunday afternoon services for some months past, had an interesting experience. On a recent Sunday as he was preparing the ward room fifteen women and girls appeared saying that they were Epworth Leaguers and had permission to hold a service, having heard that there was none in the hospital. After a moment's surprise and conversation, a harmonious arrangement was made. The leaguers sang several hymns, the bishop then gave his address, followed by prayers. More hymns followed while he distributed pictures and cards of prayers. The bishop then went to visit men in other wards and the leader of the leaguers took his place. Some of the sailors told him afterwards "She talked about ships and preached gloriously." She told us about her son in France until the tears came."

For Sewanee.—Considerable efforts are being made under the direction of Bishop Reese to raise a large sum for the support of the University of the South. A good meeting held on March 12 is expected to bring large results.

BALTIMORE

Lent at St. Paul's.—Lenten preachers at the noonday services at St. Paul's Church are: March 24 to March 28, the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York; March 31, the Rev. Wm. L. DeVries, Ph. D., Washington, D. C.; April 1 to April 4, the Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D. Evanston, Illinois; April 7 and April 8, the Rev. Clifford Gray Twombly, D. D., Lancaster, Pennsylvania; April 9 to April 11, the Rev. William H. CONNECTICUT

Rev. J. S. Littell Writes Playlet.—The Rev. John S. Littell, D.D., rector of St. James's Church, West Hartford, has recently completed a playlet, "The Adze-Head," which has been published by the Church Missions Publishing Company and the American Society of Church Literature of this city, in booklet form. A week ago it was presented by a selected cast of forty players, chosen from the young people's societies of St. James's parish, in the old town hall in West Hartford.

The play is "an episode from the life of Saint Patrick," the period being given as about the year 440 A. D., the setting being in a forest. Saint Patrick, Ethne and Fedelm, daughters of the High-King Laoghaire, a hunter, a warrior, Mael and Caplit, and a group of druids are the principal characters, supported by companions and attendants of the king, and associates and pupils of Erin's patron saint, who is shown as teacher and a missionary of the creed of Christ. Dr. Littell has written a number of books which have had a wide circulation in church circles. He is secretary of the Church Missions Publishing Company and the American Society of Church Literature, with offices at No. 45 Church street.

Tributes to the Late Bishop Gibson.—The following extract from the resolution adopted by the clergy of the diocese upon the death of the Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, D.D., carries us back more vividly than can mere dates to the stormy period when he began his service in the Master's vineyard; and at the same time shows the deep appreciation and love in which he was held by those with whom he had labored.

"In his very boyhood he learned by military discipline respect for lawful authority and obedience to lawful commands. He voluntarily put himself under that authority because he believed that that was the best way to win the cause and fulfill the duty he had assumed to be his. And all through his subsequent life in the ministry that same loyalty to lawful authority—whether as assistant minister, as rector of a church or as bishop coadjutor—characterized him. Now, why? Simply because he believed that such loyalty to his superior officers in the Church was the best way of showing his loyalty, and winning the cause of the Church's great Head—the 'Bishop and Shepherd of our souls.' He was deacon, presbyter, bishop for Christ first that so he might best serve Christ's people. His clear vision of the needs of the various institutions of the Diocese, his sympathy for and wise helpfulness to the left-out and neglected places, would be hard to find equaled in the past fifty years of our diocesan existence."

One of the most touching tributes to the late bishop was a very handsome floral design inscribed with the simple words "Our Bishop," and sent from the colored congregation of St. Philip's Church, Richmond, the Rev. R. A. Jackson, rector. Short as it was, this inscription contained a vast amount of truth, for there was no work of the church work in the Diocese of Virginia in which Bishop Gibson took a more lively interest than in that being done for our colored communicants.

When he first went into the ministry, just after leaving the Confederate Army, he organized and superintended in Petersburg, Virginia, a Sunday School for colored children, which at that time was the only one in the state and was the first of its kind.

In the Southeast Deanery.—The bishop and the provincial secretary were in the Southeast Deanery on February 18, 19 and 20. The convention had been appointed to meet in St. John's, Parsons, for the same dates but the meeting was changed to a series of three mass meetings held at Parsons, Charinte and Independence. These were well attended and resulted in each case in the formation of a men's club or league for social service.

Beginning of Lent.—Ash Wednesday marked the beginning of an earnest Lent in all the parishes and missions of the Southeastern Deanery. Miss Nellie Smith, vice-president of the Woman's Auxiliary, spent the day making special addresses at St. John's, Girard, and St. Andrew's, Ft. Scott, where the Auxiliary work has been reorganized. The plan adopted is to carry out the Advent Call work as a lenten work and to make the whole season a mission of thought and prayer.

WEST VIRGINIA

Dr. Brittingham Resumes Work.—The Rev. Dr. Brittingham, rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, has sufficiently recovered from his operation several months ago to assume charge again of his parish.

Mission at Cameron.—While rector at Moundsville the Rev. James H. Garner started a work at Cameron. Several English families live here. The work has grown to such an extent that a suitable place has been provided for worship and regular services maintained. The Rev. R. E. L. Strider, rector of St. Matthew's, Wheeling, has taken the responsibility of seeing that regular services are provided.

Clerical Change.—The Rev. Dr. G. Philip Jung, rector of St. Matthias', Grafton, has accepted a call extended by the vestries of St. Paul's, Sistersville and St. Ann's, New Martinsville. He assumes charge of his new work Mid-Lent Sunday. While at Grafton Dr. Jung did efficient work as rector of St. Matthias', and general secretary of the Grafton Y. M. C. A. He had been identified with many community activities.

ALASKA

Nenana, February 6.—It seems very likely now that we will be able to re-open St. Timothy's Mission at Tanana Crossing next summer. The bishop is trying to arrange for workers so that the deaconess in charge may have a congenial companion—a most important element, when two women must live together in this, the most isolated mission station in Alaska, if not in the world. With no regular mail service, no telegraph system, and, perforce, no daily newspapers, the success of the mission depends almost entirely upon the esprit de corps, if one may use this term in relation to so small a "corps."

The real difficulty will be to get the food, for there is no adequate provision made for this mission. It has now been closed for four months, since Mr. McIntosh left.

Before he left, the Indians had a great gathering from the surrounding villages, some coming a hundred miles and more, and for three days had crowded meetings, to show their affection for him and their sorrow at parting. All show in their letters, as they then showed in their actions, a real grief at parting.

Mr. Drane leaves tomorrow for a trip which will include Tanana, where he will visit both Indian and white missions; the Allakaket, where he will visit St. John's in the Wilderness, and finally up the Yukon River to Rampart and Stephen's Village.

This trip is made for Archdeacon Stuck, who is suffering from neuritis. Mr. Drane will be accompanied by Ala Kellum, the archdeacon's Indian traveling companion, who has been raised in the mission school at Nenana. It will be the first time in Mr. Drane's four years of "mushing" in this northern country that he has had a stove or tent.

Bishop Rowe is now on a trip to the mission stations in southern and south-eastern Alaska.

He writes asking for a man to go to Fairbanks and take the place of the Rev. H. H. Lumpkin next summer, as Mr. Lumpkin's furlough is due. The position carries with it the opportunity of editing the Alaskan Churchman, and thus doing a great deal not only for the mission in Fairbanks, but for the Alaskan mission in general.

In regard to St. Timothy's Mission, Tanana Crossing, he writes: "We will need two nurses for Fort Yukon; one of these should be ready to act as matron, as well as nurse. I think Deaconess Pick will be transferred to Tanana Crossing, and possibly Miss Nuneviller will go with her as her 'partner.' It may be that I will employ Singleton as the 'man about.' He is now caring for things there. He is doing well, is interested, and could be of great value to us.

"Mr. McIntosh is trying to raise funds to get a small steamer to freight our supplies to Tanana. I am afraid he is not meeting with very good success. But a boat we MUST HAVE. We also need a small boiler and engine, and a sawmill outfit, so that we can saw the lumber we need. Then, we may even open up a co-operative store for the Indians at this place. There is much to do!" GUY H. MADARA.

PHILADELPHIA

Day of Corporate Prayer—At St. Mark's Church on Thursday, March 13, there was held a day of corporate prayer for the Church, the country, and the world. There were two celebrations of the Holy Communion, one at 7:30, the other at 9:30. At ten the Litany and Intercessions were said and at eleven the Penitential Office and Intercessions; at noon the Litany and Intercessions.

Addresses were made at the last three services by Bishop McCormick of Western Michigan. A committee of men and women from many parishes had this diocesan prayer day in charge. Men and women from the whole diocese attended.

Dr. Birkhead Has Larger Hearing—The Rev. Dr. Hugh Birkhead of Baltimore has been in the city several times lately, to tell of his work with the Red Cross, and his view of the "Opportunity of America." He was one of the speakers at the annual dinner of Holy Apostles parish. Later he spoke before one of the city clubs. But the largest gathering will be at the Academy of Music, where he speaks on Monday evening, March 24.

Church Women in Housing Fight—A great gathering of women met recently at Holy Trinity Church to begin a campaign to put an end to the present unsanitary condition in the housing of people in the city. They are willing to face years of reform work to gain the goal they seek. They feel that if they get together and expose the conditions in small streets, the owners of the property will see the necessity of making the improvements that are obvious.

Dr. Tomkins welcomed and encouraged the women. Mrs. Edwin C. Grice, who has done much in the way of civic reform, urged the women to use the influence they had found forceful in other fields of work. Many cited improvements that had already come from investigations and complaints they had made.

Another meeting will be held at Holy Trinity in April to which every Christian woman of the city will be invited.

Bishop Fiske at Garrick Theatre—Bishop Fiske of Central New York took the place of Dean Edwards of Detroit at the Garrick Theater from Monday until Friday, March 10 to 14. The dean was compelled to cancel his engagement because of family affliction. The noon-day services were well attended. The addresses were most helpful, and the singing was most hearty.

Parish Week in the Campaign—Practically every church in the diocese is making this a week of prayer for and presentation of the work in each parish. An effort is made everywhere to rouse the people to the opportunity and the importance of the work nearest at hand. Charts are used to show the personal and financial problems and ideals. Meetings are held for every member of the parish, where full information of every parish agency is given.

In addition to the parish clergy, others are sent to the meetings and services to make special appeals. The Rev. Mr. Stowell, the executive secretary of the campaign, calls men to go to other parishes. He has a long list of the clergy who have volunteered for this service.

The Sunday Question—For some time past, there has been a plea for Sunday concerts, and a relaxation of the blue laws now in force. Some of our clergy have joined with business men and the members of the committee of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

A meeting was lately held in the city hall to give an opportunity for those interested to speak for or against the proposed measure. Unfortunately the man who has drawn the bill to be presented to the legislature, presided. Dr. Grammer was one of those who joined with the Sabbath Day Association to object to the proposed change. The meeting was marked by heated discussions.

CHICAGO

Zones of Parochial Responsibility Established—What Bishop Anderson characterized as one of the most progressive missionary steps ever taken by the diocese is the dividing of the city of Chicago into what are called "Zones of Responsibility" for the several parishes and missions. The matter of making this division had been under informal consideration at meetings of the deanery for two years, and was finally presented at the diocesan convention last spring. It was passed at that time. The zones of responsibility are not to be considered parish boundaries in any strict sense. With the present day transportation facilities in our large cities, many people find it just as convenient to go to a church some distance away as to one near by. The purpose of the resolution is not to make anyone change his parish church. It is rather to give each parish a certain definite territory that they may feel responsible for, and in which they may concentrate their missionary efforts. The purpose of the plan, as the bishop's letter says, is efficiency, not discipline.

Board of Missions Sends Out Questionnaire—To this same end, that of making the missionary work of the diocese more efficient, the Board of Missions of the Diocese of Chicago has recently appointed an executive committee to "prepare a program leading to a larger work and a greater income," and to report to the next convention on the state of the Church in the diocese. This committee has sent to the rector of each parish a questionnaire asking for information about the conditions in his own church, and the needs and opportunities for missionary work in his neighborhood. The letter is signed by the members of the committee: Bishop Griswold, the Rev. F. R. Godolphin, the Rev. George Craig Stewart, Mr. Courtney Barbour, Mr. Charles E. Field, Mr. Herbert J. Ullman, and the Rev. Edwin J. Randall, secretary. CHARLES L. STREET.

LOUISIANA

New Orleans Noon-Day Services—Noon day Lenten services are again being held this year in one of the local theaters in the business district of New Orleans and are as in former years well attended. This year, however, they are under the auspices of the United Protestant Churches of the city and an unusual interest seems to have been aroused. Meant for business men and women, as well as those who are down town at the noon hour, it is also expected that these services will be attended by soldiers in the city.

Afternoon Services—Our own churches have also united for an afternoon service each day during Lent, with an additional service every Friday night at the cathedral. Each church has been assigned its own day in the week. The service on each Friday afternoon is meant especially for children. These united services have been held before during Lent and have always appealed to our people.

Visit From Bishop Dunn—The Rt. Rev. Edw. A. Dunn, D. D., Bishop of British Honduras, was a recent visitor to New Orleans, where he made an address to the Woman's Auxiliary on his missionary experiences in Central America. Mrs. Dunn was also present and made an address. A social hour and refreshments followed. Bishop Dunn is an interesting talker and among other things spoke of his work among the Mosquito Indians. "They have become very devout," he said. "They were offered lumber—piece lumber—which they had to bring forty miles in order to use. They did not complain, but hauled it and dressed it and went to work on their little church. It was strictly a hand-made church. And it was as beautifully done as a piece of embroidery. They had an almost abnormal sense of reverence, too, for when the building was finished, they locked it up tight and kept it that way until I got there to consecrate it. These Indians live in Ritapusa, Nicaragua, and used to be under British protection. At one time they crowned a king of their own."

LONG ISLAND

Mr. Welwood Home—The Rev. J. C. Welwood, rector of the American Church at Dresden and formerly rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Bensonhurst, arrived from Liverpool a few days ago on the Megantic, at Portland, Maine. He was accompanied by his daughter, who has been engaged in war work in France.

Confirmation at St. Paul's—Bishop Burgess administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of about twenty-five, Sunday, March 9, at St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, the Rev. A. C. Wilson, rector.

Rectors' Aid Adopts French Baby—The Rector's Aid Society of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn, has adopted a little French girl six months old. Her name is Marguerite Heuber, her picture and all details concerning her have been sent to the society.

A Call to Service—The Bishop of Long Island has issued an appeal to the active women of the Church, to interest all other women of their parishes and organizations in a meeting to be held Friday, March 28, from 3:30 to 5:30 P. M., at Memorial Hall of the Y. W. C. A. This meeting is to show the women who have done such efficient war work, that they can now do it for the Church.

Delegations are expected from the Girls' Friendly Society, the Daughters of the King, the Woman's Auxiliary, the Church Mission of Help, the Archdeaconry Aid, the Church Charity Foundation, the Sunday schools and many others. Bishop Burgess will preside. Among the speakers will be the Rev. Herbert Shipman, senior chaplain of the 1st Army, A. E. F.; Dr. William E. Gardner, general secretary of the Board of Religious Education; Dr. William C. Sturgis, educational secretary of the Board of Missions; Miss Grace Lindley and others.

OHIO

Conferring of Degree—The faculty of Bexley Hall, Gambier, recently voted to confer the degree of Doctor in Divinity upon the Rev. G. Sherman Burrows, who was elected, last November, warden of DeLancy Divinity School at Geneva, New York. Dr. Burrows is a graduate of Bexley Hall, where he pursued his studies with great credit. For nineteen years he has been rector of St. Mark's Church, Tonawanda. For nine years he has been a lecturer in DeLancy School.

Father and Son Meetings—There has been a wide-spread observance of the father and son movement throughout the diocese. It has been particularly emphasized because of the coming home of the boys from American camps and from over seas. At Trinity Cathedral and the Church of the Incarnation, Cleveland, important meetings were held, dinner being served and speeches made, which will tend to vitally increase the interest of men and boys in the work of the Church.

An important meeting was held at St. Andrew's Church, Elyria, the Rev. E. B. Redhead rector, when sixty fathers and sons had dinner and listened to addresses made by the mayor of the city, the senior warden, and the rector.

Removal of Rector—The Rev. Ernest J. Harry, who has been rector of St. Philip's church, Cleveland, for the past five years has resigned to become rector of the Church of the Nativity, Crafton, a suburb of Pittsburg. During Mr. Harry's rectorship at St. Philip's a very substantial work has been done; one of the largest brigades of Boy Scouts has been organized, and a considerable sum has been raised for the erection of additional buildings to the parish plant. Mr. Harry assumes his new work the first of April.

Noon-Day Lenten Services—The holding of noon day lenten services under the auspices of Federated Churches of Cleveland has been so successful the past two years that they have again been inaugurated at the Opera House. On Ash-Wednesday Bishop Leonard opened the meeting and made the address. The speakers are representatives of different religious bodies. Bishop Stearly, of Newark, is the speaker for the week of March 23. The attendance has been larger than ever before.

Clericus and Church Club Meeting—The meeting of the Cleveland Clericus on March 10 was addressed by the Rev. Dr. McGaffin of the Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church. Dr. McGaffin has spent a year as chaplain and in Y. M. C. A. work at the front. He paid high tribute to the work done by the Y. M. C. A., explaining the many difficulties under which that work was done, and the many criticisms that have been made.

The Cleveland Church Club had a well attended meeting for dinner at the Statler Hotel, March 10. This was a dinner giving special welcome to the soldiers who have returned from camp and over seas. The club has given complimentary membership for one year to every enlisted man from the Cleveland parishes. Addresses were made at this meeting by the Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, and Mr. Charles W. Whitehair. Mr. Crum has spent a year as chaplain in France. To appeal to the soldier the teaching of the Church must be positive, must be for the highest promotion of social conditions, and must be one of pronounced self-sacrifice, he said.

ATLANTA

Memorial Service for Mr. Grantland—A memorial service for the late Hon. Seaton Grantland was held in St. George's Church, Griffin, on the morning of Quinquagesima Sunday. Bishop Mikell was celebrant and preacher, while the rector, the Rev. H. A. Willey, was epistoler.

The Hon. Seaton Grantland, who was for many years senior warden of St. George's Parish, died on February 4, in his 71st year. The bishop in his memorial address spoke of his upright and outstanding life, pointing out the fact that St. George's Church, the Diocese of Atlanta, the city of Griffin, and the county and state senatorial district had each recognized his worth by conferring upon him the highest honors in their power to bestow, he having been senior warden of his parish and a member of the diocesan council for many years, and twice deputy to the general convention. He had been twice mayor of his city, twice state senator, and was a member of the state legislature at the time of his death. He also held place on many important diocesan committees, being chairman of the Church Extension Commission, a member of the diocesan finance committee and of the committee to secure an episcopal residence, as well as a deputy to the general convention.

Churches Consecrated at La Grange—On Sexagesima Sunday, Bishop Mikell visited La Grange for the two-fold purpose of confirmation and the consecration of two churches. In the afternoon, the Church of the Holy Comforter at Hillside was consecrated. This is a new building set up among a mill population that has settled there during the last few years, and it is intended especially to supply their needs.

A number of gifts have been presented to beautify the church and to aid in worship. Among these are three sets of beautiful colored hangings for different seasons. The girls of the Church School gave the brass altar cross; and the boys presented the hymn board. The pair of alms basons were the gift of Mr. John Rice. The litany desk is in memoriam to Mr. Hoke Frazier, given by his former associates in the office of the Hillside Mill. Mr. Frazier was killed in action during one of the last battles of the war.

In the evening of Sexagesima, the Church of the Good Shepherd was consecrated. This is located very near the original settlement house and the hospital. Here was a vested choir of nurses from the hospital. The bishop was assisted in both services by the Rev. Robert Phillips, the missionary, and by his assistant, the Rev. Vernon Harris.

Home from France—The Rev. James B. Lawrence, who has been for six months in the service of the Army Y. M. C. A. in France, returned last week. He preached in St. James Church, Marietta, on the First Sunday in Lent. Mr. Lawrence will go immediately to Americus, the Diocese of Georgia, to take charge of the work he left when he went to France.

Convention Date Changed—Bishop Temple has given official notification that with the consent of the Council of Advice he has changed the date of the district convocation to be held in Abilene, Texas, from May 25, 26, 27, to Sunday, May 11, and the two days following, at the request of the church people of Abilene.

DETROIT

Michigan Church Club Dinner—About 200 men sat down to the dinner given by the Michigan Church Club in St. John's Church House on the evening of March 11. The Ven. E. B. Jermin, of the northern archdeaconry, reported that the club was to spread to the northern part of the diocese. Bishop Williams visited Bay City and Saginaw two weeks previous and talked to groups in both places. "Shortly," said Mr. Jermin, "we hope to have affiliated clubs in Saginaw, Bay City, Sheboygan and Alpena."

The presiding bishop of the Church, who was the speaker at the Monday lenten services at the Miles Theatre that week, was the guest of the evening and spoke vigorously on the three words, Club, Church, and Detroit. The club, Bishop Tuttle said, unites and consolidates the different parishes of the city and the diocese and is meant to be the bishop's bodyguard. The Church stands for the faith in spiritual things, and Detroit stands for energy and enterprise. "Detroit is striving to get the fourth place among large cities away from St. Louis," he said.

Work Among Older Boys—For the past eight weeks Mr. Gordon M. Reese, field secretary for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has been working among church boys in Detroit. The general plan of operation has been to form a group of boys of the ages from 14 to 18 in each of four parishes and to meet with each group once every week for training in Christian service. To give practical expression to this instruction the boys in their individual groups gave first a father and son dinner, then two weeks later a mother and son dinner. Meeting together the boys of the five groups spent an afternoon in the open, after which they had a swimming meet in the Y. M. C. A. pool, followed by supper and a social evening. This, of course, was to illustrate to the lads how they as leaders could get hold of the younger boys socially. On the religious side daily prayer and service was emphasized.

The eight weeks closed on March 8 and 9 with a conference on "Boys' Church Ideals," in which the boys of the five groups took part, under the topics, the Church School, the Scouts, the Acolytes, Church Services, the Choir, the Brotherhood, the Church. A supper was held in St. Peter's Church House on Saturday evening with the Rev. Brayton Byron as toastmaster. Speeches were made by both boys and men. A corporate celebration of the Holy Communion was held in St. John's Church on Sunday morning and in the afternoon the boys met and had their discussions. The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, of the Galilee Mission of Philadelphia, whom the boys love to call "Dad," came on for the conference and fairly electrified the lads with his appeal to make their Christianity real. Each boy in his turn in talking about the eight weeks' training, spoke some word of regard and confidence for Mr. Reese, and too much cannot be said in praise, not only of what Mr. Reese has done for the boys' work in Detroit, but also for this new scheme of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in reaching many boys and men by this intensive training of small groups. Mr. Reese is to stay in Detroit for eight weeks more to work among other groups of boys, and he has been joined by Mr. Frank Du Molin, who is to have training groups among men.

MISSISSIPPI

Bishop Tours France—Bishop Bratton has left Brest, France where he has been Y. M. C. A. pastor of the Naval Flag Hut since last October. He has been appointed to travel throughout France to study problems and religious conditions at the camps in that country.

For the New Bishop's Home—On February 26-27 there was a simultaneous and diocesan-wide canvass in the interest of rebuilding the bishop's home at Battle Hill. The last council appointed a committee, one member from each convocation, to raise a fund of $15,000 to rebuild. The diocese was apportioned on a basis of one-third of its expense for parochial purposes; each parish was apportioned one-third of its parochial expense and each individual one-third of his contribution to parish support. The nature and fairness of this apportionment appealed to every one and the response was very generous, many of the parishes sending amounts in excess of their apportionment. The committee confidently expect the funds to be in hand by April. The officers of the committee are: R. H. Purnell, president, Winona; R. H. Green, treasurer, Jackson; the Rev. P. G. Davidson, field agent, Greenville and the Rev. Albert Martin, secretary, Yazoo City.

Rectory Burns—While the congregation of Holy Innocents, Como, were engaged in raising funds to rebuild the bishop's home, the rectory at Como burned to the ground. The contents, most of which were lost, were fully insured, but the building was insured for only half its value. The committee on the rebuilding of the bishop's home sent word to Como to keep the $100 already raised, for their own rebuilding fund. More outside assistance will be needed, as the parish is very small and is the centre of five missions served by the rector, the Rev. C. B. Hudgins. Mr. Hudgins lost the greater portion of his valuable library.

New Comers' Service—What was perhaps the most remarkable service in the history of the parish was held in St. John's Church, Aberdeen, Mississippi, the Rev. J. W. Fulford, rector, on Quinquagesima Sunday. The occasion was a new comers' service to which all the new people of the community were invited. Within the past two years about three hundred families have moved into this county attracted by our advantages of soil and climate. These new comers are of every Church and some of no Church at all. The idea of the service was to impress upon them the importance of their church membership with the hope of absorbing them into the community life through the life of the different churches here. The rector invited all who were members of churches not represented in the Aberdeen churches to accept the hospitality of the services of this Church.

Bishop Atwood on Roosevelt—On Sexagesima Sunday Bishop Atwood delivered an address on Theodore Roosevelt. As the bishop was a personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt, he painted a specially vivid portrait of the man as a lover of home, as a reformer and as a statesman.

For Those Who Fell—On Sunday afternoon March 2, a memorial service was held at the university in Tucson commemorating the life and work of six former students and one professor who had laid down their lives during the war in the service of their country. The speakers were Dr. A. E. Douglass and Dr. H. B. Leonard, wardens of Grace Church, and Mr. F. C. Kellton, a communicant, all three being professors in the university.

Sermons by Laymen—During the lenten season a series of lay sermons is being preached at Grace Church, Tucson. The first was by Lieut. Ives, a communicant of the Church, who is in charge of the Government wireless work near Tucson. Before the war Lieut. Ives was research associate and lecturer in physics in Clark University, Worcester, Massachusetts. The subject of his lecture was "Is there any Conflict between Science and Religion?"

Guild House Dedicated—On Sunday, February 23 Bishop Atwood dedicated the guild house of St. Thomas's Mission in Clarkdale, a growing smelter town. The house recently built at a cost of $8,000, was the gift of a friend of the bishop's in the East as a memorial to her little son. It is finely equipped in every way as a combined chapel and club house. It is giving a new impetus to our work in Clarkdale and the Verde Valley, where other important mining towns are already being established and farming is also being developed. The work is in charge of the Rev. Henry C. Smith, the vicar of Christ Church, Jerome, six miles away in the mountains. Mr. Smith organized a Troop of Boy Scouts in Clarkdale last year, which has been meeting regularly in the Guild House, although none of them is otherwise connected with our Church. Some months ago he turned them over to a layman as Scoutmaster, and this man, being quite a musician, has actually organized the Scouts into an orchestra of twenty-five pieces. Rather an unusual line of work for Boy Scouts! Mr. Smith is now starting a troop in Jerome.

RHODE ISLAND

Bishop Perry Welcomed Back—Bishop Perry has received a hearty welcome on his return to the diocese after eight months' service overseas. On his first Sunday, March 9, he preached in three churches in Providence, St. Martin's, St. Stephen's, and Grace, bringing to them all a ringing challenge to steadfastness in high standards and ideals in the last chapter of the great war. He gave great praise to the average American soldier, whose inconspicuous acts of courage are a glorious commentary on the typical American. A prevailing quality in the American army had come to be a fellowship of the men in service, in suffering, and in religious faith.

The bishop had heard the Battle Hymn of the Republic sing itself into place as our national anthem by constant use on transports, on the fields of battle, and in the churches of London and Paris. At Lambeth, in a service before the Queen of England, the hymn gained new meaning by a change of one word so as to read "As He died to make men holy, let us live to make men free."

Quiet Day—Bishop Perry conducted a quiet day for the clergy of the diocese, March 10, in St. John's Church, Providence. The addresses were upon "The Spiritual Lessons of the Great War." At an informal conference in the afternoon, Archdeacon Greig of Worcester, England, brought to the clergy an informing view of the Church of England before and during the war.

Lent at St. Stephen's, Providence—The usual abundant order of services and instructions is in force at St. Stephen's Church, Providence. The preachers at the Wednesday afternoon services are: March 19, the Rev. Samuel Sutcliffe, St. Mark's Church, New Britain, Connecticut; March 26, the Rev. Clarence A. Grayhurst; April 2, the Rev. William Smith, St. John's Church, Fall River, Massachusetts; April 9, the Rev. A. B. Howard, St. Michael's Church, Bristol; April 16, the Rev. Willis B. Hawk, St. George's Church, Central Falls.

LOS ANGELES

Church Consecrated at Santa Barbara—The consecration of Trinity Church, Santa Barbara, on February 25 was an event of peculiar interest marking as it did the climax of a long and checkered parochial history. Notwithstanding the distance from Los Angeles, there were twenty-four of the clergy of the diocese present. There were also present beside Bishop Johnson, the Bishop of California and the Metropolitane of Baalock, Germanos, Acting Bishop of the Syrian Antiochian Orthodox Church in North America. The church was taxed to its utmost capacity. The service of consecration was at 10:30. The bishops and clergy came down the church to the chancel reciting the twenty-fourth psalm. After the prayer of consecration Dr. S. B. P. Knox, warden emeritus, read the deed of donation and the Rev. George Davidson, D. D., of Los Angeles, read the sentence of consecration. In the service of the Holy Communion which followed, Bishop Johnson was the Celebrant, Bishop Nichols read the Gospel and the Rev. L. E. Learned, D. D., read the Epistle. Very appropriately the preacher for the day was Bishop Nichols whose jurisdiction prior to 1896 included Santa Barbara and the whole of Southern California. The bishop referred to the building as a symbol of the progress made in the twenty-four years since he was bishop of this part of California.

At the conclusion of the service of consecration the vestry and the parish entertained the bishops and the visiting clergy at luncheon at the Santa Barbara Country Club in Montecito, after which there was an automobile ride to some of the many Archbishop Again With the Troops—An expedition in midwinter to the regions of France and Germany must have been no light matter for the Archbishop of Canterbury to undertake. He had a fortnight of it, and was busy every minute. His object was not so much to preach to the soldier (though he did preach seven times during his trip) as to confer with the chaplains as to their experiences, and with the senior officers as to their opinions of the future of the Church. While many people would agree with the Bishop of Hereford, in the remark I quoted last week, that the chaplain has experienced nothing which qualifies him to dictate the future policy of the Church, the archbishop has showed that he has no intention of disregarding these experiences. And indeed some of the chaplains would evidently deny the major premiss of Dr. Hensley Henson's argument. One of them declared, at one of the archbishop's conferences, that after all it is the conditions of warfare and the mission-field which are really the normal conditions to the Christian, and that the conditions of the Church at home are in the truest sense abnormal. The military officers showed much willingness to discuss church reform in all its aspects, and even the relations of the Church to Labor were dealt with. But perhaps the most interesting experience of the archbishop was his visit to the Test School at Le Touquet. Here are assembled the men who have volunteered to serve as clergy in the Church of England. They are being given a training with a view to passing the preliminary examination for holy orders. This training school will shortly be removed from France to England, and it will be extremely interesting to see what type of men this latest of our theological colleges succeeds in turning out.

The Modern Erastianism—The Bishop of Hereford is still "ploughing his lonely furrow," but it is quite possible that he may attract a crowd of interested on-lookers, and even helpers. In a sermon preached at the Temple Church he explained his position to the lawyers who frequent its services and no doubt he must have carried many of them with him. The reform of the ecclesiastical Establishment, must, he thinks, be carried out by the nation itself. He has no trust in the Church's representative bodies, nor in any others which may take their place. "The only houses of laymen which the parishioners know or heed are the Houses of Parliament." So he wants a royal commission to examine the distribution of endowments, and make proposals for reform. If Parliament does not care enough for church reform to do this, then "the hour will have struck for disestablishment and disendowment." Denominational autonomy and national establishment, he contends, are mutually exclusive. As to doctrinal re-statement, it must proceed from a larger learning than that of a single fragment of Christian society. "Silent forces are correcting our inherited beliefs," and the State can render them great service by "maintaining a large theological tolerance."

A Neat Comment—The foregoing paragraph is based on the Times report: the church press is sure to have some caustic comment to make. But meantime the Guardian has a very neat comment on a previous remark of Dr. Hensley Henson, who is by no means allowing us to forget his existence. He had written to the Times to deplore the fact that all the prominent men who represent us at the peace conference, and also in the Home Government, are not Englishmen at all. We are governed chiefly by Welshmen, Scotsmen, Irishmen and even Jews. Even the Church of England, "which is at least a thoroughly English institution, has two Scotsmen in its two principal chairs." On which the Guardian drily remarks: "We had thought that Dr. Henson was an Englishman: and the inconstancy of chairs is proverbial."

A Memorial to Canon Scott Holland—"His surviving sister and brother commend his soul to Him, whose joy was his strength, for whose righteousness he labored, and whose mercy he awaits." So Canon Newbolt phrased the chief part of the inscription on the mural tablet in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral. It was a felicitous tribute, only to be matched by the living words of Holland's friend Dr. Talbot, Bishop of Winchester, who unveiled the monument and gave the address. Dr. Talbot's chief point was the spiritual value of Holland's Christian optimism. Men are raised up by God to cheer their brothers when spirits are depressed, and he was preeminently one of them. He interpreted the Creed as a living thing: it was not a possession merely to prize, but a foundation on which to build, an inspiration and an impetus for meeting what was coming on and calling to us. He had no misgivings when the rest of us were timid. Not that he was blind to dangers and defects "but he followed instinctively the golden rule of judging men and things each by their several best."

points of interest in this incomparably beautiful section of California. In the evening there was a large gathering of the people of the parish at the Woman's Club House to witness the burning of the mortgage. A delightful musical program was rendered and an address was made by Bishop Johnson.

The life of Trinity Church dates back into what for California is ancient history.

Bishop Kip visited the port of Santa Barbara in 1855 but found only a few American families and formed no permanent organization. In 1867 lay services were begun by T. G. Williams, a candidate for holy orders, and in the following year a parish organization was formed and a small building erected. Mr. Williams took orders and was in charge of the work until 1870.

HOW TO SPELL

AND PRONOUNCE 25,000 WORDS FREQUENTLY MISPELLED AND MISPRONOUNCED

Nothing conveys the impression of slipshod mental processes so much as the misspelling and mispronouncing of words. No one can afford to allow these errors to creep in and ruin the effect of what he has to say. Every one who wants to be sure of the spelling and pronunciation of the words he uses, will welcome this unique and practical new book—

A Desk Book of 25,000 Words Frequently Mispronounced

By FRANK H. VIZETELLY, Litt.D., LL.D. Whenever you meet a tricky spelling or doubtful pronunciation, this book will set you right. Or, if you will glance through the volume for five minutes a day, you will become a "good speller" in a surprisingly short time. This book is very different from an ordinary dictionary—it specializes in spelling and pronouncing the everyday English words that all of us use; foreign terms, and proper names of all kinds. It must prove of immense value to the average "poor speller," and "mispronouncer"; every speaker, letter-writer, salesman, conversationalist, and everyone else who aims to speak and write with accurate English.

An Omission

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I notice that I have omitted from my article on "Dean Hodges' Twenty-fifth Anniversary" the name of the Rev. Frederick Danker as one of the speakers. I am particularly sorry for this, inasmuch as Dr. Danker spoke not only of the dean but also of his brother who recently gave his life in France. If you think it advisable, will you kindly make a note of this omission in the forthcoming CHURCHMAN?

"The Challenge"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

One's judgment is influenced by one's moods and tenses. I wanted to write you Friday night and tell you that "The Challenge," the leading editorial in your issue of March 8 is the finest editorial pronouncement that I have ever seen in any church paper for about twenty-five years. "Receivers of Grace" would have been ample meat, enough for one issue, and is an excellent statement of the matter, but "The Challenge" is superlative. It ought by no means to pass with the current issue. Whether in leaflet form or by wide reproduction,—and I want your permission to reproduce it in The City Missionary—or by whatever means, it ought to be read by every churchman in the land. It ought to become the mind of us all.

I have never felt that the Church was wise in limiting inspiration to the canonical books. There is a lot of inspiration that never got between the Bible covers. Part of it is that sentence: "Let us now declare the war of Love" and what follows. The italics are all right, but the whole ought to be in italics and the sentence I refer to, printed in gold. I have said over and over again that if the whole Church of Christ, the whole following of our Lord, would lay aside all theological discussions and practise love only, for ten years, the battle would be won, and I verily believe it. I have also said that most Christians do not even know what the Gospel of Jesus is, in the sense that your italics show that you know. "We have never taken Christ for our Master," I am quoting your own words; "We have not trusted the world to Him." Now is the time, if ever. I do not believe that the organized Christianity of the pre-war days will survive if it fails to take up "the challenge" now.

WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I read your editorial "The Challenge" of March 8 with pleasure, and agree with you that Christian education is the only hope of the world. I have been convinced of this all along during my short ministry of nearly two years, and see that unless something definite is done to teach Christianity to the young especially, then the Church will continue to lose her influence.

(To demonstrate this idea practically I made the people of Hanover where I served my diaconate put up a school house on a two acre lot, and am now trying here in Alexandria to build a very much needed parish house.)

I only mention this to show you, that if the idea of building schools was pushed in order that the fundamentals of Christianity could be daily taught, I do believe that the next quarter of a century would see a change not only in the Church, but in the world generally.

Wanted—Hymnals

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The other day I was visiting the Nurses' Home at St. Luke's Hospital, Manila. I heard voices singing. Investigation showed that fifteen or twenty nurses, twenty-five or thirty girls from the House of the Holy Child nearby, and fifteen or twenty boys and girls from the hospital neighborhood were downstairs in the nurses' common room practising hymns for the next Sunday service at St. Luke's Church. The church stands on the same compound as the hospital. I say they were practising hymns, but they have no hymnals with music. Mrs. Bartter, the wife of the rector of St. Luke's, had laboriously copied out the music for the hymns on large card sheets. These are hung at the end of the room, while the young people who are practising the hymns use our small church hymnal with words only. It is a makeshift arrangement at best, though a not altogether impossible one. It does take time and a good deal of it to copy the music for a hymn on a large chart.

Now that the Church Pension Fund has announced that the new hymnal with music is ready, I wonder whether there are not many parishes about to install the new hymnal for their choirs and to discard the old hymnals with music. Would any of them be willing to donate the old hymnals, with music, Hutchins' edition preferably, to St. Luke's Church? Mrs. Bartter says she could advantageously use one hundred and fifty of the hymnals with music. Naturally they should be in reasonably good condition to justify the expense of sending them to Manila.

If rectors or choirmasters or vestries willing to help out in this way will communicate with me at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, full particulars with regard to shipment will be supplied. If it is possible for the donating parish also to donate the necessary postage or freight, so much the better.

JOHN W. WOOD.

Jessfield, Shanghai, China.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In a letter recently received from the Rev. A. R. Llwyd of Port au Prince, Haiti I find this paragraph which may prove an interesting suggestion to someone:

"If any choirs have old church hymnal with music, Hutchins' edition, and are buying the new ones, would you try and direct about a dozen this way? The same wit the chant books, only I need about two dozen of these.

"We are badly in need of vestments and colored stoles for clergy."

I feel sure that there will be many who would be glad to have such good use made of hymnals which might otherwise have to be thrown away. Mr. Llwyd's address is American Hotel, Port au Prince, Haiti. Perhaps, in order to avoid his being deluged with old hymnals, it would be well for those who intend to take advantage of this opportunity to do a good turn to communicate with me first.

The League of Nations

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It is encouraging to find THE CHURCHMAN taking a definite stand not only on the league of nations idea in general, but on the present constitution of the proposed league. I agree with you in fearing that any material revision of the document may be in the direction of a narrower rather than a more inclusive and stronger internationalism. It is a far from radical document as it stands now,—making many more concessions to exclusive nationalism than many of us like to see—but it is probably as much of a step in advance in the direction of giving expression to Christian principles in international life as could be actually given effect to at the present time.

The symposium is a worth while undertaking, but I trust you will give us opinions from western and middle western writers before you are through.

I am sorry to see Bishop Lawrence apparently lining up with the Senate obstructionists in this matter rather than with the loyal and constructive position of Mr. Taft. The bishop's life-long personal friendship for Senator Lodge may predispose him against recognizing the pretty obvious fact that the senator's opposition, where it is not disingenuous, proceeds by the well-worn arguments of complete national selfishness. Its disingenuousness must be evident to anyone who will take the trouble to compare his speeches of the early part of the war with his present position and who will, at the same time, recollect clearly that Mr. Lodge did not begin his antagonism to the league simply when the present constitution was proposed, but nearly four months earlier, before there was anything concrete to criticize. The expression of his hostility, that is, has been against the very conception of any vital, effective league,—first more or less by indirection, then more and more definitely and bitterly. His position now of utter national egotism,—from which the war seems to have succeeded in dislodging the average American—is plainly written down in the sneers of his Senate speech of February 28,—a speech so untimely and un-American that it is already being apologized for by his political supporters.

The animus of all the organized opposition to the league is personal hostility or jealousy of the President. Grant, if you will, that he has provoked it by his domination. He stands, nevertheless, today as the sponsor for the world's supreme undertaking; he stands in this position to the whole world. It is, therefore, a perilous and tragic rôle that the obstructionists are essaying. They might, by this time, one would think, realize that the President and not they had correctly interpreted the sentiments of the mass of the people of this country again and again. Now, on the world scale, it will be the same story over again. The President will win,—in all matters that are really substantial in the league's constitution. He has spoken in these last four years many true and searching words. But he never spoke truer ones than these uttered in his speech in New York on March 4:

"I cannot imagine how these gentlemen can live and not live in the atmosphere of the world. I cannot imagine how they can live and not be in contact with the events of their times, and I particularly cannot imagine how they can be Americans and set up a doctrine of careful selfishness, thought out to the last detail. I have heard no counsel of generosity in their criticisms. I have heard no constructive suggestion. I have heard nothing except 'will it not be dangerous to us to help the world?' It would be fatal to us not to help it."

Russia and the Revolution

About Russia

OF making of books on Russia there seems to be no end, but sometimes one comes upon one so evidently written for our edification in the spiritual sense that we cannot afford to neglect it. Of such a nature is the book entitled Birkbeck and the Russian Church. (Edited by Athelstan Riley, Macmillan $3). By reading it one becomes acquainted with the teaching and spirit of the Eastern Church and gains a wider view of Christendom as a whole.

Mr. Birkbeck was a scholar by instinct but was saved from anything approaching academic narrowness by mixing with the world, and by travel in many lands. His life's dream was the gradual approximation of the Church of England to the Eastern Church as guardian of true Catholic tradition. His many journeys to Russia, his intimate knowledge of Russian Church doctrine and liturgy make him a fascinating guide through many discussions and we find our enthusiasm kindled by his, as he reveals to us much of the mission of the Orthodox Church in its great historic past. Russia's chief strength lies in her Church. In her long and eventful history, to use the words of one of her own illustrious sons, "the Church has given her strength to hold her own, to multiply and increase, to bear the heavy yoke of the Tartars without perishing under it, and at length cast it off, to outlive and overcome the anarchy which followed the failure of the old royal dynasty, to ward off and drive back" the Swedes, the Poles, the Austrians and the Turks, to break the power of Napoleon and the army of twenty nations which accompanied him, and in general to become the great nation that she is at the present day. For although Russia at the time of writing is in the melting pot, who will deny that she is a great nation, that at a given moment the process of disintegration may cease, and then once more the opportunity of the Church having come, she may seize it to lead the Russian people into a more enlightened freedom than they could have gained through a purely political revolution.

The weakness of the Church of Russia in the face of these tremendous political changes lies in her strong Byzantine traditions emanating from a past when the Eastern Church and emperor were closely linked together through the personality of the emperor. Can she adapt herself to altered circumstances, i. e., existence within a neutral or hostile State? What will be her fate when exposed to the competition of rival Churches and sects! This is the weakness of Russia. Her strength lies in the devotion of her people, especially of her peasantry.

What will they do with it,—this freedom so long worked and suffered for by Russian intellectuals,—so little understood by the mass of the people when it seemed within their grasp! In this book, Russia of Yesterday and Russia of Tomorrow (by Baroness Souiny, Century, $2.00), we have put before us vividly the state of affairs as they were at the time of the Tsar's abdication. Arguing from her knowledge of Russian psychology, Baroness Souiny foresaw almost prophetically the revolutions that would grow out of the various opinions of what freedom meant. Because the Tsar was sent away, the peasant reasoned, all of us have freedom to do as we like. "Does liberty mean that I can do anything I please without being punished?" asked a maid of her mistress, thus betraying that she mistook liberty for license. "The Slavic fantasy is so extensive that every man in Russia has his own dream, and every man will rush to the new rulers and make his demands." How true this was, and what a source of weakness to the young democracy events since 1917 have proved. Since then happenings in Russia have been more terrible than the world has ever seen. Those who love her and believe in her, feel she will yet work out her freedom from within, and there will arise a new Russia, "a force that would conquer the whole world, a force that must be tamed at any cost, until Russian ideals, through education enter into the age of ripeness and become like a precious wine a wonder drink for all mankind."

Baroness Souiny lays no stress on German influence in Russia, which outside of court circles was much felt and resented. The Russian has not the sense of order, the discipline or method of the German, and while the latter pursued his way of peaceful penetration, the Russian felt treated as a being of inferior race. The German colonies here spoken of, which in themselves were so admirable as models of what communities should be, became centers of Germanism with their German language schools and churches. They were practically a nation within a nation and thus a source of irritation to government and people alike.

There is an inaccuracy that must be noted. The marriage of the ex-Tsar and the Princess Alix of Hesse took place not before, but after the death of Alexander III, in the Winter Palace at Petrograd, on the eve of the Advent fast.

Like many another person who became stirred with enthusiasm at the overthrow of autocracy in Russia, the writer of Inside the Russian Revolution (by Rheta Childs Dorr, Macmillan, $1.50), hastened to that country in 1917 to take a sympathetic part in the first democratic development there. Mrs. Dorr went a Socialist by conviction, a sympathizer with revolution. She returned from Russia with the clear conviction that the world will have to wait awhile before it can establish co-operative millenniums, or before it can safely hand over the work of government to the man in the street. The author's socialistic tendencies would naturally lead her to investigate the effect the new freedom had upon the workers. She visited several factories and in all found the same conditions. The workers turned out the employers, and took over the industries themselves, voting themselves enormous salaries, short hours and little work. Industrial Russia has completely broken down. Mrs. Dorr believed that General January and famine would be the two forces that would stem the tide of the Russian revolution, and looked for some strong man yet unknown, who would arise, and, gathering the forces for good in his hands, would be able to lead the people to form a firm government. Unfortunately events have not verified this hope. Millions starve and the Bolsheviks fight an imaginary counter-revolution. Still, there is no question that the "Russian people in revolt have contributed greatly to the world's democracy." Mrs. Dorr concludes by her confession of faith!—"I believe that the next economic development will be Socialism, that is co-operation, common ownership of the principal means of production, and the administration of all departments of government by all people."

And she believes in the mission of the United States to the Russian people.

The reader who begins The Last of the Romanoffs (Dutton, $3.00) will find it difficult to put it down until he has read the last word. M. Rivet, a Frenchman, had a long acquaintance with Russia, first as professor, later as journalist. He speaks Russian and his knowledge of Russia is exceptional. He writes not only as critic, but as historian and gives the whole story of the Russian revolution up to the moment of Lenine coming into power. M. Rivet's account of the rise of Rasputin and his baleful influence at court, will interest many who have never been able to understand how he obtained such influence, or why it brought upon him such a dire vengeance. The book is divided into three parts: "Unknown Russia," which includes an interesting study of the Russian character—or want of it, as our author has it; "The Revolution," and "France and Russia." The last is peculiarly worthy of attention, revealing much that has been hitherto little known, viz.: the causes for the Franco-Russian alliance, France's attitude towards it, her ignorance of Russia as a whole, and the total unexpectedness to her of Russia's unpreparedness as a military power.

ESTHER SMITH.

A History of Russia

RUSSIA, FROM THE VARANGIANS TO THE BOLSHEVIKS. By R. Beazley, N. Forbes and G. A. Birkett, The Oxford University Press, 1918. $4.25.

Chesterton's prophecy that "one of the two great results of the war would be the introduction of Russia to the world" has come true. This illuminating book will be highly prized in these days of many, but not well informed, books on Russia, because of the scholarly yet simple narrative form of the authors. The early migrations of the Scandinavian peoples toward the southeast, the rise of the city of Novgorod, with the great leader Alexander Nevski dominating the surrounding country—then Kiev—with Moscow finally as capital triumphing over and uniting with the neighboring rival cities, is depicted so lucidly that the beginnings of Russia are at once real and comprehensive, instead of the doings of half mythical and vague peoples. The reference to contemporaneous rulers of England is most helpful as it establishes continuity of events in Russian life, rather than bead-strung, disjointed facts.

Due prominence is given to the work of the expansion of Russia under Ivan the Fourth—The Terrible—as he waged war on the north with the Swedes, in the Baltic provinces with the Germans, in the west Poland, and everywhere with the Tartars. With Ivan appears the intrepid and picturesque frontier police—the Cossacks.

The book is valuable because it gives an interesting cross-section of European history from the East-Europe point of view. The problem of Turkey, Austria, Poland, German intrigue and Sweden, the bitter retreat of the "Grand Army" are presented from the Russian point of view.

Peter the Great, Alexander the First and Catherine are pronounced landmarks; they achieve notable results in the consolidation of the Russian peoples and the development of national consciousness in the successful wars against their western adversaries.

The growing desire for national representation is very well told in the author's graphic account of the rise and growth of the local Zemstvos into the Imperial Duma and later the Soldiers and Workmen Council. It is made clear that the fall of the Romanoffs is not the unexpected, a fact readily seen from the carefully told story.

of the long and bitter period of serfdom of a people seeking relief.

The strain of unrelenting warfare brought large gains of territory to Russia, but also weakened disastrously the economic and political life of the nation. The already over-burdened landless peasants and the harassed nobility are continuously in revolt and opposition to the "autocrat."

The revolt in Petrograd was possible because the Imperial Guards "fraternized" with the Reds. These same guards created by Peter the Great have almost invariably been the balance of power in the struggle of Czar and people. Whenever they supported the people there was a change of dynasty. Russian history is repeating itself. The story is so well told that all of those who are seeking to know what is taking place in Russia today will turn to this book with great avidity.

RUSSIA 1914-1917: MEMORIES AND IMPRESSIONS OF WAR AND REVOLUTION. By General Basil Guorko. The Macmillan Company, New York, 1919. $4.00.

Men rise to their feet in admiration at the story of the heroic "poilu" at the Marne. Few people know that the courage and self-sacrifice of the Russian army was a large factor in the success of the French. General Guorko explains in a fascinating way how the Russians defeated the German plan by sending Generals Rennenkampf and Samsonoff, against their good judgment, into East Prussia to relieve the French when it seemed inevitable that they would be done for.

The Russian armies made the Germans pull back so many divisions from the Western Front that they were unable to deal the death blow. General Guorko draws back the veil which hid the advance of the fall of 1914. He traces the Russian army as it passed through the stage of mobilization into the field activities. Daily contact with the chief Russian leaders enables Guorko to give us descriptive notes about the men who are known only by name to the western world.

In vigorous and concise words we see the Russian army over-running the populous districts of East Prussia. It is easy to canter off with the "Sotnias," as they econnoiter cross-country.

While local engagements, such as the disastrous fight in the "Tannenberg" woods—the loss of two army corps, the melancholy flight of a single artilleryman and General Samsonoff through the wilderness and dying in the lonely forest, the effects of the first gas attack—are described in vividness that are hardly surpassed by anybody, the book deals rather with the general campaign of the Russian forces. We see the relationship of one front to another. We are privileged to enter into the meetings of the inter-allied conferences. We see why the Russian general was opposed to the order to invade Austria—but then Italy was sorely elaborated—the rejection of Rumania's unwise plan of campaign, the insistent pressure of the Russian generals for a free Poland. This is told by the author, not as an observer, but a leading spirit in this activity. Guorko is one of the Russians who exonerates the Empress of complicity with the German government, although he deplores the inconvenience of the Czar submitting to her choice of officials.

Many believe that the breakdown of the railway system of Rumania was due to the spirit of pro-Germanism. Guorko rather values Rumanian aid as of great value, coming in the winter months favored by the Germans for activity. Without Rumania the Germans would have undoubtedly connected with the Greeks and operated successfully against Sarraill and the Saloniki front.

General Guorko's book helps correct mistaken views of European affairs.

We wish he would tell us something of the causes and details of the revolution. The Czar is placed in very favorable light as he abdicates. There is the absence of street fighting and mass meetings. This is due no doubt to the fact Guorko's training would lead him to see the large significance of the important councils and the leading personalities rather than the petty affairs. We are glad he was liberated from the Fortress of Peter and Paul and hope he will continue the story of the revolution and the Bolsheviki.

RUSSIA IN UPHEAVAL. By Edward Allsworth Ross, Ph.D., LL.D. The Century Company, New York, 1918. $2.50.

Most casual readers of the daily newspapers and the current magazines have gained an impression of the series of events that have gone to make up the Russian revolution that is almost as chaotic as the history of Petrograd itself during the rushing months of 1914 to 1919. For such Miss Beatty's The Red Heart of Russia will serve to straighten out the order of events and to classify the actors in the drama. Miss Beatty is a California woman who went to Petrograd as war correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin in June, 1917. She saw with her own keen eyes the hopeless efforts of the Kerensky government. She visited the Russian front, she spent a week in barracks with the Battalion of Death, she boarded the Russian fleet in defiance of the rule that no woman should cross the gangplank of the battle-ships, she saw the fall of the Winter Palace, visited the political prisoners in the Fortress of Peter and Paul, was present in the Smolney Institute on the night that the Bolsheviks under Trotzky and Lenin came into power. All this she describes with skill and with the journalist's ready sympathy for all human beings. She shows no bias in dealing with the various political groups. The reader is permitted to live through the days of the revolution in Petrograd and to draw his own conclusions.

Dr. Ross's Russia in Upheaval is likewise dispassionate in its discussion of the revolution. Its purpose is, however, to trace the root causes rather than to describe the sequence of events. The author spent the latter half of 1917 in Russia and with "scientific objectivity" as his guiding star sets down what he saw, leaving it to "others or to time to judge." His comparative studies of the tribes and nationalities of Russia and Siberia is a real contribution to current writing on the Russian situation which too often confines itself to the northeastern cities. His solution is a "United States of Russia." The chapters on women, on labor and capital and on religion are illuminating, and those describing the rise and progress of the revolution and the effect of the returning revolutionists upon the March revolution serve to clear up much of the confusion which reigns in the average mind in regard to the Russia of the past two years.

pressive. Major Gen. Thomas C. Barry, commanding the Department of the East, sent over an escort of honor consisting of twenty-one men and colors from the 22d Infantry, stationed at Governors Island. A detail of sailors from the Brooklyn Navy Yard accompanied Rear Admiral Nathaniel R. Usher and participated in the ceremony. There was a detachment of marines from the French warship Gloire, and the 22d Infantry band also attended. An audience which filled the big assembly room witnessed the presentation of the cross.

The American service men were lined up at the rear of the platform, while the French sailors and marines, American colors at either side, formed a file in front. Captain Frederick Stuart Greene of Company H, 302nd Engineers, recently appointed Commissioner of Highways by Governor Smith, introduced Admiral Groult.

"We know all that you have done to bring the United States on the side of the Allies," said the Admiral in French, addressing Dr. Manning, "and how you awoke the soul of America to the cause of justice, and it is therefore the pleasure of the Government of France to confer this decoration upon you," and he bent forward and kissed the rector on both cheeks. The soldiers came to attention, the crew stood up, and the band played the Marchaie. A trumpeter from the Gloire, who had sounded "ouvrez le ban," the call for conferring the honor, then closed the ceremony by playing the call "fermez le ban."

"No words could express what I feel at receiving this great and undeserved honor from the Government of France," said Dr. Manning, "especially in these days when it is so great an honor to receive such a token from your country. We Americans have always in our hearts a special place for France. We love France for herself, for the qualities of her soul. We love her because she is France. We love her for the help she gave us in our little family quarrel, now long since forgotten, when a German king sitting on a British throne tried to take our British freedom from us. Today France is the victor and Alsace

IN MEMORIAM

HUNTER—Philip Stephen Hunter, born July 17, 1848; died February 25, 1919.

Annie Buchanan Hunter, born May 23, 1852; died December 11, 1918.

These two so united through their long lives, were by death not long divided. They were born and lived at "Fonthill," Essex Co., Virginia, and died the last of a large family. Their father was R. M. T. Hunter, United States Senator and Speaker of the House, and later Secretary of the Treasury under Jefferson Davis. Their mother was Mary Evelina Dandridge of "The Bower," Sheperdstown, West Virginia.

This brother and sister displayed in their unflinching hospitality and high ideals the best traditions of the old South. The many acts of kindness, and the aid and sympathy which they gave to all around them, leave a sense of bereavement in many hearts.

Their last days were comforted by the constant attendance of the faithful family servants whose lives have been spent in their service, and by the affectionate care of their cousin the daughter of the late Unscoe Russell Hunter Garnett.

Both funerals were held in the large hall of historic "Elmwood," the Garnett home, and burials made in the family grave-yard, on the estate, where rest so many members of the Garnett and Hunter families, names long prominent in the history of the state.

Both were loyal and generous communicants of St. Anne's Parish, and in common with their family held the most beautiful conception of death. To them at last, it was "like passing into another room." "In my Father's house are many mansions."

and Lorraine are free and will be forever French. Justice and liberty are to be upheld, and that nation which brutally and wantonly assaulted France and the world now must receive stern and impartial justice."

Dr. Manning then took over the Chairmanship and introduced Major S. Fullerton Weaver, detailed to solve the re-employment problem of the 77th Division. Colonel Sherrill followed Major Weaver. He said that the spick and span towns and villages of the Rhineland observed by the American forces marching into Coblenz from the ruins of Northern France made the doughboy wish to see

COLONEL ARTHUR HERBERT

In the recent death of Col. Arthur Herbert at his country home in Fairfax County, Virginia, a striking personality passes into history from the scenes of its earthly activity.

He would not permit us to say that with him the chivalrous type of Southern aristocrat has passed away, although few men in any age are blessed with so much unconscious dignity, a courtesy so generous, and personal beauty so exceptional. He would say, that in the stress of these times, new types of excellence are being hammered out, men who will strive to meet the demands of the future, as he and his generation suffered to meet the exigencies of their own day; he would say that there will never come the hour when we look in vain for a Christian gentleman to uphold those principles for which men still live and die. Surely, it was in this faith, that he lay down his arms.

In his distinguished service in the Confederate Army, Col. Herbert demonstrated dauntless courage and fine leadership, mercy in the hour of victory and patience in the hour of defeat; but others, better qualified than the writer, will speak of him as a Churchman, as a soldier, as a citizen; as a financier, guardian or trustee. Here, we would speak of him as a friend, and speak for five generations who have known his goodness and loved his physical and moral beauty. All who saw the man felt his charm, and all who knew him, knew that he was as his Master, and to the limit of his human capacity, a very present help in time of trouble.

His whole life, of more than eighty years, was the twelfth Chapter of Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans, put faithfully into effect, in the daily overcoming of evil with good.

Training for Authorship

How to write, what to write, and where to sell.

Cultivate your mind. Develop your literary gifts. Master the art of self-expression. Make your spare time profitable. Turn your ideas into dollars.

Courses in Short-Story Writing, Versification, Journalism, Play Writing, Photoplay Writing, etc., taught personally by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and a staff of literary experts. Constructive criticism. Frank, honest, helpful advice. Real teaching.

One pupil has received over $5,000 for stories and articles written mostly in spare time—"play work," he calls it. Another pupil received over $1,000 before completing her first course. Another, a busy wife and mother, is averaging over $75 a week from photoplay writing alone.

There is no other institution or agency doing so much for writers, young or old. The universities recognize this, for over one hundred members of the English faculties of higher institutions are studying in our Literary Department. The editors recognize it, for they are constantly recommending our courses.

We publish The Writer's Library. We also publish The Writer's Monthly, especially valuable for its full reports of the literary market. Besides our teaching service, we offer a manuscript criticism service.

The War for the Union

THE following letter appeared in the Philadelphia Public Ledger:

Sir—It is common to hear the American Civil War dismissed as but a small thing in comparison with the tremendous drama which has been unfolding itself for the last four and a half years before the eyes of amazed humanity and which, for lack of a better name, we call the world war. But now that the turbulence is over and the angry waters have subsided, we are able properly to sum up what the great struggle has meant for the United States. We count the casualties, the number of men in the armies, the percentage of the population drawn into the military and naval forces of the nation, and we are confronted by the fact that the Civil War still remains the great military effort of the United States. By reason of the new day which we hope is about to break upon troubled mankind, it is not altogether without the bounds of probability that the Civil War will always remain, what it is at present, the one great struggle of the American people.

During the world war the United States put under arms about 4,000,000 men. Up to date the number of dead, killed in action and died of wounds and disease totals 63,796 (Jan. 21, 1919). Against this stands the death list in the Civil War of the North alone, 359,528. This does not include the number of those who were discharged from the army and died at home from the result of wounds, of exposure or disease contracted in the line of duty. The historians of the Civil War estimate the death roll of the North to have been 500,000, and the toll the war took of the South cannot have been much under that of the North. The Civil War takes on a new and solemn meaning when we place its death list of a million side by side with the death list of 63,796 for our army in the world war.

The enlistments in the army in the North, counting three one-year men as one three-years man, were 1,700,000, and in the South about 900,000. Out of a total population of 27,943,790 (not including 3,500,000 slaves), 2,600,000 entered the ranks of the Union or Confederate armies. In the world war, out of a population of 100,000,000 we had under arms 4,000,000. From the standpoint of man-power alone, the military effort of the nation in the Civil War was, in proportion to the population, more than four times as great as it has been in the world war. In the North 45 per cent of the military population was in the army and in the South 90 per cent. These few figures give the Civil War its true place and help us to understand how it is the American nation's one great military recollection, and, for aught we know, will be such until that day when this nation shall have gone the way of all the nations of the earth.

A Suggestion

By The Rev. A. E. Montgomery

A GENERAL board consisting of bishops, priests, and laymen, elected by the General Convention every three years, to have the oversight of the whole Church, all resources in men and money to be under its control, all parish and mission resources to be sent monthly to the treasurer of the board, to apportion to each synod board its quota of men and money for the year.

2. A synod board consisting of the bishops of the diocese in the province and of priests and laymen elected annually by the synod. To control all resources in men and money apportioned to it by the general board, to have the oversight of the Church within the synod, to meet annually to consider the state of the Church within its limits, to fill vacant parishes and missions, to make such removals as seems wise and necessary for the best interests of the Church in any parish or mission, to apportion to each diocese its quota of men and money.

3. A diocesan board consisting of the bishop and priests and laymen elected at the annual diocesan convention, to have the oversight of all parishes and missions in the diocese, to pay from the diocesan treasury all stipends of the clergy within its limits, to advise the synod board of the proper quota of men and money necessary to the diocese, of occurring vacancies, of advisable removals and exchanges.

4. Every parish and mission to have a representative sitting with the synod board when its particular case is being discussed and with the diocesan board when its case is being discussed there, and the right of appeal from the decision of the lower boards to the general board. The decision of the general board to be final.

5. Every priest to have the right of appeal from the decision of the two lower boards to the general board, the decision of the general board to be final.

When Education Ceases—The Nation Dies

The present deplorable conditions in Russia are unquestionably due to the dense ignorance of its vast population; while America's commanding position in world affairs is the natural outcome of her system of Universal Education.

THE GREAT AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION

PERPETUAL LOOSE-LEAF
ENCYCLOPÆDIA
& Research Bureau for Special Information

Four Great Reasons for Nelson's

First—It is an authoritative record of what is going on in the world, written in simple understandable English. It covers all ages, from the dawn of history to the Peace Conference.

Second—Three Editorial Staffs: DR. JOHN H. FINLEY, N. Y. Commissioner of Education, American Editor; SIR WILLIAM PETERSON, McGill University, Canadian Editor; SIR EDWARD PARROTT, Edinburgh, European Editor; and upwards of a thousand of the world's leading scholars.

Nelson's Perpetual Loose-Leaf Encyclopedia contains more than 70,000 subjects, treating over 1,000,000 topics, 7,000 illustrations, 500 maps. It is the standard authority in the United States Government Departments, Universities, Colleges, Libraries, and Educational Institutions throughout the world.

Testimonials Received from All Over the World

The London Times says: "Nelson's large Editorial Staff is at the disposal of their customers; they are the most extensive Encyclopedia publishers in the world."

The Review of Reviews says: "A real practical scheme for an Encyclopedia that is always up-to-date. It is used as an authority in our Editorial Rooms."

Scientific American says: "Nelson's contains only the new facts, eliminating the old and worn-out ideas that are liable to mislead the reader."

Third—It keeps pace with the times by a system that rivals anything educational experts have produced. Obsolete information can be removed and the new—which is supplied—substituted.

Fourth—In buying this Encyclopedia, you become a member of one of the most powerful educational organizations the world has known, NELSON'S RESEARCH SERVICE BUREAU FOR SPECIAL INFORMATION.

Mr. Felix Tumulty says: "In the White House at Washington, on the evening of the last election, some facts were sought; many reference works were consulted in vain, when some one suggested, 'Look it up in Nelson's.' Of course, the information was readily found."

The Independent says: "We simply cannot get along without Nelson's. The Loose-Leaf system provides for the latest information available."

Librarian, Public Library, St. Joseph, Missouri, says: "For the latest concise information we naturally turn to Nelson's. What more can we say?"

AT different periods nearly every people has felt itself to be the Messiah, who is called to save the world, and that in itself is born the best and most ideal force . . . and it is now plain that on the Russian people, starving, tortured by three centuries of slavery, worn out by the war, history has now laid this great mission while under the threat of being crushed by robbers. In the midst of all this Russia says to the workers and to the right-minded people of the whole world; "Come and go with us towards the new life, whose creation we work for without sparing ourselves and without sparing anybody or anything! Erring and suffering in the great joy of labor and in the burning hope of progress, we leave to the honest judgment of history all our deeds. Come with us to battle against the ancient order, to work for new forms of life! Forth to life's freedom and beauty!"—Maxim Gorky.

AN APPROACH TOWARDS UNITY

WE publish in our columns this week a document, in the preparation of which certain bishops, presbyters and laymen in our communion have been in conference for some months together with certain unofficial representatives of the Congregational Churches in America. The document deserves the careful and sincere consideration of every communicant and clergyman in the Church. It ought to be read with open mind and, what is even better, an open heart. There was never a time in the history of our Church, perhaps, when a proposal conceived in this purpose, would have been more likely to receive a generous, reverent handling than at this hour. The war has not been fought in vain. Churches like nations have been breathing the air of a freer spirit.

One's first impulse, and a sagacious one, in receiving this kind of proposal is to turn to the list of signatures, for the direction from which the authorship of the document proceeds is likely to color our interpretation of its meaning and our estimate of its wisdom. The first name in the list of signers from our own communion is that of the Bishop of Southern Ohio, respected throughout the Church for his scholarship, his sanity in all controversial questions, his statesmanship and above all for his sincere loyalty to the Church and its Lord and Master Jesus Christ. Bishop Vincent is one of those outstanding leaders which the Episcopal Church, to its lasting benefit, has been rearing generation after generation. He may be trusted.

Then follow the names of men known and respected throughout the Church, men holding dissimilar views upon matters of churchmanship and polity. None of these gentlemen presents a record tainted with too great daring in unity enterprise.

This group of churchmen ask us to give careful consideration to the proposal which they lay before the Church and to the canon which will be presented at the next General Convention. Their request is certain to have a cordial and sincere reception throughout the Church.

But what of the document itself? The vivid impression which one carries away from even a cursory reading is its humility, its graciousness and the depth and sincerity of its expressed desire for unity. The spirit in which the hand is stretched forth to brothers of another communion leaves nothing to be desired. If every irenicon had been written in the mood of the third, fourth and fifth paragraphs of this proposal, we should, we feel quite sure, have been farther along the road towards unity than we are today. But, it must be noted, that the document before us goes no farther in this conciliatory and humble spirit than does a similar proposal now under discussion in the Church of England. We can be grateful to the men who signed the document we are considering that their own approach to the difficult task was in posture of mind so Christian and sincere.

It is clear that the plan is not too ambitious. It is merely an approach to organic unity. It is based upon the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral. Its proposals contain nothing that ought to frighten those who are apprehensive lest by hasty counsel essentials be surrendered. These gentlemen have not met in any iconoclastic spirit. The episcopate remains under the plan what it has always been, "the normal nucleus of the Church's ministry." Ordination, the sacraments retain what has been deemed essential to their validity throughout the Catholic Church. A sufficient discipline guards against lawlessness in the execution of the plan.

It is evident as one studies the document that both sides in this plan of reconciliation sacrifice much that is dear both to prejudice and instinct, but neither side is asked to sacrifice anything which ought to do violence to conscience or conviction. THE CHURCHMAN urges with great sincerity its readers to give prayerful consideration to the proposals for an approach towards unity. While it is under discussion in the Church between now and the meeting of the General Convention we suggest that rectors make the matter a topic for Sunday sermons; that in every town and city throughout the United States, Congregationalists and Episcopalians meet together informally to discuss the plan; and above all, that they meet together to pray for a right judgment in dealing with this weighty matter.

A LETTER AND A CONTROVERSY

THE publication in our columns a fortnight ago of a letter addressed by a churchman to Bishop Greer has called forth a storm of indignation and a ripple of surprise; indignation that a man should write a letter of that character to the beloved and universally respected Bishop of New York; surprise that the letter should have been published in the columns of a church paper. Both the indignation and surprise are normal reactions. We knew that they would follow the reading of the document. Perhaps a still more stunned surprise awaits our readers when we state that among the writers of letters received in THE CHURCHMAN office regarding this attack upon Bishop Greer many have confessed to sharing fully the theological views of the author of the malignant epistle, disclaiming, of course, as all gentlemen must, the writer's personal reflections on the Bishop of New York.

THE CHURCHMAN was not unaware of the existence of such miasmal sentiment in the Church. We accepted the letter for publication because we knew that this ecclesiastical temper is to be reckoned with in any program for church unity upon which we may enter. The letter in its indecent discourtesy is not representative, but the letter in its hard, cruel pharisaism is more thoroughly representative of one type of layman and priest which our Church is producing than many of us wish to acknowledge.

reproduced with headlines an editorial which had appeared in one of our own church papers attacking the special services which the Bishop of New York had arranged for Holy Week. The tone of the editorial was unexceptionable in its courtesy; the writer is a Christian gentleman. He shares the warm regard of THE CHURCHMAN, for we have published from time to time articles from his skilful pen. His convictions upon certain matters differ from those of THE CHURCHMAN. We respect his convictions. It is permissible to hold and to teach them in the Episcopal Church. But when the writer of the editorial stated, in his attack upon the special services at the cathedral, the opinion which we shall presently quote, something must have snapped in his soul, causing him to do violence to Christian judgment. This is the passage:

Why, indeed, should the bishop stop here? Why should he not arrange next Lent for united services with Unitarians, Jews, Buddhists and Mohammedans—with any sort of religion he finds represented in New York?

Many a rigid, theological definition has led into this kind of blind alley. In religious controversy logic always stumbles when it lets go its hold upon normal, Christian instinct.

There are breeding spots in the Episcopal Church of doctrines every bit as harsh, unchristian and pharisaical as those which underlie the convictions in the letter which we published a fortnight ago. Even in some of our theological schools there are groups of students—we speak from knowledge, not from surmise—who debate the question of Protestantism and the “sects” in language and sentiment no less savage, no less bigoted than that employed by Bishop Greer’s assailant. These facts are not commonly known among the laity. They have a right to know them. We published the letter that they might know them. Discourtesy to the bishop was not the most flagrant sin in that letter. Its rancid theology was its sin.

Who is responsible for the type of morale which that letter displayed? The whole Church is responsible. The tragic blunder of our Church has been that it has so often chosen the Pharisee to guard the deposit of faith. At critical moments the Pharisee has taken the floor. We have let him speak and we have only faintly challenged his authority and his utterance. The writer of the letter has merely thundered forth what is whispered in more polite circles. He has translated into dogma insinuations which have long passed unchallenged, because polite phraseology, with us a required grace in controversy, has obscured the moral obliquity.

The unhappy being whose letter we published is the victim of the disease of pharisaism, more widely spread among the laymen than many of us think. Our Church must eliminate this influence if we are to go forward to the high ground where unity is attained through our oneness with the spirit of the Master. There is still with us the spirit which for nineteen hundred years has been crucifying the Christ. It is only an eddy in the main current of the Church’s life but it pollutes the whole stream.

THE BROTHERHOOD AND THE LETTER

WE are glad to give publicity to the following communication from the general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States, though it is not needed to dispel any suspicion or doubt regarding the attitude of the Brotherhood towards the convictions expressed in the letter addressed to Bishop Greer, which THE CHURCHMAN published a fortnight ago. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has always stood for the cleanest, finest loyalties produced by the Christian religion. Its attitude upon every controversial question has been guided by an instinct, unfailingly Christian and true. The Brotherhood since its founding has been nourished upon the prayer-life of the Church. Those who believe in the fellowship of prayer are seldom found detached by bigotry or self-righteousness from the main currents of the Church’s healthy life. The letter follows:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

There appears in your issue of March 15 a letter without signature, containing a scurrilous attack upon the Bishop of New York for his large hearted Christ-like action in providing for services in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to be addressed by our brethren, the ministers of other Churches.

In the letter from Dean Robbins which prefaces the letter referred to above, it is stated that the writer of the letter is an official of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in a Western city. The writer was at one time a member of the National Council of the Brotherhood, but has not been a Council Member since he was ordained deacon almost a year ago.

The Brotherhood’s cordial relationship to all Christian organizations is too well known to require any defense by reason of the use of its name made in connection with the publication, otherwise anonymous, of a letter personally expressing views which if officially expressed would receive our immediate repudiation.

We trust that the above will receive quite as conspicuous a position in your next issue as you gave the original letter and that from Dean Robbins.

G. FRANK SHELBY, General Secretary.

THE CHURCHMAN, naturally, has not disclosed any facts regarding the identity of the man who wrote the letter. The National Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew authoritatively states that he is a deacon. Assuming that the secretary is right, it raises the question of how he came to be ordained. Granted, as has been said in his defense in some letters received, that he is a paranoiac, is it quite safe to have this type of paranoia at large in the diaconate?

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

A YEAR AGO

A YEAR ago the great German drive was on. When we think of those heavy, anxious days we ought to be very thankful to Almighty God for the deliverance which was given us. Palm Sunday, a year ago, was one of the darkest days that any of us can remember. It seemed then that only a miracle could block the German advance. The world was reeling under the staggering blows of the great offensive. Then came Marshal Foch and we knew that Germany could not win.

When we get discouraged over the complexity of our reconstruction problems, over Bolshevism and the Balkans, Poland and the Slovaks, the League of Nations and the League of Senators, we ought to refresh our spirits by contemplating the size and character of the burden under which the Allies were staggering a year ago. But they held out and they held together. We shall hold out and we shall solve the problem together. So let's cheer up!

PLANS FOR THE DETROIT TRIENNIAL

THE program committee for the triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to be held simultaneously with General Convention next autumn has made its second report. All that remains is for the central office of the Woman's Auxiliary to fill in the details. A summary of this report appears in the news pages. The report is a good one, and the triennial, with the presentation of a national constitution for the Woman's Auxiliary, with the question of whether women shall sit upon the Board of Missions, with the framing of a policy in regard to the United Offering workers, and with the reorganization of the Junior Auxiliary, promises to be an important step in the readjustment of the Woman's Auxiliary to meet the wider opportunities opening to it.

What seems to us, however, of greatest significance is the insistence that the classes conducted by the Woman's Auxiliary shall not conflict with the classes under the auspices of the Board of Religious Education. "It is perfectly evident," says the report, "that a large majority of the delegates to the triennial consider Sunday School training as much a part of their business as delegates as the meetings of the Auxiliary." There is a definite move throughout the Church to displace the barriers that have kept missions, social service and education in air-tight compartments. If the women of the Auxiliary are insisting that religious education in their own parishes is a part of their missionary responsibility as members of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, it means that the Auxiliary has found the key to the gate that will lead it out into a future of usefulness even greater than its past. Where the Woman's Auxiliary has failed has been in not supplying opportunity for home service. The Auxiliary branch is usually the strongest woman's organization in the parish, but—except in those parishes where has been encouraged a wider interpretation of the work than the prescribed responsibilities of the branch technically allowed—home service has been ruled outside the scope of its work. The consequence has been that in most parishes there either is a division in the ranks of the women organized for service or else foreign missions have prospered at the expense of missions around the corner. Perhaps the "Auxiliary of the Future," which is to be the subject of conference in Detroit, will, like the Red Cross, develop not only that arm which reaches across the sea and ministers to the needs of distant lands but also one that touches the wounded nearer home and heals their distress.

A LITTLE BOOK THAT WILL HELP

ALL Britishers who long for a closer friendship between England and America—and who does not these days?—will almost instinctively put into the hands of any American who wants to understand England a little book written by Frederick William Wile, called Explaining the Britishers (Doran, $1.00). Mr. Wile is a former American newspaperman who has lived many years in England, and who has had a wide continental experience in newspaper work. His little book on England was originally written and published as a sort of friendly guide for our troops passing through the British Isles, as well as for those who were to fight alongside the Tommies.

Almost as soon as it was in print our boys began clamoring for copies. Englishmen said to Americans visiting London, "Have you read Wile's book? He understands us." And he does. The book not only explains the Britisher; it incidentally explains the average American to himself, so far as that American's misunderstanding of England and the Englishman is concerned. Mr. Wile, out of his sympathetic understanding, makes the typical American's concept of the Britisher seem as fantastic as it really is. The good will and good humor aglow on every page give striking effectiveness to the needed message. Admiral Sims, that most popular of Americans in London, has written for the volume a happy foreword.

THE COMMON BOND

THE Bishop of Edinburgh, writing in the Guardian, emphasizes the symbolic value of Constantinople as an outward embodiment of Christian internationalism:

The only ground then on which permanent peace is possible is the frank recognition that our common bond in Christ is infinitely more important than the bond of our national and even religious inheritance. We shall be thankful for the latter as the means by which we have grown to be what we are, we shall feel its high importance as a contribution to the Catholic Faith; we shall never cease to thank God for its manifold blessings; but we shall always recognize that what gives our brother Christian his peculiar interest and attractiveness is not that he is a Presbyterian, a Roman Catholic, a Methodist, or an Anglican, but that he is in Christ and Christ is in him, and whatever means he may adopt for working this out into his character, it is that unique relationship, it is that, and that alone, which gives him the worth, to which we pay tribute in advance—that, and that only, which presents such amazing possibilities. And if we thus make practice among ourselves of this faith in our spiritual relationships, we shall reach out with less difficulty to finding the same ideal in German, Austrian and Bulgarian Christians, a difficulty at present almost insuperable.

But we need some outward embodiment of this catholicity, both political and religious. When the Paris peace conference comes to an end a permanent home must be found for this international council. If Constantinople were chosen it would be realizing in a surprising way the hope of a profound thinker on historical subjects. The historian Freeman in one of his essays contrasting new Rome, as he called Constantinople, with the older Rome, makes this prediction of her eternity as the capital of the world. The other capitals of Europe seem by her side to be things of yesterday, creations of accident. Some chance a few centuries ago made them seats of government till some other chance may cease to make them seats of government. But the City of Constantinople abides, and must abide. Over and over again has that city prolonged the duration of powers which must otherwise have crumbled away. In the hands of the Roman, Frank, Greek and Turk, her inspired mission has never left her. The eternity of the elder Rome is the eternity of a moral influence, the eternity of the younger Rome is the eternity of a city and fortress fixed on a spot which Nature herself had destined to be the seat of the empire of two worlds. What are these two worlds? Those of the East and West. What will bind them together? Surely the League of Nations. If Constantinople should, as I trust it may be, internationalized, then Freeman's hope might be realized far beyond his wildest anticipations. There in the Teheragan Serai, the most wonderful palace in the world, might sit the parliament of nations, the international court that shall keep guard over the world's peace. There, too, the Sublime Porte—that lofty title that suggests government from on high—shall at last find its claim justified, for there will be that new imperial power and government which counts among its willing subjects emperors, kings and presidents, and exercises sway over the whole earth.

On Telling Lies to Children

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Do not sin against the child. Genesis, XLIV-22.

YESTERDAY I was strolling on the boardwalk at Atlantic City. It was crowded with people, and directly in front of me were two well-dressed ladies, one of whom was dragging by the hand a somewhat obstreperous and struggling child, who was advertising his griefs to a heartless world in a strident howl. Suddenly, she turned and said to him, "If you don't stop crying, I'll throw you into the ocean." Did he stop? Not he. He shrieked the louder. Why? Simply because she lied, she knew she lied, and he knew she lied.

I sometimes wonder why God gives children to that kind of people, or since He does, that no directions ever come on the package. True, it would seem that, in such an instance, directions would be superfluous. One would be inclined to believe that laying aside any religious or even ethical motive, ordinary intelligence would cry aloud to the father or mother in tones not to be misunderstood, "If you want your child to speak the truth—speaking the truth!"

Now, the probability is that that very mother would be the one to be stricken with horror, and to punish her boy with "a sound whipping" because he "told a lie," whereas, in truth, if she were treated to the same kind of medicine every time she lied to him, she would long ago have been the much-pitied victim of nervous prostration, and would have had to take a trip to Europe for repairs.

Possibly, she will try to reform him, by sending him to Sunday School, or taking him to church, and then will have no end of wonderment because of his continued depravity. One of our religious journals tells of a church-going mother, who said, "The only way I can make my children mind is to tell them that the policeman will get them;" and the neighbors who had come to regard with terror her infant thugs, quietly expressed the belief among themselves that that would be the most appropriate disposition of them which could be made. Never were any better precepts in the world than were written by Solomon, and yet he had one of the worst sons:—Rehoboam. And why? Because he did just what your boy will do; he forgot his father's precepts when he saw his father's example. "What'll you take?" said a waiter in a café to a lad seated with his father. The boy hesitated for a moment, and then answered, "I'll take what father takes." And that is just what he will take.

As you look into that little face, and ask, "What shall he be?" ask again, "What am I being?" Remember, the wind which will sail the ship ten miles an hour has got to blow twenty miles itself.

I wonder what such people think,—or if they ever think at all. A gentleman told me of a little fellow who had been promised by his parents that when they went to drive, he should go with them. They went, and he did not go. When they came back, he reminded them of it; so they promised that the next time he should surely go. But they went—and he didn't. And again he reminded them of it; and again they promised. The next time, when he looked up and saw them driving out of the gate, he turned to his boy comrade and said, "There go two of the biggest liars in town." Why did he say that? Because he spoke the truth, and they didn't; and he knew it.

Now, it seems so strange that these things should ever have to be said. I have seriously hesitated about permitting this article to go to press, because it is all so obvious. It would appear that every one ought to know these truths without being told, and yet I am more and more impressed with this strange anomaly:—The obvious things in life are the very things which a great many people fail even to suspect.

The two best works which I ever read on the training of children were written by people who never had any; one an old bachelor, and the other an old maid; Herbert Spencer and Harriet Martineau. They saw what many parents never think of seeing. That may be one reason why it is so much easier to steer a boy when you haven't got any boy to steer.

One of the shrewdest remarks which Herbert Spencer makes in his work on Education, is that Nature never makes a useless threat; she always keeps her word. To the babe, she says, "Thou shalt not fall down, for if thou dost, the ground will come up and hit thee." And it always does. The child soon learns its lesson, ceases tumbling, and walks upright; because it is not the severity of punishment that deters us from foolishness, but its certainty. Being thrown into the ocean had no terror for the boy on the boardwalk, because he knew that she was a liar who made the threat; but I am very certain that he could have been readily hindered from his persistent obstreperousness if he had had a mother who was herself something more than a child. Unfortunately, she was a woman who had never grown up; a member of a numerous sorosis.

Then my advice is to you, mother, and father also, to whom God has given a little child, always keep your word. Quit your lying. If you do not, it will have one of two results. He won't believe you, or he will. If he ceases to believe you, he will of course lie to you, as you have lied to him; and who can blame him? If he does believe you, your thoughtlessness may result in untold agony. Think how it must affect a sensitive little child—to be subject to the despotism of some foolish, thoughtless mother, or worse still, some ignorant hired nurse, who will cause the heart to beat and the pulses to throb in terror, by threats of dogs, or ghosts, or black men with hideous horns.

But now suppose that one adopt the other plan;—the Christ-like plan,—of being absolutely truthful and kind and fair and square and honest. What then? Oh, godly mother and godly father, great indeed shall be your reward, for one of the supreme compensations of true parentage is that when we are conscientiously seeking to train up a child in the way he should go, we are just as surely training up ourselves in the way we should go. Many and many a woman has there been whose life counted for nothing,—a cipher,—until God has put a unit in front of it, in the form of a little child, and after that she has stood for TEN.

PROPOSALS FOR AN APPROACH TOWARDS UNITY

THE undersigned, members of the Protestant Episcopal Church and of Congregational Churches, without any official sanction and purely on our private initiative, have conferred with each other, partly by correspondence and partly by meeting, with a view to discover a method by which a practical approach towards making clear and evident the visible unity of believers in our Lord according to His will, might be made. For there can be no question that such is our Lord's will. The Church itself, in the midst of its divisions, bears convincing witness to it. "There is one Body and one Spirit, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." There has never been, there can never be, more than one Body or one Baptism. On this we are agreed. There is one fellowship of the baptized, made one by grace, and in every case by the self-same grace. And the unity given and symbolized by Baptism is in its very nature visible.

We are agreed that it is our Lord's purpose that believers in Him should be one visible society. Into such a society, which we recognize as the Holy Catholic Church, they are initiated by Baptism; whereby they are admitted to fellowship with Him and with one another. The unity which is essential to His Church's effective witness and work in the world must express and maintain this fellowship. It cannot be fully realized without community of worship, faith, and order, including common participation in the Lord's Supper. Such unity would be compatible with a rich diversity in life and worship.

We have not discussed the origin of the episcopate historically or its authority doctrinally; but we agree to acknowledge that the recognized position of the episcopate in the greater part of Christendom as the normal nucleus of the Church's ministry and as the organ of the unity and continuity of the Church is such that the members of the episcopal Churches ought not to be expected to abandon it in assenting to any basis of reunion.

We also agree to acknowledge that Christian Churches not accepting the episcopal order have been used by the Holy Spirit in His work of enlightening the world, converting sinners, and perfecting saints. They came into being through reactions from grave abuses in the Church at the time of their origin, and were led in response to fresh apprehensions of divine truth to give expression to certain necessary and permanent types of Christian experience, aspiration and fellowship, and to secure rights of Christian people which had been neglected or denied.

No Christian community is involved in the necessity of disowning its past; but it should bring its own distinctive contribution not only to the common life of the Church, but also to its methods of organization. Many customs and institutions which have been developed in separate communities may be preserved within the larger unity. What we desire to see is not grudging concession, but a willing acceptance of the treasures of each for the common enrichment of the united Church.

To give full effect to these principles in relation to the Churches to which we respectively belong requires some form of corporate union between them. We greatly desire such corporate union. We also are conscious of the difficulties in the way of bringing it about, including the necessity for corporate action, even with complete good will on both sides. In this situation we believe that a practical approach toward eventual union may be made by the establishment of intercommunion in particular instances. It is evident to us that corporate union between bodies whose members have become so related will thereby be facilitated. Mutual understanding and sympathy will strongly reinforce the desire to be united in a common faith and order, and will make clearer how the respective contributions of each community can best be made available to all.

We recognize as a fact, without discussing whether it is based upon sound foundations, that in the episcopal Churches an apprehension exists that if episcopally conferred orders were added to the authority which non-episcopal ministers have received from their own communions, such orders might not be received and used in all cases in the sense or with the intention with which they are conferred. Upon this point there ought to be no room for doubt. The sense or intention in which any particular order of the ministry is conferred or accepted is the sense or intention in which it is held in the Universal Church. In conferring or in accepting such ordination neither the bishop ordaining nor the minister ordained should be understood to impugn thereby the efficacy of the minister's previous ministry.

The like principle applies to the ministration of sacraments. The minister acts not merely as the representative of the particular congregation then present, but in a larger sense he represents the Church Universal; and his intention and meaning should be our Lord's intention and meaning as delivered to and held by the Catholic Church. To this end such sacramental matter and form should be used as shall exhibit the intention of the Church.

When communion has been established between the ordaining bishop of the Episcopal Church and the ordained minister of another communion, appropriate measures ought to be devised to maintain it by participating in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and by mutual counsel and co-operation.

We are not unmindful that occasions may arise when it might become necessary to take cognizance of supposed error of faith or of conduct, and suitable provision ought to be made for such cases.

In view of the limitations imposed by the law and practice of the Episcopal Church upon its bishops with regard to ordination, and the necessity of obtaining the approval of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church to the project we have devised, a form of canonical sanction has been prepared which is appended as a schedule to this statement. We who are members of the Episcopal Church are prepared to recommend its enactment. We who are members of Congregational Churches regard it as a wise basis upon which in the interests of Church unity, and without sacrifice on either side, the supplementary ordination herein contemplated might be accepted.

It is our conviction that such procedure as we here outline is in accordance, as far as it goes, with our Lord's purposes for His Church; and our fond hope is that it would contribute to heal the Church's divisions. In the mission field it might prove of great value in uniting the work. In small communities it might put an end to the familiar scandal of more churches than the spiritual needs of the people require. In the army and navy, chaplains so ordained could minister acceptably to the adherents of Christian bodies who feel compunctions about the regularity of a non-episcopal ministry. In all places an example of a practical approach to Christian unity, with the recognition of diversities in organization and in worship, would be held up before the world. The will to unity would be strengthened, prejudices would be weakened, and the way would become open in the light of experience to bring about a more complete organic unity of Christian Churches.

While this plan is the result of conference in which members of only one denomination of non-episcopal Churches have taken part, it is comprehensive enough to include in its scope ministers of all other non-episcopal communions; and we earnestly invite their sympathetic consideration and concurrence.

SCHEDULE

FORM OF PROPOSED CANON

§ I. In case any minister who has not received episcopal ordination shall desire to be ordained by a bishop of this Church to the diaconate and to the priesthood without giving up or denying his membership or his ministry in the communion to which he belongs, the bishop of the diocese or missionary district in which he lives, with the advice and consent of the Standing Committee or the Council of Advice, may confirm and ordain him.

§ II. The minister desiring to be so ordained shall satisfy the bishop that he has resided in the United States at least one year; that he has been duly baptized with water in the name of the Trinity; that he holds the historic faith of the Church as contained in the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed; that there is no sufficient objections on grounds physical, mental, moral or spiritual; and that the ecclesiastical authority to which he is subject in the communion to which he belongs consents to such ordination.

§ III. At the time of his ordination the person to be ordained shall subscribe and make in the presence of the bishop a declaration that he believes the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God and to contain all things necessary to salvation; that in the ministration of Baptism he will unfailingly baptize with water in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; and (if he is being ordained to the priesthood) that in the celebration of the Holy Communion he will invariably use the elements of bread and wine, and will include in the service the words and acts of our Lord in the institution of the Sacrament, the Lord's Prayer, and (unless one of these creeds has been used in the service immediately preceding the celebration of the Holy Communion) the Apostles, or the Nicene Creed as the symbol of the faith of the Holy Catholic Church; that when thereto invited by the bishop of this Church having jurisdiction in the place where he lives, he will (unless unavoidably prevented) meet with such bishop for Communion and for counsel and co-operation; and that he will hold himself answerable to the bishop of this Church having jurisdiction in the place where he lives, or, if there be no such bishop, to the presiding bishop of this Church, in case he be called in question with respect to error of faith or of conduct.

§ IV. In case a person so ordained be charged with error of faith or of conduct he shall have reasonable notice of the charge and reasonable opportunity to be heard, and the procedure shall be similar to the procedure in the case of a clergyman of this Church charged with the like offense. The sentence shall always be pronounced by the bishop and shall be such as a clergyman of this Church would be liable to. It shall be certified to the ecclesiastical authority to which the defendant is responsible in any other communion. If he shall have been tried before a tribunal of the communion in which he has exercised his ministry, the judgment of such tribunal proceeding in the due exercise of its jurisdiction shall be taken as conclusive evidence of facts thereby adjudged.

§ V. A minister so ordained may officiate in a diocese or missionary district of this Church when licensed by the ecclesiastical authority thereof, but he shall not become the rector or a minister of any parish or congregation of this Church until he shall have subscribed and made to the ordinary a declaration in writing whereby he shall solemnly engage to conform to the doctrine, discipline and worship of this Church. Upon his making such declaration and being duly elected rector or minister of a parish or congregation of this Church, and complying with the canons of this Church and of the diocese or missionary district in that behalf, he shall become for all purposes a minister of this Church.

AWAKENING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—III

BY JOHN O'LONDON

“AS we look at the Church of this present time we cannot but feel that a new era is dawning. I venture to say that in spite of weaknesses and drawbacks the conscience of the Church is fast leaping into life.” Such was the declaration of the Bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Woods) in a recent speech in Convocation. He was the mover of a resolution:

That it is incumbent on the Church at the present time to do all in its power to second the efforts now being made in many quarters to inaugurate a truer fellowship both in spirit and in organization between all who are engaged in the industries of the nation and particularly in view of the critical periods which will follow the conclusion of peace.

Unquestionably during the past five or six years there has been on the part of the Church a much clearer recognition of the social message of Christianity and present day movements are full of promise. Those sturdy pioneer Christian socialists, Charles Kingsley and Frederick Denison Maurice, have never lacked disciples in the Church of England, but for many years they were few in number and isolated, and were usually subject to official ostracism which was not encouraging. But the heaven worked silently and almost imperceptibly until the whole body of the Church has been transformed. There is still much to be accomplished, but sentiments relating to social reform are now applauded in Church gatherings which less than a decade ago would have caused consternation in these proverbially staid and conservative assemblies. Towards the end of the last century, a great impetus was given to the social aspect of the Christian Gospel through the advocacy and leadership of that profound scholar and seer, Bishop Westcott, who won the hearts of the Durham miners by his practical sympathy and untiring efforts to improve the conditions of their life and work. It was Westcott, Henry Scott Holland and a few others who founded the Christian Social Union for the purpose of moulding Christian opinion on urgent questions of social reform. The objects of the Union were described as follows:

1. To claim for the Christian law the ultimate authority to rule social practice.
2. To study in common how to apply the moral truths and principles of Christianity to the social and economic difficulties of the present time.
3. To present Christ in practical life as the living Master and King, the enemy of wrong and selfishness, the power of righteousness and love.

The C. S. U. had to meet with much apathy and considerable opposition, but in a quiet way it has done a useful educational work. Through its influence many churchmen and women began to study economic problems. The duty of the Church became more clear until today a great proportion of the younger clergy and thousands of the thoughtful laity are contributing their share to the driving force which is making for a better social order.

The war has been a stern schoolmaster. It has certainly aroused the social conscience of Christian folk in this country. They are determined that the huge sacrifices which have been made shall not be in vain and that among the first fruits there must be a new and better England, where the spirit of fellowship and brotherhood shall reign, and where just and equitable dealing between employer and employed must be insisted upon. The millennium has not yet dawned—far from it, but I am quite convinced that the great throbbing social movements within the Church today will grow and extend until it will become impossible for churchmen to be indifferent to the hideous social wrongs which have been tolerated so long.

In a previous article I referred to the report, published in January, of the archbishops' committee on “Christianity and Industrial Problems.” This remarkable document is a striking proof of the new spirit which is so radiant with hope. The personnel of the committee is worthy of note. The Bishop of Winchester (Dr. Talbot) was chairman. He has for many years been one of our foremost social reformers. There were also three other bishops—Oxford, now well-known in America, Lichfield and Peterborough representing the younger members of the episcopate. It is significant that one of the leading members of the committee was the Master of Balliol College, Oxford. There were also princes of industry, parochial clergymen, and two ladies who have made a special study of the subject. The report covers 140 pages. It is remarkable for the evidence afforded of the committee's grip on the vital economic problems of the day. The recommendations and conclusions come as a trumpet call to the Church. Here are a few extracts:

It is for the Church to humanize industry by upholding the spiritual needs to which it ought to be directed and the spiritual criteria by which it ought to be judged.

It is the duty of the Church while avoiding dogmatism as to the precise methods of applying Christian principles to industry to insist that Christian ethics are binding upon economic conduct and industrial organization as upon personal conduct and domestic life.

When Christian ethics and economic practice are at variance, the latter must be adapted to the former, not the former to the latter.

The Church is a society which must insist upon the obligation of its members to maintain the distinctive standard of social ethics revealed to men in the New Testament.

It should not merely preach brotherhood; it should be a brotherhood.

It is the duty of the Church to urge that considerations of Christian morality must be applied to all social relationships.

While it is evident that industrial relations are embittered by faults of temper and lack of generosity on the part of employers, employed, and of the general public also, an examination of the facts compels the conclusion that the existing industrial system makes it exceedingly difficult to carry out the principles of Christianity. The solution of the industrial problems involves therefore not merely the improvement of individuals, but a fundamental change in the spirit of the system itself.

It is the duty of the clergy to teach the application of the Christian faith to social and industrial practice.

From the extracts I have given it will be seen that the report ushers in a new era in the history of the Church. It remains to be seen whether the Church will seize her new opportunities and re-shape the common life of the nation.

JAPAN HAS TAKEN TO THE KINDERGARTEN

Akita has the best equipped school in Japan. Here is the Gaylord Hart Mitchell kindergarten, a memorial to a little boy who died when he was just the age of the babies in the picture.

KINDERGARTENS IN JAPAN

BY JOHN WILSON WOOD, D.C.L.

JAPAN has taken to the kindergarten whole-heartedly. As a method of reaching both children and parents with the Christian message it is a decided success. There is no prettier sight in Japan than forty or fifty boys and girls from five to eight years old going through the opening exercises. They march around the magic circle, play their games and sing their songs with all the zest of American children. There may not be very much melody in the voices, but who cares so long as the ideas get into the young heads.

Every day has its Bible story besides the games and the lessons. Many a time the Bible story is carried home and repeated—perhaps not always in an accurate version—to admiring fathers and mothers and older brothers and sisters. So the children become teachers of their elders and the message of the Christ Child spreads from home to home.

Moreover, the kindergarten is a great door-opener. It is natural and easy for the Japanese teacher, accompanied often by the foreign woman, to visit the children's home. After the morning's work is done, many an afternoon each month can be spent in visiting. With fifty children on the roll the month is hardly long enough to make the round of all the homes. Calls in Japan are no hurried and perfunctory matters. An hour or an afternoon may be necessary for each. Many preliminaries must be observed. Tea and cakes must be served with due etiquette and must be consumed or carried home. The mother is glad to hear of the child's progress, but she hears more than that; she hears why the kindergarten has come to her home city. That means the direct Christian teaching.

Once a month all the mothers are asked to come together in the kindergarten room to talk over the progress of the children and other matters of child training and development. Here, too, they hear more of the Christian story from the Japanese Bible woman or the American worker. Some Japanese mothers are already Christians and tell those who are not of the happiness their faith has brought into their lives and homes.

The children come from all sorts of homes. Some of the parents make a real sacrifice to pay the tuition fee of one yen, or fifty cents, a month. There are others again who can and gladly do pay more. The daughter of the present Minister of Foreign Affairs, Viscount Uchida, formerly Japanese ambassador at Washington, told me that his daughter is a pupil at the kindergarten supervised by Miss Bessie McKim in Okubo, one of Tokyo's prosperous suburbs. At another place the daughter of the wealthiest man in the city and the son of the leading banker are pupils. A majority of the children come from what might be called middle-class homes, with, of course, a good many from poor homes.

When the child is seven or eight, the time to enter the primary school has come. This means going from a Christian environment and teaching to a government school where there can be no religious teaching and where the influence is sometimes distinctly anti-Christian. One would like to see tried the experiment of a good Christian primary school in one or two of the larger places outside of Tokyo. It might mean considerable expenditure of money at the start, especially for equipment. Later the fees might be sufficient to meet the running expenses. A member of Christ Church vestry at Sendai, one of the leading physicians of the city, is greatly interested in the Christian primary school plan and thinks that the city authorities may be willing to give the necessary land.

Meanwhile the effort is being made to hold the children who have passed through the kindergarten, especially those from the "not yet Christian" homes, by means of alumni associations. These have meetings three or four times a year. They give opportunity for emphasizing the Christian teaching given during the kindergarten course. Some of the schools now have so many graduates that the meetings have to be held in sections.

One great advantage of the kindergarten plan is that it can be adapted to the many differing conditions and carried on in all kinds of places. Akita has the best equipped school in Japan. It is the home of the Gaylord Hart Mitchell kindergarten, and the complete and attractive building is a memorial to a boy who died when he was about the kindergarten age. Who would not be glad to create such a beautiful working memorial as this? At the other end of the line there is the kindergarten at Omiya, housed in a tiny Japanese dwelling which saw its best days long ago and which rents now for three yen a month. In one of the most crowded quarters of Tokyo one can turn off from the narrow street into a little yard in which he will find a building, the lower part of which is used for the kindergarten while the catechist and his wife live above. Here any morning you can see Mrs. Yamaguchi teaching the kindergarten with her baby on her back because there is not money enough to secure a teacher, even if one were available, or money enough to employ some one to care for the child during the hours that the mother is teaching.

In the kindergarten at Urawa, supervised by Miss Nellie McKim, there is a young Japanese woman, about twenty years of age, who has really remarkable talent as an artist. On the bare white walls of the new addition to the kindergarten building there are several crayon sketches portraying the early life of the Christ Child—the manger at Bethlehem, with the bright star shining overhead; the three wise men following the star with their gifts for the new-born king; the shepherds watching their flocks by night, and not yet completed, the Annunciation. Important as is the work this young kindergartner is now doing, it is a pity that in some way she could not be given the training which would bring out to the best advantage the remarkable natural talent she is evidencing on the walls of the little kindergarten of this Japanese town.

The Training School at Sendai is doing its best to turn out more teachers, but it is not yet able to supply the demand. One of the hardest blows the District of Kyoto has received in many months was the loss of the young woman who has been supervising much of the kindergarten work and training Japanese women as teachers. She was doing in Kyoto just what she had been doing for several years in New York City. Her place has not been filled as yet. Bishop Tucker is anxiously waiting for a volunteer.

It is only twelve years since the first kindergarten was established in Japan. Now in the two Districts of Tokyo and Kyoto there are thirty-six. One need not be in Japan long to realize the truth of Bishop McKim's statement, "they are among our most valuable evangelistic agencies and there should be one at least connected with every station."

It costs $200 in addition to the tuition fees to maintain a kindergarten for a year. One earnest young woman has an inspiring vision of a kindergarten in every town, large and small, in the province in which she lives. Her plan is to make the larger towns centers where the Japanese kindergartners may live with an American worker, then each day go out in various directions to the smaller places not more than five or six miles away to conduct their kindergarten work, returning at night to the central station. It is a big plan, but it is not impracticable. To realize it would mean to evangelize thousands of homes where the Christian message has never been heard.

THE FIFTH WORD

"I THIRST"

I SUPPOSE every wretch that ever ended his life upon a cross said those words a little while before his death, just as our Lord said them. For consuming thirst was an accompaniment of this terrible death. And I suppose our Lord meant by His cry just what every victim of crucifixion meant, and nothing more. The last words He uttered were the appeal of a thirsty soul. But now it is His body that needs help. He says "I thirst" in order that the soldiers may give him the drink of small, sour wine that is kept ready for such an occasion.

On the face of it, that is the meaning of our Lord's cry. He is just voicing the commonest of all bodily needs, the need for moisture. Like the restless child, like the fever patient, like the laborer weary with his work, and the runner panting from his race, He is thirsty. But can't we find some loftier meaning for these words than this which lies upon the surface? Can't we weave some spiritual interpretation into them?

Why should we try? Does it seem unworthy that the words, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" should be followed by such common words as "I thirst"—as if the body ought not to press forwards so into company with the soul? Are we to look on that account for some other meaning in these words? Surely, if we did that, it would show we had forgotten once more that nothing is ungodlike merely because it is human. It would mean we were falling once again into that strange delusion that to do full honor to our Lord's divinity we must somehow explain away His humanity.

When God created man He gave him both a body and a soul. Those two He joined together in a union so cunning that no one has ever discovered the tie. Today the body lives and moves, evidently because it is the home of a spirit; tomorrow it is still, and we know that the spirit has fled. When the spirit goes, we say the man himself has gone; what remains is worthless clay. Nevertheless, while the spirit clings to its earthly body, that body is more than a house which the man inhabits; it is in a wonderful way at the same time both such a house, and a part of the man himself. It is certainly true that body without spirit is not a man, but it is also true that in this world spirit without body does not make a man either. You have a man only when body and spirit are joined together in that mysterious union of which I spoke. If we would have a fully developed man, both spirit and body must be strong and sound.

We are always forgetting that. More frequently, perhaps, we forget that the most perfect body cannot alone make a worthy man. We plan the diet that shall nourish the child's body with utmost care, but let him choose for himself the spiritual nourishment for his soul. Hence we have well-trained athletes without moral courage or self-control. It is a mistake to proceed as if the body were the whole man.

On the other hand, it is not uncommon to make the mistake of proceeding as if the spirit were the whole man, and the body could be neglected. One may even go so far as to think of the body as naturally evil, something that ought to be despised and maltreated.

This same mistake, of forgetting that man is by nature of dual make-up, that both body and soul are truly part of him, and honorable parts, is seen in both its forms in efforts to redeem the people of the city slums. For a time the Church acted on the principle that the only important part of a man is his spirit. The one thing needful was supposed to be to convert the wicked. That such earthy considerations as unhealthy houses, poor food, and miserable wages had anything to do with keeping these people what they were was not admitted. If these people stole, lied, fought, committed adultery, it was because they had not given their hearts to Christ. That was all there was to it. Man's spirit was all that was taken into consideration.

Then the pendulum swung the other way. It was discovered and proved that physical conditions have a direct bearing on spiritual life. Fresh air and good food were seen to be important factors in the process of turning out healthy souls. It was noticed that you could get a better response to your spiritual appeal from people who were properly clothed and fed. An empty stomach worked against a cordial reception of moral precepts.

That was a valuable discovery. It set earnest men to tearing down filthy buildings, opening up breathing spaces in the crowded districts, insisting on improved housing conditions, protesting against over-work and child labor. But in some instances the pendulum went too far. As before it had been taken for granted that man's spirit was the whole of man so now it was assumed that man's body was the whole of him. To give that body its rightful due became the whole purpose of philanthropy. It was supposed that a healthy body carried with it all that made a man a man. That, too, is a mistake.

It will not do to forget either element in human nature, either body or soul. Both have their needs; both are to be honored. If we set one in contrast to the other, there is no question which is to be given first place. Better an invalid's body carried by a noble spirit than the body of a Hercules misused by the soul of a knave! Better, every time, to risk the body's health by overtaxing it in the service of the spirit, than to preserve it at risk to the health of the soul! It is better that men should suffer and keep their self-respect, than prosper and lose it. Nevertheless, we shall only do men justice if we remember that body and soul together compose a human being.

Those two short words, "I thirst," coming immediately after our Lord's impassioned cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" remind us of that fact. He who hungered and thirsted after righteousness with His whole heart, and was filled, asked, too, like any criminal, for drink for His burning body.

FOUNDED UPON A ROCK

BY THE REV. ERNEST M. STIRES, D.D.

THE standards by which human life is judged today are Christian standards. Slowly but steadily through nineteen centuries have the victories been gained; and now we are demanding sincerity and honesty, justice and humanity, in personal affairs, in business, in politics.

It was easier for Christian ideals to win the judgment-seat in the domain of personal life; nothing else has remotely satisfied the human mind and conscience. In the realm of business it was more difficult, because of the blinding influence of selfishness and greed; yet even here we have advanced from honesty as a matter of policy to honesty for its own sake, and to profit-sharing, welfare work, better working conditions, and better homes for the workers. Much remains to be done; cold capital and radical labor delay progress; but the new partnership is bound to win, because it is just.

Still more difficult has been the struggle of Christian idealism in politics. It has not been many years since a distinguished United States senator declared that the Golden Rule and the Ten Commandments had no place in politics. He scarcely proved his contention as his state promptly removed him from his place in politics. Whatever may be the private practice of men in political life today, the principles which they publicly profess derive their meaning and power from Christianity.

Most difficult of all has been the effort of Christ to persuade His people to apply His teachings to the affairs of nation with nation. Accepting Christianity as the strongest inspiration and best possible method of personal life, they have seldom applied it to international affairs, and some have even denied that it should be so applied. Instead of just and open agreements we have had secret diplomacy, private understandings, selfish treaties carefully concealed, elaborate systems of spies, statesmen bowing low and professing the highest consideration for each other while seeking every opportunity to deceive and cheat. Fine looking structures were some of the empires, above ground, such as Germany, Austria, Russia; but they were built on the sand of pretense, not on the rock of character.

The most glorious fact in American history is that when our people came to realize that our proper place was by the side of our brothers of France, Belgium and England it was not so much our wrath at submarine murder, or our fear of future invasion, as it was the certainty that the ideals upon which we are founded were at stake; that it was a finish fight between barbarism and Christianity. The mothers knew, and their sons, what high faith inspired them, and what was saved on the line that held from Flanders to the Argonne, that held and never broke, that advanced and conquered.

We have had a league of nations, fighting for justice, liberty, humanity. A glorious victory has been gained, a victory which challenges the Allies to continue and enlarge their league, basing it upon the principles for which they fought. There is no escape from such a challenge. Let us confess that nations are bound by the same principles which must control the individual. Let us insist that henceforth international affairs—the new temple of humanity—be founded upon the rock of reality, of fair and open dealing, of mutual respect for rights and duties.

For all this there is general agreement, and yet the present effort to codify the agreement has resulted in widespread disappointment, fear and resentment. Was this caused by the details of the program? Let us say rather by the lack of sufficient and definite details. The United States is considering the most momentous document since the adoption of the Constitution. In its present form it seriously—perhaps dangerously—affects the Constitution. Possibly the time has come when we may safely consent to a certain limitation of our freedom in a federation of nations, but we must be reasonably convinced of this. We must be thoughtful, not impulsive; men of vision, not visionaries; and the ultimate constitution of the League of Nations should command that unanimous and wholehearted approval without which it would be the great war's final contribution to the art of camouflage.

Does the present draft imperil the Monroe Doctrine, or, on the contrary, does it apply that doctrine everywhere? Mr. Taft says that Europe is "entirely willing to leave to the United States and other American nations the policing of the Western Hemisphere until such time as any American powers shall seek the assistance of European powers to meet emergencies on this side of the ocean." This is definite; and if it is the view of the peace conference it should appear in the amended draft. Are the members of the league to be left free in the settlement of their domestic affairs, for example, America in her immigration problem, and England in her Irish problem? If so, it should be affirmed in language incapable of misconstruction. These and other critical questions must be honestly answered and clearly determined in the final draft of the League of Nations. We must know our rights and obligations. We have not forgotten the efforts of Alexander Hamilton to persuade the states definitely to surrender the right to secede; we have not forgotten his warning that the failure to settle the question in peace when the Constitution was up for adoption would certainly lead to a settlement in war at some future time.

For every contract causing trouble through inherent injustice there are a hundred which cause trouble through inherent vagueness. Never in human history has a contract been prepared so vitally affecting every human being and every foot of ground upon this planet. Shall its obvious purpose control the unruly wills of selfish men, or shall its vagueness encourage some final attempts at brigandage before we have recovered our sober senses?

Lest you think that I fail properly to value idealism let me say that I wish that the draft of the League of Nations possessed more of it. The purpose is idealistic, but the language is that of a cold materialism. Surely there is opportunity in the preamble for the expression of a single emotion growing out of the greatest conflict of all time, and contemplating the opportunity of perpetuating by reason and not by war the principles for which civilization poured out its treasures of manhood and substance. No, the idealism of the league should be as clearly expressed as that of the Golden Rule, and the articles which follow should be as explicit as the Ten Commandments.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

CHURCH PUBLICITY WILL BE DISCUSSED AT CONVENTION

Members of Kansas Diocesan Bureau Will Lead Discussion

TOPEKA, MASS.—The Bureau for Church Publicity and Advertising of the Diocese of Kansas has been given an hour on the program of the General Convention this year in which to present their work. The Rev. J. H. Harvey, of Pittsburg, will open the discussion, Mr. Charles Haynes of Emporia, will speak on "Church Advertising"; the Rev. Chester Wood, Topeka, on "Diocesan Publicity;" Mr. Arthur J. Carruth, managing editor of the Topeka State Journal on "Church News and the Local Paper." All clergy and others who have done any church advertising are asked to bring an exhibit of their work, and to tell about results obtained.

CRITICIZES RECTOR'S PLEA FOR LEAGUE OF CHURCHES

Baptist Clergyman Says "Practice What You Preach"

WATERTOWN, NEW YORK.—Speaking to a large congregation of men on a recent Sunday afternoon in Trinity Church here, the rector, the Rev. Francis W. Eason, advocated the creation of a league of churches. He said, "What better thing could happen than to create a league of churches to go side by side with a league of nations. If the churches do not come together they deserve to die, for they are of no service in the community."

On the following Sunday the pastor of the First Baptist Church replied with sharp criticism of the Rev. Mr. Eason's position, especially in regard to the league of churches, of which he said, "That is a fine idea and would have great weight if we would only reflect upon the fact that the man who proposed it is the only one of the Protestant ministers who does not practice it. We have an association of the ministers in Watertown working together in a fine brotherly way for the moral and spiritual good of the city and he is the only one who is not in. We can hope for church unity when all Republicans, Democrats, and Socialists, become one great undivided party. But they can all be Americans, even though they define the term to suit themselves. We can all be Christians, but I think we will still define what we mean by the word."

Dr. Morgan to Return Here

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan is to be in America again. The Bible Teachers' Training School has just received a cablegram from Dr. W. W. White, the president, who is now in Europe, stating that Dr. Morgan would join the staff of the school in October. This date marks the opening of the twentieth year of the school's history. The announcement of the details of Dr. Morgan's work awaits fuller advices by mail.

The same cablegram also brings word that Professor T. R. Glover, of St. John's College, Cambridge, a writer and lecturer of wide reputation in both Great Britain and America, will be in this country to participate in the work of the school in July and August next.

As an evidence of the increasing popularity of summer courses of study, it may be added that the regular summer term of the Bible Teachers' Training School, begun in 1912 as an experiment, has proved so successful that this year it is extended to ten weeks, June 18 to August 26, and a regular schedule of work has been prepared.

ANOTHER CROOK AT WORK AMONG CHURCH CLERGY

Rectors in Middle West Are Victims of New Faker

From the Rev. John E. Sulger, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Terre Haute, Indiana, comes the following warning:

"The clergy are warned to be on their guard against a well-groomed, handsome man, an agreeable talker, with intellectual face, smooth-shaven, wearing horn-rimmed glasses, with iron gray hair approaching white, about 50 years old, who gave his name to the undersigned as 'Fred Marion' of 266 Summit Avenue, Portland, Oregon. He claims an intimate acquaintance with the Rev. Walter E. Bentley of the Actors' Alliance, and Mr. Alexander M. Hadden of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and other well-known clergymen and laymen of the Church. He passes as an actor in hard luck at one time; at another, as a promoter, etc. He stops at the best hotels and travels in Pullmans. He is evidently well educated and is thoroughly familiar with both East and West. His usual scheme is to pass worthless checks.

"Notify the police of his presence, and have them communicate with the authorities of Canton, Ohio, or of Terre Haute, Indiana."

EPISCOPAL SERVICE HELD IN CHRISTIAN CHURCH

AMARILLO, TEXAS.—On a recent Sunday evening, at the invitation of the officers of the First Christian Church of Amarillo, whose minister, the Rev. Ernest C. Mobley, is in Y. M. C. A. service in Europe, the rector, choir and congregation of St. Andrew's Church held a special musical and preaching service with the pastorless flock in their own building, having had the four regular services of the day in the parish church. The entire service was rendered out of the Christian Church Hymn Book, except the declaration of absolution and the closing prayers. The first eleven verses of the fifty-first Psalm were said kneeling as a general confession, followed by the absolution. The building, which is a downtown church and a much used community center, was well filled and the co-operation in the service was complete.

WINDOW SHOPPERS PERIL TO RELIGION IN THIS DAY

Bishop Fiske Condemns Those Who Put Fringe for Fabric

UTICA, NEW YORK.—In a sermon on "The Reality of Christianity," preached to a large congregation at Calvary Church here, Bishop Fiske confessed to two pet aversions. First, the woman who at holiday time in presenting him a little book which tells how some shoemaker or fisherman converted the community in which he lived, remarks, "That is my idea of real Christianity," when she knows, or ought to know, that I know that she has no intention of doing any such thing."

And secondly he objects to the man who says that he can worship God as well under the blue sky as within the four walls of a Church. He told how he had said to such a man, "Yes, do you?" and discovered that it made him quite angry. "I knew," said the Bishop, "that he didn't, because he was playing golf. I don't suppose that golf is a game that leads the thoughts particularly to God."

The great peril of modern religion in the opinion of Bishop Fiske, is that most persons are window shoppers. They admire the goods in the window; they go into the store, look things over, handle them and praise them, but never buy. The present holds much opportunity for the nation to prove that all of the fine ideals expressed by this country at the time of its entry into the war are to be backed by solid reality.

DR. LOCKE, BRISTOL RECTOR FOR FIFTY YEARS, DIES

BRISTOL, RHODE ISLAND.—The Rev. George Lyman Locke, D.D., since 1867 rector of St. Michael's Church here, died on Sunday, March 23, in his eighty-fourth year. Dr. Locke was born in Boston on August 28, 1835. He graduated from Harvard in the class of 1859 with the bachelor's degree and three years later took his master's degree. Brown University conferred the degree of doctor of divinity upon him in 1893. Dr. Locke was ordained to the diaconate in 1863 and to the priesthood in 1865 by Bishop Eastburn. He served as assistant minister at Grace Church, Boston, and later at Trinity Church. In 1867 he became rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol.

Dr. Locke was one of the best known and best loved citizens in the State of Rhode Island. He was known throughout the Church and was the close friend of many of the ecclesiastical leaders of the past half century. The late Dr. Huntington and Dr. Locke were lifelong friends. The funeral will be held at St. Michael's Church on Wednesday, March 26, at 2:30 p. m.

PROGRAM FOR TRIENNIAL MAPPED OUT BY COMMITTEE

Woman's Auxiliary in Detroit Will Cooperate with Other Organizations

The program committee for the triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to be held next October in Detroit at the time of General Convention, has made its second report to the Woman's Auxiliary, with the recommendation that the further shaping of the program, together with the appointment of leaders, be turned over to Miss Lindley, general secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. Suggestions in regard to the program itself and to the leaders for classes and conferences may be sent to Miss Corey, the secretary of the committee, at 808 Washington Street, Brookline, Massachusetts, up to April 20.

The 1919 triennial promises to be one of great importance in the readjustment of the Woman's Auxiliary. The national constitution, which has been under discussion since the 1916 triennial, will be presented. The question as to whether the Woman's Auxiliary desires representation upon the Board of Missions will be discussed. A definite policy for the disposal of the United Offering fund will be under consideration. The "New Junior Plan" will be submitted for final decision. Accordingly the triennial and its work is strongly recommended to the prayers of the members of the Auxiliary, and the diocese and parish branches are urged to give consideration to these questions and to instruct their delegates accordingly.

"The spirit of service for Christ's sake" is to be the dominating thought of the triennial. Close cooperation with other organizations of women meeting in Detroit at the same time is recommended as of primary importance, and Miss Lindley is requested to ascertain the dates of meetings of other societies that conflict may be avoided so far as possible. Large opportunity for spiritual emphasis is urged. Prayers in preparation for the triennial will be drawn up this spring for the use of the Auxiliary. During the triennial the usual special services will be arranged, there will be corporate Communion services for all study classes, the noonday intercessions will be under the guidance of specially appointed chaplains and prayer groups in the various hotels and homes will be encouraged.

Much criticism has attached to the method of conducting the business meetings. This will be overcome at Detroit, so far as the committee is able, by a carefully worked out order of business. In response to suggestions made, a three-year policy is to be mapped out as well as a definite policy in regard to the spending of the United Offering. The question here is whether the United Offering is to go for salaries, the logical end of which policy is the supporting of the women's work by the Woman's Auxiliary, or whether the United Offering is a special fund for the training of women workers, for the care of the sick and disabled, and for great constructive forward work.

Conferences and study classes will be provided. Special care will be taken to guard against conflict between classes in missions and in education, and the Junior Auxiliary Classes will be planned in direct collaboration with the General Board of Religious Education. The Junior Auxiliary will also have a separate program, which, of course, in part will be in combination with the Woman's Auxiliary. Finally, large social affairs are discouraged, and afternoon teas, with opportunities for the delegates to meet the missionaries, are to be the order of the day.

PARISHES SHOULD PAY FOR SUMMER SCHOOL DELEGATES

RACINE, WISCONSIN.—The Board of Missions of the Diocese of Western Michigan at its last meeting appropriated $35.00 "to pay the expenses of a lay representative, man or woman, who shall be chosen by the archdeacon to attend the Racine Conference, with the expectation that when he or she returns, the inspiration of the conference in matter and method shall be carried to some of the weaker places of the diocese to help and to encourage them. This will be done in co-operation with the archdeacon."

The diocese sent such a representative last year and gained considerable help in certain parishes and missions where the delegate visited during the succeeding months with the information and inspiration she had received. To make the conference sessions of the greatest possible benefit, its officers urge dioceses and parishes to select representative lay workers, to pay part or all of their expenses, and to arrange for their passing on at home the fruits of the meetings. The experience and study of the leaders will thus find a wide circle of influence. Choir directors, Sunday School teachers, and missionary helpers, could profitably be chosen for such representation.

The conference will be held on the beautiful grounds of Racine College from July 8 to 17. The complete program will appear later. The Rev. C. H. Young of Chicago is chairman of the program committee.

Bishop Lawrence Returns Home

AIKEN, SOUTH CAROLINA.—Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, who has been here for some weeks on account of ill-health returned to Boston, March 18. The bishop is much improved physically by reason of the rest and the mild climate of Aiken.

Bishop Lawrence intends to begin his regular visitations at once.

Elfric Empringham Located

For many months, no word was received from Elfric Empringham, one of the young sons of the Rev. Dr. James Empringham, General Superintendent of the Church Temperance Society. Elfric was last heard from about twelve days before the armistice was signed, when he reported that he was with the 307th Infantry, in the front line trenches.

Recent news has now come to the effect that Elfric was gassed in the Argonne drive and is now convalescing in a French hospital, the location of which is not given.

ACUTE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM FOR CHAPLAINS

Bishop Perry Says They Sometimes Walked 16 Miles to Villages

The emergency need of facilities for the transportation of chaplains with our army in France and Germany came to light in the report of Major James De Wolf Perry, Jr., just returned from France, presented to the General War-Time Commission of the Churches at the meeting of the executive committee, Wednesday, March 5.

Bishop Perry stated that the condition which most impeded the work of the chaplains abroad throughout the whole period of the war down to the present time was the absence of adequate transportation. He said this was true even of the army as well as of the chaplains, but that the army, while the drive on the German line was at its height, had 40 per cent of the necessary transportation facilities for its work, while the chaplains never had more than 5 per cent for their work. There were times when a chaplain would have to go on foot sixteen miles or more from village to village in order to render a minimum day's service to the three or four units which depended upon him.

The need is even greater now than it was during the period of the war. As the lines have pushed forward to occupy the German border, the number of detached units is greater and the distance between them increased. Indeed, the immediate need of this service is so urgent as to have warranted the purchase of ten cars for the chaplains on the field, with the confident expectation that the churches through their war-time commissions in this country would supply the necessary funds.

The executive committee of the General War-Time Commission is, therefore, calling upon the denominational commissions to meet this emergency by contributing to this fund.

"There ought to be no question about the possibility of raising this money," says the committee, "especially in the light of the emphasis laid upon such needs in the recent appeal for funds through the Interchurch Emergency Campaign."

Further detailed information on this subject may be secured from Mr. H. H. Tryon, assistant secretary of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, 105 East 22nd street, New York City. Mr. Tryon will receive gifts from both denominational commissions and individuals for the Chaplains' Emergency Transportation Fund.

Bishop Tuttle Recovers Watch Chain

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The watch chain and other adornments which were stolen from the person of Bishop Tuttle when he was held up by highwaymen in St. Louis the first of the year have been recovered. Men engaged in putting tar on the roof of a laundry building on the edge of the town picked them up and rubbed off the soot and grime and found the bishop's name on them. The gold watch which was stolen at the same time had no name on it by which it could be identified, and no trace of it has yet been found.

BISHOPS AND CLERGY ASK SUPPORT FOR LEAGUE

Pass Resolutions Urging Its Importance on Pennsylvania Senators

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—At a meeting of the bishops and Clerical Brotherhood, to the number of perhaps one hundred, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

AND WHEREAS: We the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania are deeply concerned to have the United States take its proper place among the great powers ratifying the league, not only for the safety, honor and welfare of America, but as well for the peace, prosperity and progress of mankind;

Therefore be it Resolved: That we do hereby respectfully urge our Senators to further the formation of the league on the general basis of the proposed constitution, with due allowance for necessary amendments.

(ATTEST:) LOUIS C. WASHBURN.
Mover of the Resolution, and Rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia.

ANOTHER PARISH ADOPTS DEMOCRATIC PEW SYSTEM

MACON, GEORGIA.—The pews in Christ Church here have been made free. At a congregational meeting it was decided to abolish the pew rent system, and the rector and vestry were requested to effect the change as soon as they obtained assurance of sufficient additional income through subscriptions in place of pew rents to make the change possible and as soon as they received the assent of three fourths of the pew renters. Both of these conditions have been complied with, and on March 13 the vestry formally declared all the pews free.

PREACHES ON SPIRITUAL EFFECTS OF THE WAR

Basing what he had to say on facts gleaned from reading thousands of letters from the front, the Rev. Henry Bradford Washburn, D.D., executive secretary of the War Commission, preached last Sunday at St. James' Church on the spiritual effect of the war. He said that the effect of their experience had been different with different men. While some, whose spiritual nature was already deep were further deepened by the war, others already shallow were untouched; some whose religious life had been strong before going into the trenches lost their faith, and still others gained a religious experience which will be with them through their lives. Some who had been thoughtful became thoughtless and some thoughtless men became thoughtful as the result of the same experiences. Whatever the results in France have been, the results for us at home can be summarized under three heads. In the first place there is a definite responsibility upon the friends at home, and especially upon the spiritual directors of the homecoming men to instruct them in the fundamentals of the Christian faith. In the second place the value of the conference has been demonstrated. The men are eager to talk upon religious subjects, and if the clergy, as the authorized spokesmen of the Church, would open up the subject they would find a ready reception on the part of the men. Third, emphasis has been thrown upon the Holy Communion as the central service of the Church, the service which has proved most popular with the men in the trenches and the service from which they gain the most help.

WAR CAUSES FOUNDING OF CHURCH FEDERATION

Important Movement in Religious Life of Baltimore Launched

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—The Federation of Churches which was urged upon the diocesan convention in January is now an accomplished fact and churchmen are taking an active part in it. It was organized at a great meeting held at the Lyric Opera House, March 18, by the votes of delegates from 162 congregations representing twenty-one denominations of Christians. General J. M. T. Finney, who has just returned from twenty months of distinguished service at the head of the U. S. Medical Corps in France, was unanimously elected as president and Judge Henry D. Harlan of Emmanuel Church vice president. The Rev. Dr. Hugh Birchhead was chosen as a member of the executive committee. An executive secretary will soon be appointed.

The formation of the federation is an epoch-making event in the religious development of Baltimore and is the greatest movement towards Christian unity ever made here. The primary object of the federation is not to bring about doctrinal agreement, desirable as that is, but to enable the Christian forces of the city to present a united front to the colossal religious, social, and industrial problems arising out of the war. It is intended to save the waste of energy, time, and money entailed by divided effort and to accomplish results unattainable by individual initiative.

The Lyric was packed by a great and representative audience in which the men predominated. An inspiring address was made by Dr. Robert E. Speer of New York, who urged that the effect of the war has been to leave the Church in a position of power and the nation with deepened convictions and strengthened faith in God. Peace is opening up a vista of greater responsibility which nothing but a solid front will be able to face.

Colonel Kingsbury Dies

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—Colonel I. F. Kingsbury died here at the home of his son on March 16 in his seventy-eighth year. Colonel Kingsbury was for many years senior warden of the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, under the rectorship of the late Professor Nash. Mrs. V. G. Simkhovitch, of Greenwich House, New York, is the daughter of the late Colonel Kingsbury.

Large Distribution of Bibles

During the past week the New York Bible Society has sent out more than 40,000 Testaments to be given to our returning soldiers and sailors. This is the largest number distributed by the Society in so short a time. The demands from the hospitals are most urgent where the weary hours often drag along very slowly. The distribution of the Testaments is made through more than half a hundred chaplains through the workers of the Y. M. C. A. and the Salvation Army, as well as through volunteer workers in the canteens and the churches.

PLANS FOR N. Y. CAMPAIGN ARE NOW WELL UNDER WAY

Meeting Reveals Enthusiasm for Church's Greatest Campaign

On Monday evening last there was held at St. Thomas's Church, New York, one of the most important meetings that have taken place in the interest of the great diocesan-wide Every Name Campaign which is to be conducted simultaneously in the Diocese of New York in November.

It was evident at the meeting that the plans for the campaign were well matured, and that the leading men of the diocese have awakened to the fact that it is to be the greatest move along spiritual lines ever undertaken by the Church.

Reports from all parts of the diocese, the remarkable interest shown at the district meetings already held, the letters pouring into the central office from individual clergymen and laymen, all show an enthusiasm which gives an emphatic assurance of an amazing success when the time for the campaign arrives.

Dr. Stires made a stirring plea for keeping the emphasis of the campaign where he said it ought properly to be—on the spiritual side rather than on the financial side. "The purpose of the campaign," he said, "is supremely spiritual. The financial side of the campaign should be merely incidental."

The importance of the undertaking could not be overestimated. "What happened in 1918 compelled this campaign in 1919," said Dr. Stires. He felt that it was fortunate that the campaign had not been launched last year, and that, had the campaign taken place at that time, it would perhaps be necessary to do it over again now.

This importance which he attaches to the plan is due primarily to the tremendous responsibility resting on the Church at this time of reconstruction. What our boys have done in France, what they have suffered there, presses upon us the obligation to bring home to every individual in the Church his responsibility for service through the Church during the supremely important years lying just ahead. In this Every Name Campaign Dr. Stires sees the most important movement inaugurated in the Diocese of New York for accomplishing this end.

Will Speak for War Commission

GREAT LAKES, ILLINOIS.—Beginning April 1 the Rev. Bernard I. Bell, formerly dean of the cathedral in Fond du Lac, and for eighteen months representative of the Episcopal Church at Great Lakes Naval Training Station and director of all chaplains' work in the detention section of that camp, will leave the work there and devote the months of April and May to delivering addresses, under the direction of the War Commission, on "The Church's Religious Task During Days of Readjustment" at diocesan conventions and other assemblies of churchmen. The work at Great Lakes will be continued, under the joint supervision of the Rev. Harry Ruth and the Rev. John Wilkins, who have been assisting Dean Bell there for several months. Mail concerning work at the station should hereafter be addressed to the Rev. Harry Ruth, Building 900, Great Lakes. Mail on other subjects, intended for Mr. Bell, should be sent in care of the Episcopal War Commission, 14 Wall Street, New York City.

Dr. Peabody's Daughter Married

GROTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Dr. Peabody's daughter, Rose Saltonstall Peabody, was married here in the school chapel last week to Captain William Barclay Parsons, Jr. Captain Parsons is the son of Colonel Parsons, whose brilliant record in France with the Engineers is well known. Colonel Parsons is a vestryman of Trinity Church, New York.

Captain Parsons and his bride recently returned from France, where they were cited for courage under fire by General Pershing, having been in service since May, 1917. Dr. Parsons was a member of the Presbyterian Hospital Unit and served with the British until May, 1918, when he was appointed one of the original staff of surgeons of United States Mobile Hospital No. 2, which served with the First Army in the Marne and Argonne, and went into Germany with the Army of Occupation. His bride was the Red Cross representative assigned to this unit.

NEW YORK

Lenten Services and Conferences.—

The rector of St. Thomas's Church, the Rev. Dr. Stires, preaches every afternoon in Lent at the afternoon service in his church. He also preaches both morning and afternoon on Sunday. There are few city rectors so unsparing of themselves in the matter of preaching. At Trinity Chapel, of which the Rev. J. W. Sutton is vicar, there is a congregational conference on Monday afternoons at which the life and the work of the chapel is discussed by those who are able to attend. The Wednesday afternoon teacher training class at St. James' Church is open to teachers outside of the parish upon payment of a small tuition fee. Dr. Boynton who has been teaching the class, sailed unexpectedly for the near East last Friday with a delegation representing the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee. Dr. Coe, of Union Seminary, has taken Dr. Boynton's place. The special preachers at the Sunday evening services during Lent at the Church of the Holy Apostles are:—March 9, the Rev. Melville K. Bailey; March 16, the Rev. Kenneth R. Buchanan; March 23, the Rev. H. G. Willis; March 30, the Rev. Arthur H. Judge; April 6, the Rev. Charles B. Scovil; April 13, the Rev. H. Percy Silver. And on Wednesday evenings, March 19, (hall) stereopticon, "How Life Begins," Mrs. Woodallen Chapman; March 26, Confirmation (church), the bishop; April 2 (hall), rector; April 9 and April 16, (hall), the Rev. Henry T. Schudder, D.D.

Dvorák's Requiem at the Cathedral.—

Dvorák's Requiem will be sung at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine next Sunday evening (March 30), under the direction of Dr. Farrow. The choir will be accompanied by fifty members of the New York Symphony Society. This service will be held in memory of the soldiers and sailors who have fallen in the war.

Altar Flowers Endowed.—A thousand dollar bond has been given by Mr. William S. Hawk to the Altar Chapter of Zion and St. Timothy's Church in memory of his daughter, Miss Edith O. Hawk. The donor of this gift has expressed the hope that the fund so created would be added to from time to time, so that eventually the yearly income would be sufficient to insure the furnishing of flowers for the altar, irrespective of any appeals that have hitherto been made.

A second thousand dollar Liberty Bond has been given to the society in memory of James Herman Aldrich. The income will provide flowers for Christmas and the surplus will be used for Christmas greens. Another bond in memory of Miss Hawk has been given to the parish branch of the Church Periodical Club.

The Rev. H. M. Barbour Retires.—The Rev. Dr. Henry M. Barbour, rector of the Church of the Beloved Disciple, has given his resignation, to take effect on February 1, 1920, when he will have completed twenty-five years in his present position. He is at that time to be made rector emeritus.

Patriotic Societies Take Tables.—I have already mentioned the plans some of the ladies of the diocese are making for a conference and luncheon at the Hotel Biltmore on April 7, at which time they hope to enlist many war workers in hospital and social service work which is being done under the auspices of the Church. The patriotic societies in the city are taking tables for this luncheon which promises to be of the greatest interest. Thus far the Colonial Dames, the British War Relief, the Children of the Frontier, the National League for Women's Service, the Woman's Temperance Union, the Southern Patriotic Society and the St. Thomas' branch of the Red Cross have taken tables.

St. Luke's Home Faces Deficit.—St. Luke's Home for Aged Gentlewomen, one of the best known and best managed church institutions in the city, is facing a very serious deficit due to the great increase in all expenses during the past year; for example, the difference between the coal item last year and this year is $3,900. In consequence of this the trustees are trying to raise $14,900. Appeals are being made in the city parishes, but although the first two appeals showed encouraging results, the following appeals ran into the Income Tax and returns decreased. New subscribers are greatly needed if the home is to continue its excellent work. Those who know the six storey building on upper Broadway, its comfortable and pleasant atmosphere and the eighty-two women who live there, appreciate what a tragedy it would be if the churchpeople of the diocese do not respond to the appeal.

Church Mission of Help.—The Church Mission of Help has just published its eighth annual report, showing the growth and work of the society during the past year. During 1918, 762 girls were cared for, an increase of 71 per cent. A Brooklyn visitor has been added to the staff and a colored visitor in the night court. The war work carried on in Highlands, New Jersey, last year will be continued. The annual service of the society was held at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin on Sunday. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church, was the preacher, and intercessions for the work were made by the Rev. William T. Manning, president.

TEXAS

The Bishop Preaches Again.—Bishop Kinsolving was able to preach in All Saints' Church, Austin, last Sunday morning. He seems to be improving slowly and the whole diocese is grateful to God that a measure of strength is being granted our beloved diocesan.

A Rector for Calvert and Hearne.—The bishop coadjutor visited Hearne last Wednesday evening. The congregation remained for a business meeting at the conclusion of the service—when the bishop in his inspiring way took up the question of placing a rector in that field, Calvert and Hearne. The rector is to live at Calvert where there is a rectory and serve both parishes, which are only nine miles apart. A young chaplain in the army serving Ellington Field has been called.

Groesbeck.—The archdeacon celebrated the Holy Communion and preached on Sunday, March 6, at Groesbeck. It rained the best part of Saturday night. Although that grand old man, Mr. M. H. Clark, is ill and although he is over eighty years of age, he attended the service. He is an inspiring soldier of the Cross and an example to the whole community. The church at Groesbeck has large possibilities, and is to be united to the Calvert-Hearne belt.

A Lent Pledge.—Bishop Quinn has sent out cards all over the diocese containing a pledge for the signer to make his Communion during Lent, to attend one service of the church on each Sunday, to do some definite work for the King and Kingdom during the year, and to pledge "daily prayer for God's guidance in His Church." Great good will undoubtedly result from this effort.

Bishop Quinn to Hold Mission.—Bishop Quinn is to hold a mission in Christ Church Temple beginning about March 17 and lasting a week or ten days. The rector, the Rev. H. E. Philips, and his congregation are looking forward to lasting and beneficial results.

ERIE

Men's Club Dinner.—The Men's Club of the Cathedral of St. Paul recently gave the first of their post-war dinners, inviting various civic organizations to send representatives to join them. This was the most enthusiastic and delightful gathering the men have had. Through the kindness of one of our United States senators the national authorities sent a speaker from the United States Employment Bureau, Washington, Mr. Negley, a lawyer and a trained speaker of much ability. He was listened to with great attention as he developed his theme, one of the most important problems of the day, "The Government's Plan for the Returned Soldier."

Vice Campaign.—The War Department, assisted by the state police, quietly and efficiently descended upon Erie Saturday night, March 1, and did some work the local authorities had failed to do. This fitted in with the campaign against the social evil which had been started Sunday, February 23, when this topic had formed the theme for the sermon at the cathedral and in other churches. While the War Department's action amazed the mayor and others who were satisfied with conditions, the attempt to get rid of these dreadfully contagious diseases (which, as Bishop Lawrence says, are the worst of man killers) has the hearty sympathy of every minister of the Gospel in Erie.

Lenten Services.—The lenten services at the cathedral are being very well attended this year. The splendid weather has something to do with this, but there is also a feeling of earnestness and zeal and encouragement that has permeated every organization, so the Wednesday night services have had an average of 150 persons present; and the daily services never average less than 50.

The special preachers on Wednesday evenings are:

March 26, The Rev. Robert W. Woodrooffe, Emmanuel Church, Cleveland, Ohio; April 2, The Rev. Edward S. Travers, D.D., Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, April 9, The Rev. David L. Ferris, Christ Church, Rochester, New York.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Remarkable Work for Soldiers.—During the last two years St. Peter's Church has done a splendid work amongst the men in the navy. Over 14,000 men have been welcomed by the church or its members.

The rector receives constantly from men overseas letters which rejoice his heart and make him feel that his work has not been in vain.

On Sunday, March 2, a service of dedication was held at which various memorials were dedicated. The special preacher for the occasion was the Rev. D. W. Howard, D.D., rector of St. Luke's Church, who also said the prayers of dedication. There was a large congregation present.

CHICAGO

Clergy Round Table Has Lunch.—The Clergy Round Table, which includes all the clergy in and about the city, started a new plan on Monday, March 17, by meeting for lunch at the Stevens Building Restaurant instead of in the middle of the morning at the Church Club rooms as heretofore. Bishop Fiske, who was the noon-day speaker, was the guest of honor at the luncheon, and gave a short talk. It is planned to have these lunches regularly on alternate Mondays.

Ordination at Christ Church, Woodlawn.—On Sunday, March 16, Bishop Griswold held an ordination at Christ Church, Woodlawn. The Rev. Herbert H. Parkinson, the Rev. Thomas L. Parker, and the Rev. Norman B. Quigg were ordained to the priesthood, and Mr. Alfred H. du Domaine was ordained to the diaconate. Bishop Wise of Kansas assisted in the laying on of hands, and the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis of the Western Theological Seminary was the preacher. The three newly ordained priests will remain in their former parishes, Mr. Parker at the Holy Nativity, Longwood, Mr. Parkinson at St. Ambrose, Chicago Heights, and Mr. Quigg at the Atonement, Edgewater. Mr. du Domaine will continue at the Western Seminary and at St. Mark's Church, Evanston, for the rest of the year.

Dr. Stewart Trains Speakers.—Dr. Stewart, of St. Lukes Church, Evanston, is training the speakers for the Victory Loan in Chicago and outlying districts. For several weeks he has been addressing large groups of the speakers, together with chairmen and vice chairmen of wards in Chicago. His addresses have been printed and distributed by the Speakers' Bureau as suggestions to speakers in the campaign. He is at present in the east for three weeks, filling engagements as lenten noon-day speaker in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore.

Community Services in Rogers Park.—The Rev. Henry N. Hyde, rector of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Rogers Park, is co-operating in a series of community services that are being held at the various churches in Rogers Park on ten successive evenings, beginning Sunday, March 23. The services are at the different churches, the minister of each church preaching twice, but never at his own church. The Rogers Park churches are also getting out a joint paper which is being sent each week to all the homes in Rogers Park. The paper tells something about the services and plans of the six churches that are co-operating, and urges that everyone in Rogers Park identify himself with one of the six.

LOS ANGELES

An Honorary Luncheon.—All Saints' Parish House in Pasadena was the scene on March 3 of a very delightful luncheon tendered by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Learned, to the Clericus and to Bishop Johnson as guest of honor, in commemoration of the twenty-third anniversary of the bishop's consecration. More than fifty of the clergy were present. Things new and old were brought out of mental treasures by the after-dinner speakers, many of whom asked for the privilege of speaking that they might voice their affection for the bishop and their profound appreciation of his character and work. The Rev. J. D. H. Browne spoke of the earliest days of the Church in Southern California and of the primary convention which elected Bishop Johnson. The Rev. Henderson Judd, the bishop's chaplain, expressed great pleasure in the fact that he counted the votes at the primary convention, not that the result was in any way affected thereby but that it is naturally a matter of satisfaction to have been so associated with the beginnings of this happy episcopate. The Rev. W. H. Wotton referred to the time when he was examined for orders by "Dr. Johnson," then an examining chaplain in an eastern diocese. The Rev. Alfred Fletcher spoke from the standpoint of one who has been associated with the diocese for many years, first as assistant secretary then as secretary of convention. In 1896, he said, there were thirty-seven clergymen canonically resident in the diocese and twenty-seven votes were cast in the Convention; in 1919 there are 107 clergymen canonically resident. In 1896 there were fifteen parishes and missions; now there are forty-two parishes and fifty-six missions, or a total of ninety-eight.

At the conclusion of the luncheon the bishop spoke feelingly of his relationship with the men of the diocese, and then in a short but very impressive address spoke of the opportunities and responsibilities of the Church in this day of changed conditions, deprecating the prevalence of an individualistic conception of the mission of the Church which bases its appeal upon the offer of certain personal advantages and security from future perils, and pointing out that if the Church is to engage the interest of the people of this day, and especially of the men returning from the war, it must appeal to them on the lines of idealism and summon them to a program of service and constructive effort for human betterment.

New Diocesan Home Is Building.—On March 6, ground was broken at Eighth Street and San Vincente Boulevard, Santa Monica, for the new "Diocesan Home for the Aged" which Mrs. George W. Da Cunha will build as a memorial for her husband, George W. Da Cunha, formerly a well known architect of New York City. The home will be open to men and women sixty-five or more years of age on the payment of an entrance fee of $500. No requirement as to creed or church relationship is made but the home is organized and incorporated as an institution of the diocese.

LONG ISLAND

Diocesan Resolutions.—Long Island diocesan resolutions for 1919 are: "1. To raise our diocesan missionary apportionments at once and to seek ways of reaching more people in our midst with the Gospel of the Prince of Peace. 2. To raise before May 20, $1,000,000 for our church charity work in commemoration of the golden jubilee of the diocese, and as a thank-offering to Almighty God for the blessings of a victorious peace. 3. To make the fifty-first year of our diocesan life memorable by giving at least $68,458, (our diocesan apportionment) to the Board of Missions for its general work.

St. Ann's Apportionment.—The people of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, with their rector, the Rev. G. A. Oldham, are rejoicing in the fact that their whole apportionment is pledged.

Three-Hour Service.—In St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, the Rev. Andrew C. Wilson, rector, the three-hour service on Good Friday, will be conducted by the Rev. Frank Gavin of the Order of St. John the Evangelist.

Bishop Howden Speaks.—Bishop Howden of New Mexico was the speaker at the monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, and made a splendid appeal for the Indians under his jurisdiction.

Memorial Service Held.—A beautiful memorial service was held Sunday afternoon, March 16, at the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, for Private Amherst W. Meeker, of Company L, 107th N. Y. Infantry, 27th Division, who was killed during the attack on the Hindenburg line, September 29, 1918. A short eulogy was delivered by the rector, the Rev. St. Clair Hester.

Syrian Evening.—The fourth service in the special course on Allied Nations was held Sunday evening, March 16, at the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. Dr. T. J. Lacey, the rector, spoke on "Our Syrian Neighbors and their Church." Several Syrian societies attended in a body, and the Archimandrite was in the procession in his robes.

Retreats.—The annual retreat for the women of Long Island and Greater New York, will be held Friday, April 11, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., in St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn. The conductor will be the Rev. F. C. Powell, provincial superior, S. S. J. E., of Boston.

Brooklyn Clerical League Meets.—Thirty-five of the clergy of the diocese, Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg, and Mr. Monell Sayre were at the Clerical League luncheon, Monday, March 3, at the Chamber of Commerce, Brooklyn.

Commodore Bourne's Bequests.—Commodore F. G. Bourne, who died at Oakdale, March 16, left to the Rev. J. H. Prescott, rector of St. Ann's Church, Sayville, $1,000, to the Rev. W. N. Webbe, rector of Emmanuel Church, Great River, $1,000, and to each of their churches $10,000 in cash and 1,000 shares each in the City and Suburban Homes Company; to the Church Charity Foundation, $10,000, and 1,000 shares in the same company. These with many other bequests to be known as the Kenneth Bourne Memorial Fund in memory of his deceased son, Kenneth.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

To Observe Centennial of Bishop Huntington.—The convention of the Diocese of Central New York will be in session, if present plans are adhered to, in Grace Church, Utica, on May 27 and 28. Bishop Frederic Dan Huntington, D.D., LL.D., L.H.D., the first bishop, was born May 28, 1819. It has been announced by Bishop Olmsted that plans are in progress to suitably observe the 100th anniversary of his birth on the second day of convention.

Bishop Addresses Clergy.—In a thoughtful lenten address to the members of the Utica Clerical Union assembled in the chancel of Grace Church, Utica, Bishop Olmsted dwelt upon "The Priest and his Message." He felt that although we are not in the habit of thinking of the clergy chiefly as preachers it was fitting to consider how the priest could best develop himself as a preacher, since the preaching of the Gospel has always been one of the prominent functions of the ministers of Christ, and since their commission still runs, "Be thou a faithful Dispenser of the Word of God," as well as "of His holy Sacraments."

Noon-Day Preachers in Syracuse.—The preachers at the noon-day services at St. Paul's Church, Syracuse: March 24, the Rev. N. T. Houser; March 25-27, the Rev. David Stuart Hamilton; March 28, the Rev. H. G. Coddington; March 30-April 4, the Rev. C. M. Douglas; April 7-11, the Rev. Augustine Elmendorf; April 14, the Rev. R. H. Gesner; April 15, the Rev. A. R. B. Hegeman; April 16-17 and Good Friday, the rector.

Bishop Olmstead, Bishop Fiske, Dr. Fleming James, Dr. Coley and Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin have been the preachers during the first weeks of Lent.

New Rector for Oneida.—The Rev. S. R. MacEwan, of Walton (Albany), has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Oneida, and will begin his duties there on the first Sunday in May. He was born and educated in Canada, but is an American citizen and has held rectorships at Johnsonburg and Kane, Pennsylvania, Westfield, Fort Covington and Duaneburg, New York, as well as at Walton, where he has been located since 1912. He was requested to assume overnight of the congregation of the First Congregation Church during their pastor's absence as army chaplain.

Lenten Engagements of Bishop Fiske.—St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, was crowded at the noon-day services the first four days of Lent, Bishop Fiske being the preacher. The bishop is now away from the diocese speaking at noon-day services in Philadelphia, Chicago, Baltimore, and Boston.

Military School Secures Army Chaplain.—The Rev. Charles H. L. Ford, formerly rector of Grace Church, Cortland, and recently chaplain in the Anti-Aircraft Service, A.E.F., has accepted a call to the joint duty of chaplain at St. John's School, Manlius, and rector of Christ Church, in that village. The parish has received the gift of a house valued at $4,000 which will be used as a rectory as soon as necessary repairs can be made.

Parish Debt Wiped Out in Fifteen Minutes.—Trinity Church, Syracuse, has been freed from indebtedness of $29,000, through the activity of its laymen. A patriotic dinner was arranged by the Men's Club and the Rector's Aid Society in honor of Capt. Almon A. Jaynes, rector of the parish and senior chaplain of the 27th Division, who was home on leave. Prior to the expected gathering Capt. Jaynes was recalled, and the dinner held without him. After an address by one of the men of the parish, $26,500 was subscribed in 15 minutes and amounts secured before and after the meeting were sufficient to make up the total sum. Capt. Jaynes is expected to return to his parish duties on April 1.

Naval Chaplain Will Be Rector.—The Rev. Romeo Gould, who has been chaplain at the Brooklyn Navy Yard during the war, and who was previously assistant at Trinity Church, Watertown, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Utica, sometimes called "Old" Trinity, and will enter upon his duties Palm Sunday.

Ordination.—The Rev. John Laimbeer Peckham was advanced to the priesthood Sunday morning, March 16, in Grace Church, Utica, by Bishop Olmsted. The Rev. Dr. Applegate, rector of the parish, assisted in the service, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. Denslow, of the General Theological Seminary, who also preached the ordination sermon.

THEODORE HAYDN.

OHIO

Large Class in Personal Religion.—St. Mark's Church, Toledo, the Rev. R. S. Chalmers, rector, during the first week in Lent conducted a class for adult communicants in personal religion, with the Rev. Bernard I. Bell of Great Lakes as conductor. The class had an attendance of over two hundred adults each night, of whom approximately seventy were men, while in Toledo Mr. Bell conducted a quiet day for the clergy of the western part of the diocese of Ohio in Trinity Chapel.

RHODE ISLAND

Bishop Perry's Welcome Home.—The Standing Committee of the diocese waited upon Bishop Perry on March 11 at his residence at 300 Angell Street, Providence, and presented to him an engrossed testimonial. It was prepared and read by the Rev. Dr. George McC. Fiske, rector emeritus of St. Stephen's Church, Providence. It expresses a deep realization of the bishop's distinguished services abroad and a loyal welcome home.

Lent at East Greenwich.—A full program of lenten services is being maintained at St. Luke's Church, East Greenwich, the Rev. John M. Hunter, rector. There are services almost every day, including a class in personal religion on Friday afternoons. A parochial mission, with three daily services, was conducted by Archdeacon Dodson of Southern Ohio, from March 17 to 23.

Diocesan Choir Guild.—The Diocesan Choir Guild, which has in previous years held an annual Spring Festival in three churches will hold but one service this Spring in All Saints' Church, Providence, early in May. The change is due to the absence of many choir members in war service.

New Windows at All Saints', Providence—In addition to the gift of several new stained windows in All Saints' Church, Providence, as recently announced in these columns, there has now come the generous gift of four windows, six feet in height, on the east side of the church. They will represent the four Evangelists, and are the gift of a parishioner in memory of a relative who was an active worker in the parish.

Improvements Made at St. Paul's, Pawtucket.—St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket, the Rev. Roberts A. Seilhamer, rector, is to be completely redecorated the coming summer. At the same time there is to be added a rood screen, in honor of the more than ninety men of the parish who served in the war. At Easter three new stained windows will be unveiled, thus completing the entire number. The altar has also been richly adorned by the presentation of three sets of altar fabric in colors of the seasons. They are individual gifts of a number of parishioners, as memorials or thank offerings.

Free Pews at Grace Church, Providence.—An agitation for the making of Grace Church, Providence, a free church has been begun by the vestry of the parish. An address in advocacy of the project was made by Mr. Rathbone Gardner, senior warden, at the morning service of March 16. A referendum of the 300 pew holders is to be undertaken by issuing to them letters asking for votes on the matter. It is expected that a decision will be reached by Easter.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

CONNECTICUT

Death of Mr. John Wright.—Born in Ireland eighty-seven years ago, coming to America at the age of eighteen, working continuously at the Cheney Brothers silk mills for forty-five years, serving for thirty-six years as vestryman of St. Mary's, South Manchester, and for six years the senior warden, Mr. John Wright died on Feb. 22. Six sons, all members of this church, served at the funeral as pallbearers.

Forward Movement.—During February this parish, St. Mary's, had its forward movement. There were four Sunday night speakers from central offices in New York, two on missions, one on social service, and one on religious education. This was followed by an every-member canvass conducted by seventy-five men, with distinct and successful results.

Clergy Welcomed Home.—Christ Church, Hartford, accorded a most gratifying welcome to the Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins on his return to his old parish to preach the second Thursday night lenten sermon: a full church, a most attentive congregation and a deeply helpful message. These are union services of the city parishes. So are the daily services at noon. Dr. Miel of Trinity, on the four days assigned to him, brought a message as stirring as it was sensible and spiritual. From his experience overseas Dr. Miel has returned with an unusual balance of judgment quite in contrast with some frantic utterances Hartford has heard from chaplains and others. Almost every civic gathering held since his return has had Dr. Miel as a speaker.

Large Sunday School Gathering.—The largest meeting yet of our Sunday School forces came to Christ Church Parish House to an exhibit of material in aid of religious education, a supper, and an evening meeting characterized by splendid singing. There were two addresses. The Rev. William T. Hooper of St. John's spoke on "Stopping the Leaks," and the Rev. Dr. Littell on "Educational Plays."

New Hymnal Discussed.—The New Hymnal was the subject in the recent Hartford clericus. The Rev. J. S. Neill treated it historically, and recommended books and careful study and attention by the clergy to bring results from the material at hand. The Rev. C. Edward Roberts of Farmington (at the piano) gave with skill and appreciation a review of good things he had found in the new book. The general discussion developed a wealth of helpful ideas.

JOHN STOCKTON LITTELL.

IOWA

Something New in Conventions.—The Layman's Missionary Movement is going to have something new in conventions. The first of a nation-wide series of church officers' conventions is being organized for North East Iowa to assemble in Waterloo, April 6-8.

Vestrymen, elders, trustees and all such boards of whatsoever name will get together to consider church finance, educational work, evangelism, and missions. The Rev. A. L. Murray, rector of St. John's Church, Cedar Rapids, is one of a committee of five who are campaigning to secure the attendance of over a thousand men.

Work on St. John's Church.—Work on the new buildings of St. John's Church, Cedar Rapids, will be commenced early in April. An institutional building will be erected first and the church proper will be built later. As a result of a dinner of the congregation held sometime ago the prospects now are that the new buildings will be completed free from debt.

Training Institute.—A "State Training Institute" was held in Des Moines, from March 11 to 13, the object of which may be explained by the subjects which were discussed. Dr. Earle E. Eubank of Chicago, spoke the first morning on "What the home community can do to help adjust economic conditions to the needs of those returning from war service." Dr. O. S. Davis, president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, gave the address the second day, "Co-operation among the Churches in programs for community betterment," and Bishop Longley, coadjutor of the diocese, took as his topic, "A broader policy for the Church in the reconstruction days."

Mrs. Biller's Visit.—Mrs. George Biller, of the Church Missions house, has been in the diocese for a few weeks, and has been able to meet with a dozen parish branches of the Auxiliaries. Her addresses have been remarkably inspiring, as they always are, and are especially timely because of the near approach of the great triennial offering of the Auxiliaries.

ALLEN JACOBS.

PHILADELPHIA

The Noon-Day Services.—The list of special preachers for Lent at the noon services at St. Stephen's Church is as follows: Bishop Garland, Bishop Talbot, Dr. Grammer, the Rev. Mr. Keable, Bishop Thurston, the Rev. Mr. Paynter, Dr. Reiland, the Rev. Mr. Groton, Dr. Birkhead, Dr. Delk of the Lutheran Church, Dr. Zwemer, the Rev. Mr. Collins, Dr. Twombly, the Rev. Mr. Earp, Dr. Dawson of Newark, New Jersey, the Rev. Mr. Gosling.

These services are under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; there is hearty singing and a large congregation every day from 12.30 to 12.55. The recent brightening and improvement of the church adds much to these services.

Speaking at the noon-day service at the Garrick Theatre on Monday, March 17, the Rev. Dr. Mockridge of St. James' Church made reference to the proposed local revision of the Sunday laws, and to the national prohibition amendment in the following words: "You cannot make a man a Christian by passing laws any more than you can lift yourself by your own bootstraps. When people must begin to support the Sabbath and temperance by means of law, I say it is a confession of weakness, not of strength."

The Church and Social Unrest.—At the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, the Rev. Dr. Steele has arranged a series of Monday afternoon addresses on the vexed question of the Church and the unrest of the day. At these services prominent clergymen of different denominations will speak. The Rev. Dr. Fitch of Amherst College was the speaker on March 17. A Roman priest was invited to be one of the speakers, but declined. Among others there is to be a prominent rabbi of the Jewish Church.

The Clergy in Corporate Prayer.—At the request of the clergy, there will be a special service of corporate intercession every Monday morning at the Diocesan Church of St. Mary. Bishop Rhinelander, Dr. Tomkins, Bishop Garland, Dr. Washburn, and Dr. Richardson are announced as leaders. Much is expected of these quiet services in the way of vision of and consecration to our diocesan work.

Welcome to Diocesan Soldiers and Sailors.—In spite of the rain on the 16th, the first of a series of services for churchmen who have been in the war was well attended and helpful. Bishop Rhinelander spoke a word of welcome in the name of the diocese. Two chaplains followed—the Rev. Mr. Evans, who served with the Marines at Paris Island; and the Rev. Mr. Booth, who spent several months overseas.

An Old Altar Hanging for New Chapel. Mrs. George C. Thomas has presented to the new Chapel of the Mediator (which is to be a memorial to the late Mr. George C. Thomas) a rare and beautiful lace hanging. This is a description of the gift—"The altar piece was made in the year 1500, at the time of Luca della Robbia. The lace is Spanish: it belonged to Cosimo, the first of the Medici. He made a present of it to Elonora da Toledo, and she gave it to Blanche Capello, who had it in a chapel in a country house in Tuscany. When this house was destroyed, they asked permission of the Pope to sell the lace."

Diocesan Week in the Campaign.—Churches in the North central section of the city will assemble in St. Matthew's Church; those in the South central section at Holy Trinity; West Philadelphia churches at the Church of the Savior; Kensington churches at St. Nathaniel's; Germantown and Chestnut Hill, at St. Luke's; Frankford, at Trinity Oxford; and there will be many suburban centres this week for the presentation of the manifold work of the diocese. Schools, hospitals, homes, and the many agencies of the corporate work of the diocese will be described by well informed leaders in all these centres.

Bishop Not to Go Abroad.—The diocese is rejoicing that it has been found unnecessary for the bishop to go abroad again.

Men's Club Meeting.—A recent meeting of the Men's Club of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, brought together eighty men of the church, besides a delegation from the pro-cathedral and several from Grace Church, Holland, to hear an address by Lieut. Mark T. McKee of Detroit, secretary of the State Reconstruction Committee. He spoke on the subject of "The Non-Partisan League—A Menace of Today," with reference also to the sister menace, the I. W. W.

Memorial of $1000.—A gift of $1000 to the endowment fund of St. Mark's, Grand Rapids, has been presented by Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Boltwood in memory of their son, Lucius Comstock Boltwood, who died in the service in France. As St. Mark's becomes more and more a downtown church the need of the endowment is increasingly recognized as necessary and generous friends are meeting the need.

ST. LOUIS

Gets Belgian Decoration.—Friends in St. Louis have been advised that Carlton G. Bowen has been decorated by the Belgian government for services in the relief of Belgians during the German occupation, being made a Chevalier of the Order of Couronne. Bowen is a member of St. John's Parish, St. Louis. After graduating at the University of the South he was awarded a Rhodes scholarship and studied at Oxford, leaving there in 1915. He served in the French ambulance service for two years and then in Belgian relief work. He is now in Roumania, a first lieutenant in the American army, and is 26 years old.

Become Community Centers.—Several weeks ago the pastor of Grace-Holy Cross, in North St. Louis, the Rev. Carl Reed Taylor, entered into co-operation with the representatives of the Community Service Organization of St. Louis, and, with the consent of the governing board of Grace-Holy Cross, placed the parish house at the disposal of the organization for certain phases of the community service work. This is proving to be of great moral value to the neighborhood and classes are held every week with encouraging results. The Rev. Jay Gould Seacord, vicar of Epiphany chapel, now gives notice that a community center has been established at the chapel where community singing, gymnastics, elocution and music will be featured by experts under the direction of the Community Service Organization. The site of Epiphany is in the neighborhood of the great plant of the Liggett Meyers tobacco factory where hundreds of young girls and women are employed. In the work of this center, Mrs. May Johnson, a factory welfare secretary, is co-operating with home demonstration agents and with the pastor and lay officers of Epiphany. Epiphany's new chapel, opened within the year, is peculiarly adapted to community service work. The Rev. Mr. Seacord, who has been in charge since September, is alive to the needs of that particular neighborhood and is getting close contact with its problems. With Mrs. Seacord he lives in the midst of the people to whom he ministers and has established warm friendships with them.

New Rector at St. John's.—St. John's Church, St. Louis, made vacant several months ago by the death of the rector, the Rev. Arthur Brittain, has called to the rectorship the Rev. Killian A. Stimpson of Princeton, New Jersey. It is understood that Mr. Stimpson has accepted the call and that he will take up his new duties in a few weeks. Mr. Stimpson is at present serving on the staff of Trinity School, Princeton.

Unknown Donor Is Known.—On the occasion of his annual visitation at the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, St. Louis, the second Sunday in Lent, Bishop Tuttle made official mention of the name of the "unknown donor" whose gift of $50,000 was expended in the building of the new St. Michael's Church, seven years ago. Sixty years ago Bishop Tuttle, then a student in Columbia University, New York, and Miss Susan E. Mount were fellow-teachers in the Sunday School in old St. Paul's Church on Broadway, New York City. The friendship which began then, continued until the day of Miss Mount's death, a couple of years ago, at the age of 82. Shortly before her death, Miss Mount gave Bishop Tuttle $50,000 to be used at his discretion for the erection of a church in the diocese of Missouri; and Bishop Tuttle designated the gift for the use of the newly-organized mission of St. Michael and All Angels. When the church was built, Bishop Tuttle placed the name of the donor in a sealed envelope in the corner stone. There were many who were sure they knew who the benefactor was, but at Miss Mount's request her name had not been officially disclosed during her lifetime. It is now understood that Miss Mount also gave the money which was used in the erection of the beautiful stone rectory which was built alongside the beautiful stone church. A year ago the mission was admitted to convention as a parish. It is in the fashionable and wealthy Brentmoor district in the West End of St. Louis. Its rector is the Rev. George E. Norton, who came from St. George's, New York, to the charge of the congregation, seven years ago.

KANSAS

Two Interesting Gifts.—Mr. Clarkson Millspaugh, son of the late Bishop Millspaugh, has presented to Grace Cathedral, Topeka, as a thank-offering for his safe return from France, a silver Communion set for private service. It was given to his father when dean of the cathedral in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1876, by the Young Women's Guild of the cathedral, and was used by the bishop many years.

A beautiful gold and silver spoon of very unusual character has been presented to Grace Cathedral by Mrs. Grun of St. Paul's Church, Kansas City, for use in the cathedral, as a baptismal shell. In the bowl of the spoon is a representation of the Virgin and the Child Jesus. On the back is a portrayal of the Crucifixion. Above this is a figure of God, and over this a dove. Around the edge of the bowl in Norwegian is the lettering, "In the Name of Ye Blessed Trinity." It is dated 1572. Mrs. Grun received it as a wedding present. There are only four of these spoons known to be in existence. One is in the collection of Mr. J. P. Morgan, another is in one of the large cathedrals in Norway, and one has been lost track of.

Four Canons for Cathedral.—The four clergymen at the Associate Mission in Topeka have been appointed canons of Grace Cathedral. They are the Rev. Chester Wood, the Rev. Herbert Hawkins, the Rev. George R. Hiatt and the Rev. John McLeod.

WEST TEXAS

Bishop's Pastoral for Lent.—Bishop Capers has just issued a lenten pastoral which is more comprehensive than any previously issued in this diocese. On the title page is printed "LENT—A World Wide Training School for World Wide Service." Seven pages of earnest appeal bring to each communicant the bishop's plea for an intensive Lent. The central theme of the pastoral is concerned with the Holy Communion, and Bishop Capers draws from the service six definite conclusions for the instruction of those who partake thereof.

Seventh Province Over the Top.—The Rev. A. W. S. Garden, secretary of the Seventh Province, reports a strenuous winter's work. With headquarters at San Antonio he covers a territory comprising six large states. The province has completed its apportionment in satisfactory manner.

Lively Deanery Sessions.—The Gonzales Deanery held its pre-lenten convocation at Yoakum with a good attendance of clergy and laity. The sessions were characterized by several unusual and progressive features. Open discussion was encouraged at each meeting, even after the night services, when live topics were introduced. These were dealt with in a lively manner, as many as nine or ten laymen taking part in a single debate. Archdeacon Heaton and Mr. E. T. Peter of Cuero introduced a discussion upon the problem "How To Get Men To Church," which provoked an animated conference and developed many constructive ideas and practical suggestions. After a heart-searching meditation on the Holy Communion, the Rev. G. R. Fenner ventured the startling assertion that it would not be inconsistent for a loyal churchman to begin the day with the Holy Communion and conclude it with an evangelistic campaign along Salvation Army lines. This idea was warmly taken up by the clergy present, and as a direct result of this conference, several of the younger clergy, including the archdeacon and the dean of this convocation, intend to devote part of their summer vacation to evangelistic work along churchly lines in those parts of the diocese where the Church is weakest.

G. F. S. Active in See City.—Three strong chapters of the G. F. S. have been organized in San Antonio mainly through the energy of Miss May Case Marsh, national field secretary. The girls are well organized and the women of the city churches have taken to the movement most eagerly and enthusiastically. The Christ Church branch met recently at St. Mary's Hall with an attendance of fifty girls and six associates. Plans were made for a glee club and for classes in games, tennis and dramatics. These are all to be taken up with the idea of the assistance which may be given to hospitals, orphanages and other institutions.

Change in Archdeaconry Headquarters. Archdeacon Lee W. Heaton, who has hitherto made his headquarters at San Antonio, will shortly move to Kingsville, and should be addressed at Kingsville, Texas, after April. A. J. GAYNER BANKS.

NEVADA

A Gift.—St. Peter's Church, Salem, Massachusetts, the Rev. Charles W. G. Lyon, rector, has presented to the District of Nevada, for the use of one of the missionaries, a very beautiful solid silver Communion set for use in the visitation of the sick. It has been used many years in Salem, and is valued for this association.

Miss Harmon to Help.—Miss Ruth Dana Harmon of Berkeley, California, sometime secretary to Archdeacon Emery, is coming as a volunteer worker among the Pah-ute Indians on the Pyramid Lake Reservation, to help Miss Lucy L. Carter, in charge, who is doing a most effective work, and needs this assistance.

Successful Canvass.—A successful every member canvass has been made in Trinity Parish, Reno, under the leadership of Archdeacon Emery L. Howe. There was an increase in pledged subscriptions of about 50 per cent.

Bishop Is President.—Bishop Hunting has been elected president of the Nevada Indian Association. This organization has members all over the state and bends its energies towards improving the conditions of life among the 5,500 Indians in the state.

For a Testimonial.—The Rev. Thomas Lloyd Bellam has been vicar of St. Paul's Church, Sparks, for twenty-five years. A committee of the most influential men in Sparks has been formed to raise funds for the erection of a rectory and guild hall as a testimonial to Mr. Bellam's faithful service in this community.

QUINCY

Mr. Lawrence Earl Emmons.—One of the last survivors of the group of churchmen who founded the cathedral at Quincy, Illinois died on March 4 after several weeks of illness at his home in that city, aged 82 years. He had been in declining health for some years, and had for a long time been obliged to relinquish his duties. For the first twenty years of the history of the diocese he was one of its most prominent promoters, having been chancellor of the cathedral and the legal advisor of the bishop through all the troubles of that early day.

Mr. Emmons was an officer in the Union Army. At the close of the Civil War he was employed in mustering out troops at Marietta, Georgia. Here he met his wife, then Miss Eliza Fletcher, a member of a prominent church family in that state. They removed to Quincy after the war, and Mr. Emmons became a member of the bar. He gave much of his time to the practice of commercial law, and was attorney for important business interests. He was devoted to the affairs of the cathedral and the diocese, and was regular and devout in his church duties.

His funeral was held at the cathedral on March 8, attended by an immense congregation composed of the Bar Association and many of the leading men of the city. Dean Cone officiated.

Mr. Emmons leaves besides his widow and daughter, two namesakes, his son and grandson. The former has been a member of the cathedral choir for 30 years, and is treasurer of the diocesan trusts and funds.

PITTSBURGH

Death of Prominent Clergyman.—The Rev. John Russell Wightman, D.D., died at the Saint Margaret Memorial Hospital, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday evening, March 11. He was the son of Thomas and Isabella Ruth Russell Wightman, both father and mother belonging to prominent old Pittsburgh families. He was educated at the University of Western Pennsylvania, now the University of Pittsburgh, from which also he received his degree of Doctor of Divinity. Dr. Wightman was ordained deacon in 1888, and priest in the following year, by Bishop Whitehead, and spent his ministry of over thirty years entirely within the limits of the Diocese of Pittsburgh.

Dr. Wightman was always deeply interested in Sunday School work, and at various times served conspicuously on the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. He was a member of the Diocesan Cathedral Committee, secretary of the Standing Committee, and chairman of the Committee on Canons, being well versed in all matters pertaining to ecclesiastical law. Dr. Wightman was fourth on the list of clergy, the oldest clergymen in duration of service actively engaged in work, the three preceding him having retired from actual service.

The funeral services took place in St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburgh, on Friday afternoon, March 14, under the charge of the bishop. There were present many of the clergy of the diocese, those participating in the service being the Rev. Drs. Vance and Hills, of the Standing Committee.

OREGON

Patronal Day.—Quinquagesima was observed as patronal day at St. David's Church, Portland, when the rector gave a sketch of Saint David, Archbishop of Wales in 544, whose day is March 1. Bishop Rowe has been in Portland again, and preached at St. David's morning and evening, the first Sunday in Lent.

Becomes Dean.—The Rev. Reginald T. T. Hicks, who has been supplying at All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, during the absence of his brother, Dean W. C. Hicks in war service, has been appointed dean of the pro-cathedral of St. Stephen the Martyr, and began his duties the first Sunday in Lent. Dean Hicks was born in England; he finished his divinity course at Seabury Hall, Fairbault, and now joins a group of Seabury men, Archdeacon Chambers, the Rev. J. E. H. Simpson and several others who have been in Oregon a good many years.

Large Fund Secured.—The drive for funds for the new Grace Church, under the two "colonels," captains and solicitors, secured about $38,000 which was exceedingly gratifying to all.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bishop Guerry to Dedicate "Y."—Bishop Guerry has accepted an invitation to dedicate the new Y. W. C. A. building at the Charleston Navy Yard, which has been named "The Eliza Lucas Hall." The building was erected at a cost of between $100,000 and $200,000, and is the gift of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. Mr. J. D. Rockefeller Jr., is to deliver an address at The Service of Dedication April 9.

To Rebuild Parish House.—Grace Church, Charleston. The Rev. William Way, rector, has definitely decided to rebuild its parish house as a memorial to three young men who made the supreme sacrifice in the war. The architects' plans call for a modern two-story building, Gothic in design. The Sunday School and parochial activities have outgrown the old building.

NORTH CAROLINA

The Wilmington Convocation.—The spring meeting of the convocation of Wilmington was held in Trinity Church, Lumberton, North Carolina, Feb. 24-26, the Rev. W. H. Milton, D.D., dean. Bishop Darst was present during the entire session of the convocation and preached on Tuesday morning.

The convocation decided to conduct a preaching mission in the various mission stations in the convocation during the next three months.

The Rev. E. G. MacKinnon, D.D., was elected dean of the convocation and the Rev. Walter R. Noe, secretary and treasurer.

New Rector.—The Rev. J. H. Taylor, who for some time past has been in charge of St. John's Church, Wilmington, North Carolina, has accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Epiphany, Barton Heights, Richmond, Virginia. We regret very much the departure of Mr. Taylor from our diocese and wish for him much happiness in his new parish.

English Church News

Meeting of the Representative Council.—

At last the Representative Council has been able to meet and discuss the Church reform proposals of which we have heard so much. The council, as I have before explained, is a heterogeneous body elected by the houses of Convocation, including the laymen's houses, from both provinces of Canterbury and York. It is the nearest approach to a body which can represent the mind of the whole Church under the existing circumstances. It has no legal or canonical power, and it desires if possible to extinguish itself in favor of a new body bearing the same name, but elected by the whole membership of the Church. Further, it desires to be endowed by Parliament with the right of legislating for the Church, subject to a state vote. But before it can approach Parliament it must make up its mind exactly what it wants, and whether in particular it wholly endorses the recommendations of the Archbishops' Committee on Church and State. But right at the beginning of the proceedings, the Bishop of Hereford interposed with a "brilliant and forcible speech," as the Church Times describes it. His contention of course was that Parliament could do all that is necessary in the way of reform by appointing a Royal commission. But he was politely informed that he was behind the times, and the council proceeded to discuss the scheme.

What Is to Become of Convocation?—

An immediate difficulty presented itself. Mr. Athelstan Riley, who is as you know one of our leading High Church laymen, is greatly concerned at the prospect of the extinction of Convocation, if the scheme is carried. He has great respect for the "sacred synods of the Church" and does not relish the foundation of a new statutory authority on an erastian foundation. It is a real difficulty, as Dr. Temple has been saying scornful things about Convocation, and the Guardian frankly believes that there is no room for the old and the new councils. Either they should be merged, it thinks, under the historic name of Convocation, or the existing Convocation should be frankly "scrapped." But the council did not go so far. Convocation is to be let alone for the present.

Meantime the reformers received a welcome aid from the Archbishop of Canterbury, who with his brother of York, presided over the gathering. He did not believe that the passing of the present scheme would involve the loss of the traditions of the Church. And the Church needed a new piece of machinery for doing its work better; there were many things which were of the life of the Church, and not of paramount interest to the State. On this, the council adopted the principle, and got to work on the details, of which perhaps the most interesting was the defeat of the proposal to confine the membership of the future council to the male sex. The Bishop of Hereford was against the inclusion of women, but the Bishops of Lichfield and London and Dr. Temple himself all spoke in favor of allowing women to be members, and carried their point by a large majority.

The Bishop of London and the Wesleyans.—For a long time we have heard nothing of the Bishop of London's scheme for a union between our Church and the Wesleyans. But he has evidently been working away at the subject in private, and it is reported that he has been in consultation with the leaders of the body concerned. A series of four meetings on Christian reunion has been arranged to be held at the Kingsway Hall, which is practically a center of Methodism, and the first of these was addressed by the Bishop of London. He held that the necessity of reunion had been proved by at least five considerations: it was the will of our Lord, disunion meant a waste of power, we could only fight a determined foe by a united force, the cause of missions made union necessary, and finally, our great population which stands aloof from religion does so chiefly because it is disgusted with the quarrels of Christians. Now these things being admitted, what hope is there of reunion? First, said the bishop, the atmosphere is better: all bitterness has passed away. Then we have learned to co-operate in many matters of social and political nature. And thirdly, the Eastern Church is looking towards us in a very friendly spirit. The bishop's experiences in Salonica had given him great hope for reunion with the Orthodox Church.

"Mending the Seamless Robe."—"Age-long schisms," continued the bishop, "must be healed slowly from within, and not plastered over from without." For that reason he deprecated an exchange of pulpits, which would have the appearance of reunion without the essential thing. And he believes that reunion might very well be in the first instance with the Wesleyan Methodists, because John Wesley himself was a keen churchman, because the Wesleyans use practically the same prayer-book as the Church, and because they have always had a traditional reverence for the Church. Could we have a system which would preserve (on the Church side) our orders, sacramental doctrine, creeds and teaching, and (on the Wesleyan side) the class-meeting, the call to the ministry already received by Wesleyan ministers, and the "liberty of prophesying?" The bishop was bold enough to outline a scheme, which is apparently quite satisfying from the Catholic point of view, as it is most favorably received by the "Church Times." The ordination form is to be made the same: Wesleyan ministers to be ordained by bishops and presbyters associated together. In thirty or forty years' time all ministers in both Churches would have been episcopally ordained. To meet Wesleyan susceptibilities, the bishop proposes that six of the superintendent ministers

Give the Women a Vote

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

As the time for many of the diocesan conventions draws near an attempt should be made to pass such legislation as will give women the vote in church affairs. Equal representation is due the women of the Church. For too long a period of time they have not been consulted in church affairs. There is no reason why the Church should refuse to women what the State gives them. It is not right to break the backs of devout women in carrying on church work and then refuse them the right to vote in the diocesan conventions and likewise the General Convention. This right to vote should carry with it the right to serve on committees of the diocese and should establish their right to serve on the vestries of parishes. Any parish priest of experience knows full well the injustice of having women do the work, and then forbidding them right of office in the temporal affairs of the Church. How absurd is the position now held by women in the Church. Many of us have heard it said "were it not for the women the Church would not exist." If so then let all give credit where credit is due and give to them the right of suffrage in the Church. No one who is at all familiar with the ability of women to manage affairs can doubt the benefit that would arise to the Church if they had a hand in the management of its affairs. Take, for example, the efficiency shown in the management of the Woman's Auxiliary. Where would the cause of missions be to-day if not for the women? How would the mission field be supplied if not for the help of the Woman's Auxiliary? Just consider the work in the Sunday Schools and the parochial organizations. How many a parish or mission has been saved to the Lord by the work of a few devout and earnest women? If women are competent to vote on school boards of the State and serve in administrative capacities why not likewise in the Church?

It is not a question of women desiring to be ministers, it is only the matter of being just and giving to all men and women alike the right to have a voice in the management of matters ecclesiastical as long as they support the Church with their means and interest. The General Convention with the service at which the Woman's Auxiliary presents its triennial offering is one of inspiration, should not those who give the great offering have a voice in the direction and expenditure and a right to choose their representatives in the councils of the Church? Suffrage is at hand, some women like some men may not want to exercise their legal rights, that is no reason to withhold them, and so the State now confers the right on men and women! Only one senator of the United States prevents equal suffrage being the law of the land, What a great step forward it would be if the Church should grant equal suffrage to her children before the government of the United States. It would show at least that the Church was alive to her opportunities and was willing to be just in her dealings with her people.

In so far as working against the Church and her interests I believe it would greatly stimulate the interest of the entire membership. Men in the Church would recognize justice in granting equal rights to all. And women would because of the increased responsibility see to it that husbands and fathers and brothers paid more attention to the claims of the Church. Annual meetings in the parish churches would not become gatherings to try and get some man to do what he did not want to do. On the other hand men and women would endeavor because of their equal responsibility to meet the situation and not simply elect vestrymen and church officers because the names of some were more or less familiar. Let church people keep this matter in mind and as delegates go to the several diocesan conventions, let them go instructed to vote for equal suffrage in church affairs.

False Idealism

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am heartily in sympathy with your editorial in the issue of February 22, relative to the League of Nations. Previous to its appearance, I had watched the press in vain for an article clearly differentiating between the principle of a league of nations and the form and circumstances of the proposed league.

The value and ultimate inevitability of a permanent league of nations no sane man can question. But the proposed league unquestionably imperils our sovereignty, without in the slightest degree securing the world's peace and the maintenance of justice.

The point is that the issue has been clouded. Advocates of the league have argued for it in beautiful terms, but their words have been wide of the point. No one who has eyes to see the signs of the times will maintain that America can hold aloof from the rest of the world in selfish isolation. But our quarrel is with the proposed league, which can only serve Germany's evil designs.

The proposed league program is serving not to establish a real league of nations but to disrupt an effective and efficient league which has existed for nearly two years, and is composed of the Allied nations, which have been welded together in a firm fellowship while fighting side by side in a common cause. The Administration has stubbornly refused to recognize this league, which manifestly would serve to further effectively the cause of which it professes to be the champion.

Moreover, the vital issue, namely peace terms, including full reparation, has been forced into the background. What we demand is an immediate decision as to terms consistent with the demands of justice, and a swift imposition of the same upon Germany. These terms should be severe enough to cripple the military power of Germany during the period of her reformation. The present league, backed by force, should be maintained and recognized for the purpose of imposing these terms.

I am amazed at the deplorable lack of spiritual perception on the part of the Church that is resulting in her exalting a pseudo-idealism, beautiful in its words, but ugly in its inconsistent actions and its willingness to sacrifice principle for policy, and selfish interests, and to compromise right and justice. It is high time that the Church take the lead in refusing to call this idealism. Is the Scripture prophecy concerning the prophets who would seduce even the elect finding its fulfilment today?

We demand, in the name of Jesus Christ an open, straightforward policy of unwavering and uncompromising righteousness and justice. We call for a recognition of the present League of Nations backed by undiminished force, to impose terms upon Germany, suppress Bolshevism with a firm hand, and insure a real and permanent peace.

Why Wars in Christian Lands?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The war, and the meagre influence which our preaching has upon the daily lives of people, show the need of radically changing the doctrine of salvation, in the sense of getting souls to heaven.

Three methods are in vogue. One we may call priestly ceremonial. If people go to Confession and receive Absolution, and especially if they receive, just before passing out of this life, the "last offices of the Church," then they think their souls will go to heaven, irrespective of the life lived here.

Another is most clearly represented by those who hold Luther's slogan, "Salvation by faith alone, works help nothing." No doubt they include acceptance of the whole body of their theology. This would take souls to heaven by dogmatics.

All others may be included under the head of emotional experience. Here it is a personal feeling that is supposed to wipe out the sins of a past life, and is usually termed conversion. But conversion, like the term faith, is claimed by the advocates of all the methods. Therefore we would call it the emotional system.

Nearly all denominations of Christians agree in using one or another, or even all three, of these methods as means of getting souls to heaven, irrespective of life here.

When we examine the teachings of our Lord on this subject we find that He differed wide as the poles from any or all of the methods so meagrely sketched above. One need only read S. Matthew, chapter XXV, vv. 31 to 46, to see how true this is. Two of the methods apparently pass by the matter of good works, while one of them mentions good works, only contemptuously to reject them. Yet the only thing our Lord mentions is the matter of good works, or the lack of them. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

If these teachings of our Lord had been preached as vehemently and continuously throughout Germany for the last four hundred years, as has Luther's slogan of "faith alone, works help nothing," would there have been a bloody-minded coterie of Prussian militarists to force this horrible war upon the world, and yet think they will go to heaven, because they have the faith, i. e., they accept the current German dogmatics? A faulty soteriology made it possible; a true preaching of the doctrine taught by our Lord would have made it impossible.

In fact we should change the connotation of the word salvation. It should not mean to us the getting of souls to heaven hereafter, but the getting of heaven into souls here and now. For doing this we need all the grace and spiritual strength we can get by properly using priestly ministrations; we cannot have too much light through a sound Christian dogmatic; and while endeavoring to use the grace, and walk in the light, and thus get at least something of heaven into our souls, feeling or emotion will not and ought not be absent. These methods have only been misinterpreted and misapplied. What the world needs, and the churches need, is that they be rightly interpreted and properly applied; always based on the pure Word of our Lord, and on His Word alone.

Too Academic

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Your last number gives encouragement to some of us who not only believe the League of Nations to be, as you state it, "a clear cut Christian issue" but also that it offers the greatest step in the progress of the Kingdom of God since the birth of Jesus of Nazareth. In view of this tremendous importance and Christian character of the issue, THE CHURCHMAN even now seems too detached and academic in its attitude for a leader of Christian thought and opinion. But we must be thankful for what we have. The writer is glad to find himself in accord with THE CHURCHMAN in wanting "not any sort of league" "but the best which the corporate Christian intelligence of the world can produce" and, like THE CHURCHMAN, I am disappointed by the limitations of the draft proposed.

But we are face to face with a condition and not a theory and I am tempted to remind THE CHURCHMAN of it's recent fling at "makers of millenniums." Mr. Wilson is something of an idealist himself and no intelligent person imagines that he and the other American commissioners have obtained in the proposed draft what they desire. But when a number of men of divergent ideals and ideas meet about a table to reach a common conclusion there must be compromises and, for one, I am disposed to believe that the determined, persistent President of the United States has not yielded more than the circumstances absolutely demanded. A half loaf is better than no bread, and the league proposed is immeasurably better than a return to isolation and detachment or a purely selfishly formed balance of power. One step in the right direction not only makes possible a second step but implies it. The first step toward the federation of the thirteen colonies was very limited and imperfect. Under the circumstances as they exist, and with the extremely limited time within which to procure amendments to the draft, it comes very near being a fact

"The Man Outside the Church." This is a Volume of Sermons. The American Church Monthly says of this book: "Simple, practical, to the point in every instance, and readable as most sermons are not. They are the sort of thing that needs to be preached, and that when it is preached is likely to have effect not only on the man outside the Church, but the easy-going, casual worshipper in the pew." Price $1.50 net.

"The Supreme Sacrifice." Devotional Addresses at the Good Friday "Three Hours' Service." Many periodicals have spoken highly of this book, as being a modern presentation of The Sufferings of our Blessed Lord. The sale of this book has necessitated a reprint. Price 75 cents net.

"The Religion of the Tommy." The Boston Transcript says of this book: "After all, it is the religion of the average man that pulls us up and pulls us together. This Book represents a nation's output in faith, hope and charity. Written by an American, this reveals as well as anything that we have seen the soldier's feelings about religious matters, and discusses suggestively the lessons for the churches. It is full of striking and quotable material."

St. Andrew's Cross says: "It is brimful of the most reasonable philosophy, and the most wholesome, helpful thoughts on the problems facing the individual, the church and the world. On the whole, we should class this among the most uplifting and thoroughly enjoyable books on the war." Price $1.00 net.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A CHRISTIAN. By Vernon F. Storr, M.A. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge: London. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. $1.00.

THE DELAYED VICTORY AND OTHER SERMONS. By F. Homes Dudden, D.D. Longmans, Green and Company. New York. 1918. $1.50.

Mr. Storr's volume is one of seven sermons, originally preached in his own parish church in England, and deals with the fundamental moral and religious truths of the Christian faith; for example, the fact of Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Divine Fatherhood, the fact of sin and its remedy, the heavenly hope and the fellowship in Christ. Their purpose is to provide a practical philosophy of the Christian religion as it concerns daily life. They are designed to provide, in brief and somewhat popular form, the chief statements and first principles of revelation as related to faith and discipleship. While not new, the recasting of fundamentals is always refreshing.

Dr. Dudden's twelve sermons deal with a variety of themes, most of which have a definite application to the distressing times through which the people in London have been passing. As war sermons they are interesting studies of how the Anglican clergy stimulated and sustained their people in a trying hour. Several of them will have permanent value, no doubt, such as those on "The Cure for Trouble," "Thought Control," "Springtime" and the "Problem of Pain." There is an optimistic note dominant throughout the entire group of sermons which was very necessary at a time of an unusual tendency to deep pessimism. R. P. K.

Italians in America

SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS LIFE OF ITALIANS IN AMERICA. By the Rev. Enrico C. Sartorio, A.M. Christopher Publishing House. Boston. 1918. $1.00.

A dedication to Bishop Lawrence and a preface by Dean Hodges ought to be the beginning of a good book. Mr. Sartorio in September of 1914 took charge of the Italian congregation of Christ Church, Boston, and now under the City Mission, is in charge of the newly dedicated Chapel of St. Francis of Assisi, adjoining and in picturesque contrast to old Christ Church. Mr. Sartorio tells us what everyone wants to know, what is within the vivid life of our large Italian colonies, which Americans realize they are so outside of, but which for our own good, and for the sake of the future of us all, we wish we might penetrate. Within these colonies on the other hand are Italians who wish to know the real America. Sartorio says:

I thank God for the opportunity I have had to know America as it really is, and I wish that the Church would train more of my people in the best American institutions.

Later on he adds that America thus far has not found the way of making itself known to the foreigner. Americanization, he says, is making use of the best in the foreigner, by instilling in him a clear vision of the American nation, which was formed by men who had the same feelings that he has in his heart. The process should be one of slow and natural evolution. Races are not changed in one generation, and for this reason the second generation should be most carefully trained.

Speaking of the religion of Italians in this country, Mr. Sartorio says that large numbers are free from the control of the Roman Church. He gives the number of Protestant churches and missions as about four hundred, with about twenty-five thousand members and says that as the future of the church is in its young people, so Italian work must prepare them to step into an American church as soon as they move away from the Italian colony. As their future lies in America so their religious future is in the American church. "To become an American churchman is as logical as to become an American citizen." Though Italian work for this reason may be regarded as temporary, at present, it is greatly needed.

In an interesting chapter on American leadership, he says:

You are Americans, sons of a democratic country, and you must represent Christianity in new ways.

The advice he gives in this chapter appears to be addressed to theological students, and is of value as giving the experience of an Italian pastor, with warning of pitfalls to others, especially to American clergymen. All that he says makes a reason for effort to every Christian, but in a summing up of the religious situation in this country as it affects us together with these newcomers, one great fact not brought out should have unending emphasis. The Italian is Catholic and wishes to remain so, while many Italians are prejudiced against the Roman Church. So much Mr. Sartorio tells us. The great fact for us as churchmen is this, we are a Church, Catholic and non-Roman, and to this opportunity God calls us.

LILLIAN M. SKINNER.

SONS OF ITALY. By the Rev. Antonio Mangano, Missionary Education Movement. New York. 1917. 60c.

Sons of Italy, prepared as a text book for mission study classes had its first use at Silver Bay, where the course was received with marked interest.

The author, the head of the Italian Theological Department of Colgate University, makes it clear that the experimental stage in Italian religious work in America is past, and that certain conclusions as to method have formulated themselves. The book is singularly just to all effort to deal with Italian religious problems.

Mr. Mangano came to America when he was seven years of age. At nineteen, he entered Colgate Academy, then passed to Brown University and to Union Theological Seminary. During these years he became an enthusiastic American, and it is just because no one doubts his Americanism that he is able to do most for his adopted country.

To give proper weight to his opinions in regard to methods in Italian work, it is necessary to dwell especially on the American training of the author. It is plain that he desires assimilation, but an assimilation of the best—in the character of both peoples. He therefore deprecates all external and false Americanization. He frankly says that the separation of the young people from the general life of the Italian congregation or mission is a mistake, and his reasons for this opinion are given. He believes that the character of the young is strengthened by becoming responsible for the religious development of others among his own people, and that the ultimate strength of the Protestant Italian movement in this country lies in the maintenance of this relation. This plan by no means precludes the use of the English language.

He rightly asks for far greater care in the selection and training of candidates for the ministry to Italians than has in most instances been given to this vital question, and makes clear the necessity of Italian leaders in work among Italians. He gives convincing reasons for the American training of these men, and shows why well trained Italians will promote rather than hinder true assimilation. He says, and most persons of experience will agree with him, that unless in exceptional instances, men trained in Italy or in other than Protestant surroundings, can have but limited value in the work of the Protestant Church.

Mr. Mangano is frequently criticized by Italians as too American, while some of his conclusions will lead Americans to call him too Italian. This opposition of view brings to light one of the necessities of Italian work. We must have as leaders men who have the courage to accept this challenge. Religious leaders must themselves enter as fully as possible into American life and thought, and on the other hand they must be ready to stand against the opinion of those Americans who believe that assimilation is a question of a day or of an announcement. The foreign born man who would do most for his people and for America must accept a singular isolation of spirit. He must be willing to hunger and thirst for fellowship! Only in rare instances will he find it! This fine courage Professor Mangano has, and when the story of religious work in the Italian colonies of America is finally written, the author of this book will be gratefully remembered.

Meditations for Lent

THE INVITATIONS OF OUR LORD. By the Rev. J. G. H. Barry, D.D. Edwin S. Gorham, New York. 1919.

Dr. Barry has done the Church a real service in giving us this very interesting and valuable book. It consists of a series of nineteen meditations worked out in a very suggestive and helpful way. The precludes are simple but clear and vivid and create just the right atmosphere, while the whole treatment of the various subjects is all that one could wish. The book is admirable in every way. Designed especially for those who are striving to establish the habit of meditation and for those who have given up the habit because of its difficulty, it is certain to be of great assistance if faithfully used. It will be found a particularly helpful guide to the keeping of a holy Lent. At the request of his publishers Dr. Barry has prefixed an excellent paper entitled "How to Make a Meditation."

Scientific Mysticism

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE MYSTICAL AND THE SENSIBLE WORLDS. By Herbert N. G. Newlyn. George Allen and Unwin, Ltd., London, and The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $1.75.

Mysticism, like misery, acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. The author of this book struggles painfully to urge the value of union with God and to explain its possibility and process. He has a labored air of scientific method and proof and a nomenclature which clouds rather than explains. God is identified with ether, and then named "Essence." His purpose is identified with Christ, the Word, and then called "The Cosmic Need."

This reality of divine Desire when found in materialized form will be referred to as the Cosmic Need. So that when the Essence is reduced to matter, the divine Desire becomes the Cosmic Need. As Essence and matter are in texture the same; so divine Desire and Cosmic Need are in texture identical: the difference in each case is due to the partial derangement of the Natural Motion of the constituent elements.

Chapter XI. "The Goal of the Cosmic Need" opens with these words:

In this chapter we leave the mere examination of the universe in its multitudinous aspect, and seek to gain an idea, if that be possible, of the end towards which the Cosmic Need is ever striving to bear it.

But that is evidently not possible, because we do not gain an idea of the Cosmic Need's striving or any other idea, and because, in Chapter XVIII, he confesses:

That a motive in creation does and must seem probable to man's intelligence is beyond dispute. But till the prevailing conditions of non-natural existence are far more intimately known than they are at present, it is certainly unreasonable to expect man to become aware of it. This is especially so since motive is invariably among the most deeply buried of all mysteries.

We have somewhat the same feeling regarding this book.

Church Advertising

CHURCH ADVERTISING: ITS WHY AND HOW. By twenty authors. J. B. Lippincott Company. Philadelphia. 1918. $1.00.

This book is unique and valuable. It consists of addresses delivered before the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, whose maxim is Truth, held in Philadelphia in 1916. There then occurred the first national conference on church advertising.

These addresses are by ministers and laymen who understand both the methods of advertising and the needs of the modern church. As would be expected, they vary in ability and literary finish, but there are six among them which are of very great value, and all the others are worth reading. Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illis: Times are changing and we are changing with them. To the Christian worker whether clergyman or layman, who realizes that, and wishes to know how to avoid failure as well as how to cultivate success, this little book contains a great deal more than a dollar's worth.

About the Prayer Book

PRIMITIVE WORSHIP AND THE PRAYER BOOK. By The Rev. Walker Gwynne, D.D., Longmans, Green and Company, New York, 1917. $2.50.

Dr. Gwynne has written a very valuable and interesting treatise on the Prayer Book. It is not that he has discovered new material on the oft-written-about Prayer Book, but he has written more interestingly than other writers on the subject, and he here presents in a readable form matter which he has culled from wide study and research. The volume is not long, it has four hundred and twelve pages, but it is exhaustive without being exhausting. It is divided into two parts. The first part, dealing with the Rationale and History of the Prayer Book, is, of course, familiar to all students of the Liturgy, but old matter is well presented and brings together many valuable references.

The second part, "The Prayer Book and What It Teaches," is exceedingly fine, clear in its statement and definite in its teaching and carrying conviction to the reader. Dr. Gwynne need not apologize for having written another volume on the Book of Common Prayer, for he has done the Church a real service. He has given the clergy a book which they can put into the hands of those inquiring about the ways and worship of the Church, and he has given to all who read his book a new sense of the value and beauty and truth of Church worship and Church teaching.

THE SCHOOL OF DIVINE LOVE. By the Rev. Jesse Brett, Longmans, Green and Company, New York, 1918. $1.20.

This is a book of devotional reading by a well-known writer of devotional books. The sub-title of the book is "The Science of the Saints in Daily Life," but the book would seem to be very much removed from daily life, and one needs the perseverance as well as the science of the saints to read it through.

The saints would seem to need a more robust school than this to fit them for daily life.

THE CROSS: Studies in the Sacred Passion of Our Lord. By the Rev. Jesse Brett, L.Th., Chaplain of All Saints Hospital, Eastbourne. Longmans, Green and Company, New York and London, 1918. $1.25.

These studies of the Passion of our Lord, grouped about two leading conceptions—the Foreshadows of the Passion in the ancient sacrificial rites of the Old Testament dispensation and the ministry of the Prophets, and in the conception of Jesus as King of Saints, the inspiration of heroic virtues, Faith, Hope, Love, and the rest—is at once expository and devotional. The aim is so to expound the doctrine of the Cross that the disciple will be inspired to devotion and by devotion to action in union with the Passion. Its particular value is as an aid to meditation by the devout soul.

On Preaching

THE WORK OF PREACHING. By Arthur S. Hoyt, D.D., The Macmillan Company, New York, 1917. $1.50.

Dr. Hoyt's The Work of Preaching is a revised and enlarged edition of a book originally published in 1905. It is the result of twenty-five years of experience as Professor of Homiletics in the Auburn Theological Seminary. Though primarily for the use of students, it will be found very helpful to many men who have been in the active ministry for years. It sets a high ideal of what a sermon ought to be, and gives concise and detailed instructions as to how that ideal may be attained.

At any rate, in view of the shortness of time, it behooves those in positions of leadership, either in politics or journalism, to come down from the sky and without delay, submit definite and concrete amendments or additions to the present draft, in order that they may be considered and discussed. In the meantime it would be well for those who feel the imperative need of some league to make clear beyond a peradventure that they are heartily in favor for this league in default of something better, or else show definitely why no league is better than the proposed.

The Omitted Hymns

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I read with interest the articles in THE CHURCHMAN of February 22, on the new church hymnal. Many good points were made, but I should like to take exception to the easy manner in which the Ven. J. G. Greig dismisses the hymns omitted from the new hymnal. Though he states that he is not familiar with the old hymnal he assumes that the omitted hymns will be "unmourned because unsung."

It is quite possible that this may be the case with many of these short and simple hymns in the larger cities where congregational singing has not been a conspicuous feature, but it seems to me that there has not been enough thought given to the needs of what may be termed "rural parishes." That is, the parish with an average attendance of thirty to forty and a volunteer choir of untrained voices. I do not believe that our local church is an exception and I find amongst the hymns with which we are most familiar and which are omitted from the new hymnal the following taken from the index:

No's 501, 80, 31, 371, 188, 283 (one of the few on the Holy Scripture), 71, 205 (an inspiring hymn for the New Year and certainly more attractive than the one in the new hymnal with its monotonous reiteration of the word "ring"), 644, 125, 647, 502, 602, 601, 482, 352, 611, and about 35 others.

Most of these are hymns in short meter or with only four lines to a verse, and are certainly more suitable for congregational singing than many of the new hymns or old ones retained. It seems especially noticeable that at least eleven easy lenten hymns have been omitted, also some excellent hymns for special occasions. I should suppose that in hundreds of churches hymn 197 has been used during the war; at least it has seemed to us here one of the most inspiring.

Also, if any hymns of the evangelistic style were to be retained, it is difficult to see why the compilers omitted, "I Need Thee Every Hour," "More Love to Thee, O Christ," "Work For the Night Is Com-

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

It is probably too late to have the revised hymnal revised at the next General Convention, but might it not be possible to have later editions contain an appendix of hymns suitable for congregational use in small parishes, the same to be made up of a selection of hymns which were regretably omitted from the old hymnal.

The real difficulty would be the transitional period. Some Wesleyan ministers would refuse episcopal ordination, and to make it easier for them the bishop proposes a "form of protestation" stating that their ordination does not deny the grace of their previous ministry, but merely provides an extended sphere for their future ministry. Anyone declining episcopal ordination could not minister at the altars of the Church of England. But otherwise the exchange of ministry would benefit us all. "Personally, I should love to take a Wesleyan service," said the bishop, "and many a Wesleyan minister might enjoy celebrating Holy Communion in one of our great parish churches." Finally, this union may lead to future reunion with other bodies.

? Is the Soldier Accountable to God ?
for His Individual Share in the War ?

—a question, the answer for which, many Christians are seeking today, is only a part of the age-long problem which

Prof. Loring W. Batten of General Theological Seminary, New York

treats and discusses in his new book, entitled

GOOD AND EVIL

¶ Prof. Batten's new book is recommended strongly to "Churchman" readers. The author is well known to many through his distinguished success of a quarter century at the General Theological Seminary, and his book is a fresh, broad, satisfying study—"the import of which," The Boston Transcript says, "no review can express."

THE LIVING CHURCH SAYS:

"The problem of evil in the world has always been the great stumbling block to faith. If God is a God of love, why did He not make the world good and keep it good? If evil is the result of sin, and sin a necessary possibility if man were to be given free will, why is not evil restrained? Why does suffering come alike to the just and the unjust? What shall we say of vicarious suffering? All these are problems we have always had with us; the great war has but brought them out into sharper outline."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN SAYS:

"Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN SAYS:

"The problem of good and evil in the world has always confronted men, and always will while good and evil exist. The treatment here presented is fresh, interesting and able."

TRAINING FOR INDUSTRY

SELECTING the student for the course instead of allowing her to decide aimlessly what work to specialize in is the latest development in the educational field which has been demonstrated as practicable by Bryn Mawr College.

Ten students were graduated from this course in employment management and supervision February 1. Each had had practical training in employment management in a particular line of manufacture and each is qualified to step into a factory and become an employment manager who will be a big asset to the firm from the start.

Miss Anna Bezanson, instructor, selected the students from a large number of applicants, permitting none to enter the course whom she would not hire were she employment manager of a factory. Miss Bezanson has had practical experience herself in one of the largest razor manufacturing concerns in the country.

The course was undertaken as a war measure to train college girls for responsible industrial positions. It was conducted in the closest co-operation with the Government and with large employers who recognized it as a precursor to revolutionary changes in the industrial educational system of the country. The course was financed by Bryn Mawr and by the National War Work Council of the Y. W. C. A.

IN THE MILL SETTLEMENTS

By E. S. Taylor

THE recent visit of Bishop Mikell to La Grange, Georgia, was marked by a very unusual occurrence. Besides the regular Confirmation at St. Mark's in the town, he consecrated two churches in the mill settlements. The Church of the Holy Comforter in the village of the Hillside Mill and the Church of the Good Shepherd in the village of the Unity Cotton Mills. These buildings were in connection with the work of the La Grange Settlement Training School. This work is pretty thoroughly known through the country—it was begun by the Rev. Henry Phillips and when he accepted a professorship in Sewanee, his brother, the Rev. R. L. Phillips, took his place.

The church people in Georgia are few in numbers, particularly so in the mill regions, but there were 150 at the Hillside service in the afternoon. The Sunday School children marched in the procession, singing "We march, we march to victory" and carrying their class banners—twelve of them continued on to the choir stalls, the rest being seated at the front of the church.

Many of the chancel furnishings have been donated, three complete sets of hangings have been given by the mission workers, a beautiful brass altar cross by the girls of the Sunday School and a hymn board by the boys. The litany desk is to be a memorial from the Hillside Mill office force to a former member, who was killed late in the war.

The night service in the Church of the Good Shepherd was made doubly interesting by the fact that the white robed choir was composed of nurses from the Hospital of the Good Shepherd. Other mission workers came down the aisle with them singing, "The Church's one foundation." As they reached the door, the bishop knocked, and it was opened to him by the rector and his assistant—all marched back to the chancel and concluded the service.

Redistributing the Rector's Salary

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just finished reading in the issue of March 15, Dr. Freeman's article, "A Supreme Hour For The Church," in which he quotes some leading business men in what we all know to be true: "That the most important agency in sight for the curing of present world problems is the Christian Church." And goes on himself to ask this question: "Will these great leaders look to the Church in vain?" He also states, and accurately, the condition of the Church in the West and Middle West. This condition is not local and includes whole dioceses and even provinces, and is due to three causes, lack of money, lack of men, and lack of proper leadership. Dr. Freeman suggests drastic measures and quick statesmanlike action; not only that the Church may fulfil her God-given mission, that of making the condition of the Church and nation better here and now, but to save her from further decline and disaster.

May I suggest what seems to me the only proper solution? This has been suggested a number of times before by others, but nothing has come of it. Perhaps because it seems so radical, but all over the world the impossible has been happening, and what at first seemed radical has often become the part of wisdom.

I would suggest that the various parishes and missions in any one diocese no longer call a rector because they want him, or think they want him, or he thinks he wants them, and receives the call through the recommendation of clerical friends, as is now the case in many instances to the detriment of the Church because of the fatal blunders that are made by connecting up the wrong rectors to the right parishes, or the right rectors to the wrong parishes. The average vestry fails in its judgments when calling a rector, and on the other hand most clergymen prefer the important or high-salaried parishes; this tendency results in the neglect of the smaller and weaker parishes and mission stations. Instead of this crude means of procedure, which has proven itself a failure, why not place in the hands of the bishop (if he be truly episcopal), or some one appointed for that purpose by him, the assigning of the right man to the right parish. For instance, if a parish is weak and in a disastrous condition and needs a vigorous and powerful man to build it up and put it on its feet, such a man could be placed there by the bishop, with untold benefits resulting therefrom, instead of that parish's having to accept some inferior man, or even a deacon (with all due respect to deacons), because such a man is the only one that can be induced to accept the call. Of course the powerful and vigorous man mentioned above, would have to be recompensed in a manner commensurate with his services, which would be an impossibility in the case of the weak parish. In order to counteract this difficulty, every parish and mission station in the diocese, should no longer pay each individual rector, and pay him in such a way that he is never apt to become a vigorous powerful man in any sense of the word. Each parish and mission—the large parishes as well as the small—should send all funds (except necessary running expenses) i. e. all general and diocesan assessments and apportionments, including the rector's salary, which might be made in the form of an assessment, to the diocesan treasurer, or a treasurer appointed for that purpose, who in turn could distribute it in a more equitable manner to the various clergy at their respective stations, somewhat in the manner that the Board of Missions is now doing in its Missionary districts.

I believe that if some such plan as this were carried out it would prove a success and the right sort of man would be willing to go into the weak places, glorying in the hard work and in his ability, by the grace of God, to accomplish the desired result, secure in the knowledge that for his efforts he at least would be recompensed by a living.

Of course a plan of this sort must have the co-operation of the clergy and laity of every parish, and they must be willing to lay aside self-interest and personal aggrandizement, willing to make sacrifices for the good of the Church here and now. They must have a larger vision of the future and the possibilities of the Church's carrying on the work of the Master in and for this nation. If our system is hindering the effectiveness of the Christ's work, let us change it. This sort of plan might be enlarged to include the parishes of a whole province, or reduced to include only the parishes within a convocation.

The Roman Catholic Church has used with success a similar plan, and I believe the Methodist Church has a plan somewhat similar and has found it successful.

Why Not Buy the New Hymnal?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am amazed over the hesitation of rectors to get the new hymnals promptly into the pews of their churches.

And yet as I have had opportunity during the past few days to note plans which eight or nine parishes are using to secure the hymnals, I think that I understand. One rector of a most influential parish "hopes to have the new hymnals in the pew by Easter." Another for Holy Week, and still another has the hymnals in the church but cannot use them yet, as there is danger that there will not be enough for any given Sunday. In every instance where rectors and vestries and parishes wish the hymnals and still are without them, I have noted that there is at least one of the following three reasons why the hymnals are not yet in the pews: First, there is a hope that some generous giver will present all the hymnals to the local church. Second, the vestry is planning to buy a number of the hymnals but hesitates to buy so many. Third, an effort is being made to get individual worshipers to buy their own hymnals. Just as many worshippers own their Prayer Books, they will be asked to own their hymnals.

Large gifts of hymnals should certainly not be discouraged. But the real appeal should be made to the individual to buy a hymnal not for himself but for the church. Each individual worshiper must be encouraged to present a hymnal to his parish church. And on the inside cover of the hymnal should be a printed slip, stating that the hymnal is presented to the church, and the name and street address of the individual written or typewritten thereon. Here is a chance for each parish church to express its democratic spirit. Each individual will feel a sense of ownership in his parish. He has purchased a hymnal, and his name and address is written therein, not for his own individual use, not for himself, but for his church. Incidentally this will not hurt a man's desire to attend the service, for will he not want to come sometime, just to see what has become of that hymnal that he gave to his church?

Three months ago, for my small parish, I ordered three hundred new hymnals—fifty to sell for the homes and two hundred and fifty for the pews of our church. I felt rather nervous for awhile over the prospect of having so many books on hand, and yet as I inquired from my brethren in the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches of my town I found that they could afford to have as many hymnals with music as worshippers. So I refused to change the order. I determined that I should not compromise with my original plan to have as many musical hymnals in the pews as Prayer Books.

The hymnals reached Winthrop eight days ago. Today the three hundred have all been sold—two hundred and sixty for the church and forty for the homes of the parish. I am frankly amazed over the success of the simple plan that was used. It was so simple that I do not see why it could not be used in any parish. I had planned to do four things: First, to send to my people through the printed monthly calendar two brief write-ups of the hymnal. Second, as soon as the hymnal arrived to write personal letters to one-fifth of my representative families, asking for an immediate gift, so that the hymnal could be used at once. Third, to use the small number of hymnals at once, and then appeal for more. Fourth, to appoint a large committee to see each individual worshiper, if necessary, so that we should have all the hymnals we needed for the following Sunday. The fourth plan was never mentioned, nor carried out, for I have already secured more new hymnals than I asked for.

Here is the printed note that I put in my monthly calendar twice:

"GIVE A MUSICAL HYMNAL TO ST. JOHN'S CHURCH is the request which the rector makes of each worshiper in St. John's. We shall need two hundred and fifty musical hymnals for the congregation and choir. And a few more than this number would not be out of place. Some families are already planning to have a record of one hundred per cent by the fact that each member of that family will present a hymnal to St. John's. A small neatly printed slip will be pasted on the inner front cover of each musical hymnal with the name of the individual giver typewritten therein. Thus there will be a most personal link between St. John's Church and the individual worshiper. The musical hymnal will cost one dollar.

Coca-Cola

Why Coca-Cola is so refreshing

The refreshing quality of Coca-Cola, which has made it a favorite with the millions, is the result of three factors which are entirely natural and wholesome.

First—Coca-Cola is prepared with cold, carbonated water, which alone is quite refreshing.

Second—Coca-Cola contains natural fruit flavorings, which, with pure sugar, are very refreshing.

Third—Coca-Cola contains a purified extract from tea, called caffeine, which is both wholesome and refreshing.

Coca-Cola may therefore be described as "a cold, carbonated, fruit-flavored improvement upon tea, of approximately one-fourth the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

Coca-Cola is entirely wholesome, delicious and refreshing.

"The retail price of the new musical hymnals is $1.50. Those presenting musical hymnals to the church who wish to get musical hymnals also for their homes can buy them from the rector as long as they last. He has fifty for this purpose, at the cost price of $1.00."

And the copy of the form letter that I sent to some of my most representative families is as follows:

"I am so anxious to get the new musical hymnals in the pews of St. John's Church that I have taken the personal responsibility of ordering two hundred and fifty copies.

"The books have just reached the rectory. The retail price is $1.50. By ordering a large number at one time I got the lowest wholesale price of $1.00.

AT Thirty-fourth street the kitten decided to cross the avenue. Carefully she put a paw into the hasty current of gasoline traffic. A snorting automobile almost washed her away. The kitten returned to the safe shelter on the sidewalk and hoisted a black tail of distress. Behold, her rescue was near! The policeman had noticed her misery. A white-gloved hand went up into the air, a shrill whistle was blown and a leisurely kitten crossed America's busiest thoroughfare at her own deliberate gait. The Drifter saw this and the Drifter liked it. The world is full of dreadful Bolsheviks and the world is full of dreadful Reactionaries and the world is full of Indifferent People and they are worse. But when we can all come together and cheerfully assist a black kitten to cross safely from Altman's to the Waldorf-Astoria—there is hope.

FROM Toccoa comes an appreciation of the Christian Nurture series, from which much success and inspiration has been derived. "We are all in love with the reverend little service," they write, "the Sunday School room has been beautified by a cross on the table, a silver alms basin, flowers and lights. The processions with many banners, pictures and stories keep the children interested. For some time they have sent five dollars every month and a half to the Syrian and Armenian Relief. One mother remarked that she never saw a school that loved to give as this one did. It is the more surprising as Toccoa is a small town.

"Epiphany season was celebrated by a Twelfth Night party. The Sunday School marching with banners, singing, carrying their gifts, (Epiphany offerings) and each child holding a lighted candle, surrounded the table, with its cake on which were placed the twelve lighted candles, the story of the cake was given, and then the festivities began"

THE LEAGUE AGAIN

THE liberal journals of America have now discovered that the draft of the covenant of the league which our President brought from Paris is not quite the league of nations upon which mankind had hungrily set its eyes, but that it is an alliance of the Entente, a continuing peace table. It has finally dawned upon the lovers of peace in the United States, England and France that this covenant is not likely to prevent war. We say this not in condemnation of the covenant, certainly not of those who labored to create it, but we remind our readers of this because the lovers of peace and those whose eyes are set upon a new world in diplomacy will have done their ideal a disservice if they fail to distinguish between the old order and the new at this searching crisis in the world's history.

THE CHURCHMAN was, so far as we know, the only liberal weekly religious journal in the United States that pointed out certain weaknesses and dangers in the covenant which Mr. Wilson submitted, six weeks ago, to the American people. In an editorial in our issue of February 22, we lamented the fact that what the nations were asked to accept was an alliance, not a league; that Article X of that covenant contains the seeds of future wars upon which America ought not to be asked to pledge herself to enter. Today nearly every liberal journal in the United States is taking precisely the position which THE CHURCHMAN took the week in which the twenty-six articles were first published to the world. If that draft of the covenant had been offered for criticism and not as a final document, as Mr. Wilson unfortunately led us to believe it was intended to be, there would have been less bitterness in the discussion of its merits.

Today we find such radicals as Walter Lippmann and William Hard saying in substance, but of course with more skilful precision and understanding, what THE CHURCHMAN modestly suggested six weeks ago. Today after weeks of mud throwing at those who presumed to attack the draft of the covenant, the New Republic has taken a right-about-face and now pronounces judgment that Article X must be defeated. We recall this not in any mood of complacency but because it enforces the lesson which we tried, when the draft was first published, to emphasize that "there is a broad distinction between an object to be attained and the means devised to attain it."

Ministers throughout the country are being asked to agitate for the acceptance of the league. This is an unreasonable request to make upon the clergy. What they ought to be asked to do is to stir up the consciences of men to strive for a league which shall establish and perpetuate the peace of the world. For until we know what will be the result of the peace conferences in Paris, until we know what settlement is made of the boundary disputes, we cannot conscientiously urge the acceptance of a contract that guarantees those boundaries. America will not sign that blank cheque! It is not in the interest of international idealism to do so.

In Paris a ravenous battle for loot is in progress. Mr. Wilson is fighting valiantly for a just settlement but there are heavy odds against him. Some months ago we ventured to say in an editorial upon Mr. Wilson's going to Paris: "We wish him Godspeed in his difficult mission and we hope that he will fight with all his indomitable will and the gifts of his versatile mind for the greatest cause that ever hung upon the counsels of statesmen." A conservative correspondent criticized that remark because of its implication that there was anybody to combat among those altruistic allies of ours at the peace table. Well, it has appeared that the old diplomacy is not quite dead yet. Mr. Wilson has had a fight or two upon his hands even among his idealistic comrades in the work of peace making.

Before we know how that fight is coming out, before we know how far France and Italy shall have disarranged the map of Europe, America cannot pledge herself to guarantee to those nations the peaceful possession of the territory the title deeds of which they may happen to carry away from Paris. We are no more enthusiastic over the document which calls itself a league of nations than we were six weeks ago. We look for amendments and revision. Without such revision, the league of nations is only a travesty upon the great ideal towards which liberal men throughout the world have been eagerly bending their eyes and lifting up their hearts.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

STATISTICS, recently published by the Bureau of the Census Department of Commerce, of divorces granted in our American courts show an alarming increase of the divorce evil in the United States. One divorce occurs for every nine marriages. The Church's attitude towards this problem has not been altogether commendable. We have made pronouncements about the sinfulness of divorce; we have said nothing about the wickedness of certain kinds of marriage. If the Church had, in the first place, refused to bless certain kinds of marriage, there, perhaps, might not have been so many divorces to condemn. The institution which makes marriage an indissoluble bond and sets its face condemningly against divorce ought to accept more responsibility than at present it is willing to accept in dictating what kind of marriage is fit to be blessed at the altars of our churches. We do not accept this responsibility. Rectors and bishops will marry any parishioner to anybody within the canon law, if they are asked to do so. They may know, as frequently they must have known, that many of the marriages which they perform ought never to take place. Divorce, scandal is not unlikely to follow such marriages. Social credentials are carefully scrutinized by mothers. It would be well if fathers insisted upon health certificates and moral credentials. A base commercialism plays altogether too large a part in the marriage question so far as the Episcopal Church touches the problem. Would it not be wholesome for the clergy to preach occasional sermons about the marriages that ought not to take place as well as an occasional sermon against divorce? While parents and the Church have so low a moral standard in making marriages, divorce is the only escape from the bondage of the kind of marriage that certainly was not made in heaven.

IN the Easter number of THE CHURCHMAN there will appear four full pages of illustrations of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, accompanied by an article by Dr. Ralph Adams Cram. These sketches will be printed in sepia tone on India cameo paper. Orders for this number of THE CHURCHMAN should be placed in advance, as many of our readers may wish to secure additional copies for their friends.

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

IF THINE ENEMY HUNGER

IT is easy for people on the side lines to criticize the gentlemen who are trying to patch up the map of Europe and hold civilization together at the same time, but it is a large sized job which they have undertaken and we ought to take for granted that they are tackling it as expeditiously as they know how to do. But we can't help wishing that they would hurry a bit to get food into Central Europe. The statement which Mr. Villard has recently made shows conditions to be graver than we thought. There have been some pretty hard words spoken among perfectly reputable Christian people regarding the proper treatment of the enemy. Not one of the kind ladies who has expressed a wish to see Germany starved and annihilated could for a moment endure seeing "infants in Berlin and Dresden hospitals with shrunken limbs and swollen stomachs" dying of hunger. It is easy to be cruel when the victim of our hate is not before our eyes. Most of the inhumane sentiments uttered among us were not more than skin deep.

It is dastardly unchristian not to feed Germany if we have the means at our disposal for feeding her. It is, as Mr. Lodge and many another has pointed out, exceedingly bad policy not to feed her. If there were less hysteria about Bolshevism and more wisdom in using preventives the world would have a happier look at the present moment.

OUR SOLDIERS IN COBLENZ

THE Living Age published recently an interesting extract from a Coblenz journal on the manners of our troops. A good deal of missionary work needs doing in Germany along the line of good manners. We are glad that American privates are teaching chivalry in German cities.

These gentlemen from abroad appear to have resolved upon restoring some of the courtesies that have fallen into disuse during the course of the war. They stand up in the crowded electric cars and offer their seats to any women, even though they be peasant girls. This is a custom that surprises us, habituated as we are to the rough ways of war time, like a memory from the ancient past. They make way for ladies on the sidewalks and step aside to let them enter the shops first. Indeed, the ladies in Coblenz have been much astonished at the excessive gallantry of the Yankees.

FORGETTING

IT was a stinging rebuke which Colonel Frank Billings, chief of the division of physical reconstruction of the office of the Surgeon-General, administered to the absentees at a meeting held last week in Carnegie Hall in the interest of rehabilitation. Experts from America and abroad were there to address the mass meeting on the care of the blind and maimed soldiers. Captain Edwin A. Baker, one of the first men to enlist from Canada, winner of the Croix de Guerre, blinded in battle, was there to tell what can be done for the blind, but a scant three hundred men and women out of Greater New York were present to consider these problems.

New York deserved this rebuke of Colonel Billings:

It behooves us now to keep up the morale of the wounded soldier—it behooves every one who has a grain of influence to encourage the wounded man to stay in the military hospital till he has received the education the Government is willing to give him, that will enable him to take a man's place among men. We aren't going to accomplish the rehabilitation of the wounded men easily. It isn't going to be done by turnouts like this—by one-tenth of the people who should be here coming to a meeting on a subject that should be near our hearts. I appeal for the support of all men and women for this work. Support the papers that are published in the military hospitals, take an interest in the reconstruction of those who have risked their lives and come back no longer whole. Don't be guilty of forgetting.

After all, people do like war. They will crowd the streets and the biggest hall in town to cheer a declaration of war. The cleaning up afterward is not so thrilling a task. But we have got the job to do, and it must be done with generous, Christian enthusiasm. No boy maimed in this war must beg people to listen to his needs. It will be an unspeakable shame if we forget.

CHURCH CONGRESS

A WIDE interest attaches to the Church Congress, which will be held in Synod Hall, New York, beginning Tuesday, April 29. We are publishing in this issue pictures of some of the speakers who are to take part in the discussions. The Church Congress is playing an important part in our church life. This is the Church's only open forum for the free handling of problems which lie near to the surface of contemporary life. All of the topics to be discussed at this Congress are "live" topics. There will be opportunity for churchmen not on the program to take part in the debate, so that the meetings are relieved of chill formality. The committee on publicity is especially desirous that people from out of town attend these meetings. The Church Congress belongs to the whole Church. It is not a local enterprise.

THE PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

MORE hope is to be placed upon the permanent secretariat which the league is to set up than upon any other feature of the document now being discussed. This secretariat will, we trust, keep light playing upon all the dark places in international relationships, thus preventing disease spots from which war may spring. This secretariat ought to become the eyes of the nations. Publicity is the cure for many ills. We have never had any international bureau of publicity. The league cannot enforce peace unless the nations desire peace, but the league can prevent war by "adding fresh links to the chain of international friendship, and by eliminating all accidental or artificial causes of hostility." Imagine, too, disinterested scientists, physicians, economic and educational experts sitting upon these international boards, freely offering their best brain not merely for the advantaging of their own countries but of the whole world. What a board of missions!

SEATS FOR THE LADIES

IT is worth noting as the reports of the diocesan conventions come in, how the voice of women is being heard more and more distinctly in these ecclesiastical councils. In dioceses where there are houses of churchwomen, the deliberations of that consultative body seem to command each year a larger share of attention. Frequently the house of churchwomen and the diocesan convention have at least one joint session. The number of dioceses where women are admitted to convention as deputies or where houses of churchwomen are established is slowly increasing. The synod of the Province of New England has made a departure from the ordinary use of synods by inviting two members of each diocesan organization of the Woman's Auxiliary, G. F. S. and Daughters of the King to have seats in the synod. Of course these delegates have no vote. We understand that there was a good deal of opposition to even this emasculated form of representation; those in the opposition feared, and probably not without good reason, that the next step would be to offer votes as well as seats. But, as one of the members of the synod said, it is not quite chivalrous to invite the ladies to the synod and then not to ask them to sit down! A still more radical departure is the action taken by the Board of Missions at their recent meeting in which they approved the proposed national organization of the Woman's Auxiliary including the much debated sixth article which provides for women members of the board. The Board of Missions is ready to welcome the ladies just as soon as the ladies themselves express a desire to come. It will be interesting to watch developments in Detroit next October.

PUNISHING THE GUILTY

THE peace conference has a good deal to attend to. Everybody is helping out with suggestions. We don't press the matter, but we sincerely hope that time will be found to bring to trial the gentlemen who are primarily responsible for turning the world upside down. Nothing will serve better to put a stigma upon war and to make militarists see themselves as others see them than making it a crime to conspire to murder whole populations by war. That is what Potsdam is guilty of having done.

A SUGGESTION FOR A THANK-OFFERING

IN a letter received at THE CHURCHMAN office the other day, there came the following proposal, to which we are glad to give space in our columns:

Will you please see that the enclosed check, a small thank-offering for a safe return from France, be put in the proper channel. Just by way of suggestion, could this not be made general in helping the Board of Missions out in meeting its obligations? I am sending a similar check to them today. Many devoted members of the Church, fathers and mothers and others, and even the men themselves who return, would be happy to follow out this suggestion, I firmly believe.

Perhaps the best test of the sincerity of gratitude is the method we pursue to express our thankfulness. "A safe return from France"—how many heartfelt prayers have been offered to God for that blessing! How fine it would be if every such prayer should find practical expression in an offering to missions. Those who went to France offered themselves for the preservation of their country and the safety of the world. In Arthur Russell Taylor's Mr. Squem and Some Male Triangles occurs this touching good-bye from Mr. Smiley to his small Samuel, as the father takes leave of his home for the army: "Good-bye" said Mr. Smiley to the small Samuel. "I don't know how I'm going to stand for it, old chum, I sure don't. I just couldn't go if it wasn't for one thing: we are going to make 'em stop taking their daddies away from little tads like you."

After all, that is what lay beneath the fierce patriotism of this war. Can we hope to do away with war unless we inform the world with a new spirit, the spirit of Christ Jesus? The Board of Missions is in charge of a diplomacy which is preaching peace to them that are far off and to them that are nigh. Let us make our thank-offering a gift to spread the Gospel!

REFORMED MOTHERS' MEETINGS

THE name might be misconstrued, but most of us would agree that mothers' meetings need reformation pretty badly and the expression "Reformed Mothers' Meetings" is taken directly from the title page of a little book recently published in London which seems to set one's feet on the direct path to possible improvement. The book is called Studies and Discussions for the Women's Fellowship and Reformed Mothers' Meeting (by Elma K. Paget, Longmans, Green and Co. 60c.) and consists of outline notes which illustrate certain big principles: first, that the whole of life can be taught as a spiritual object; second, that we begin to grow old only when we cease to learn; third, that the best way to raise low or dulled ideals is to give new interests and new visions. Accordingly talks for mothers' meetings are outlined on the history and organization of the Church, the primary object of which is to make the household of faith, its officers and its organization, understood by the people. Lessons on morality, talks on the factory acts, lessons on the food supply, are suggested in which social responsibility is related to the Christian profession.

The suggestion implied in these Studies and Discussions is a good one. Guild meetings, especially the meetings of guilds designed for the social and spiritual uplift of the less privileged members of a parish, are often sadly frittered away by unskilful leaders. The hour a week at the parish house can be made to serve a more constructive purpose if sewing, talk and tea be supplemented by definite teaching designed to help the members of the guild interpret their Christian faith in the daily contacts of home and factory and shop. Instructions in the duties of heavenly citizenship need to be supplemented by instructions in the heavenly duties of earthly citizenship. A year ago in New York a number of classes on civic responsibility were conducted in the city parishes under the auspices of a club of churchwomen. The most responsive groups proved to be those composed of members of mothers' meetings.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Using the Usual

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The wise man's eyes are in his head, but the fool walketh in darkness. Ecclesiastes, II-14.

AND he would walk in darkness, if he had as many eyes as a fly; because he has no eyes behind his eyes; he sees without seeing; he has sight but not insight. He only sees; he never observes.

I want to speak to you to-night of Using the Usual, or Chances Where You are.

Recall one of Jesus' parables. Dives in perdition is praying for his brethren, whom he now knows to be on their way to the same place. He wants to see them arrested in their course; and so he asks Abraham that there may be injected into their lives some unusual opportunity. And Abraham says "No; the man who fails to learn the meaning of his life in the midst of that which is common would find the uncommon of very little value." . . . "Abraham saith unto him, they have Moses and the Prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, Father Abraham: But if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

This is what I mean, in the selection of this topic: That if you can not make a success of life just where you are, all the probability is that you could not make a success of it anywhere nor anyhow. If the inspirations all around you, the inspirations and the opportunities at your right hand, are not enough to make you the kind of man or woman you ought to be, neither would you be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

Let us consider a few propositions; and the first is this: A man's best things are nearest to him. The most important thing you can have is air, and you do not have to seek it, it is seeking you. The same is true of sunlight, and of water. For many millions of years electric energy continued to say to men in every lightning's flash: "I will carry your burdens for you. I will do your drudgery. I will make life a thousand times richer in every way." And all that time they were doubtless wishing for some great and miraculous intervention of Providence to improve their lives; and it is less than a hundred years ago that they began to suspect how rich they were. The most wonderful thing about the modern application of electricity is that it is modern.

In one of George Macdonald's stories he tells of an old man who, with his son, lived in an ancient castle. They were very poor. They could not sell the castle, and they were starving. And all the time, inside the walls, were lying many precious jewels which long before had been placed there by one of their ancestors for just such an hour of need. They were rich beyond their dreams, and their riches were just within their grasp, but they never knew it. Our best things are nearest to us.

Here is another proposition: The world's successful men have not been those who have wasted their time in dreaming of the future, but who, while keeping their eyes upon what lay beyond, have been most intent in faithfully performing the duty of the hour.

There is nothing more interesting than the study of the origin of inventions. You will find, in almost every instance, that these came, not to those who were searching for them, but as a by-product of a man's daily work; and yet they came to one who had learned to see; to him who not only had sight, but insight; to the "wise man," whose eyes were in his head, not to the "fool," who, though he had just as many eyes, continued to walk in darkness.

Every one of us is living to-day face to face with some opportunity which could create for us a fortune if we could only see it. We are prone to fancy that if we could but travel to some far distant country, or have some miraculous vision rise from the dead to point the way, we would find our chance. And all the time our chance is doing the best it can to find us. Let me explain what I mean.

One of my friends, the Rev. Russell Conwell, D.D., of Philadelphia, one of the most brilliant and helpful preachers in the United States—a man who for thirty years has by his lectures made an annual income of ten thousand dollars, and given every penny of it to God—was years ago speaking in New Britain, Connecticut.

He said, "Your wealth is too near you. You are looking right over it." A lady sat in the audience with her husband, and that night she attempted to take off her collar, and after considerable tugging and pulling on her part the collar button broke. She threw it away with impatience and exclaimed, "Why doesn't somebody make a decent collar button?" And her husband answered, "Why don't you?" Conwell said tonight that wherever there is a need there is a fortune. If you feel that need, you may be sure a great many other people feel it just as badly. Invent a collar button, and get rich." And she did. She invented the snap-button with which we are all familiar, or were a few years ago, made in two pieces. And from it she got rich; very rich. For twenty years she had been carrying that fortune right under her nose, and she never saw it. It was too near.

Now, all through those years it was just as near to us as it was to her. The only difference between her and the rest of us who afterward bought what she thought, was that her eyes were in her head, while we walked in darkness. And it is not impossible that the next invention which shall reap a fortune is just as near to you as it is to the man who will reap it. He is using the usual to attain the unusual. You are using it to throw it away, with no thought of its meaning.

I want to remind you that this is true not only of our temporal prosperity, but of our mental serenity. You wish to be happy. If you cannot be happy where you are, I doubt whether you could anywhere. I once heard the Rev. Charles Spurgeon, in his London Tabernacle, tell of his grandfather looking everywhere for his spectacles, and then he found them on his head, where he had pushed them. You look for happiness, but you look too far. It is closer to you than you think.

And that is true, also, of spiritual opportunities. Old John Bunyan tells us that Christian, on his way to the Celestial City, found himself shut up in the dungeon of Giant Despair. For a time he thought that all was lost. And when he escaped, it was with the key which he found in his own breast: the "key of the promises," which he had forgotten to use. I do not care what your troubles may be to-day, a Christian life of peace and usefulness and happiness is possible to you just where you are, if you only use the God-granted chances that are constantly at your door.

THE RED CROSS CHAPLAIN

BY THE RT. REV. JAMES DE WOLF PERRY, D.D.

THE organization of medical units in the spring and summer of 1917 included the chaplain as a matter of tradition and of course. Former wars were not so long ago, the battle lines in France not so far distant, that the place of the padre in the hospital could be entirely overlooked. Therefore, not always as a matter of vital necessity, not infrequently by way of compliment to a friendly parson, the chaplain appeared in the lists of official personnel submitted to the Government for militarization. When the tables of commissioned officers were published the chaplain was excluded. No general notice was taken of the omission. The business of war was not yet comprehended in terms of common suffering. The casualty list had not yet touched the imagination of an elated public,—much less the official mind. Hospitalization was a matter of efficient functioning by the medical profession, and with this what had the chaplain to do? Many medical officers knew what he had to do with the morale of a unit, and ultimately with service in the wards. This is a lesson learned in the bitter experience of every war, but the first chapter is and ever has been a story of indifference. Thus it happened that the militarization of the hospital chaplain was "disapproved." No restriction was placed upon his service with the unit; he was simply left in his original status as a Red Cross volunteer without military rank.

But the volunteer spirit seemed to be quickened rather than discouraged by the adverse decision. Picked men of many denominations left positions of responsibility to accept appointments for overseas service in medical units. With the first hospitals to arrive in France were bishops, rectors of large city parishes, teachers and young men in the first flush of a successful ministry. Others appeared in the medical training camps at Oglethorpe and elsewhere, awaiting the order for transportation. In the first winter of the war, hospitals at the American ports of entry in France and at several bases in the interior had included in their schedule regular church services and daily ministrations in the wards, conducted by their own chaplains. Four of these were serving in the British zone (Étaples, Boulogne, Trèport and Rouen), one in the French, others in the Red Cross hospitals near Paris,—the base hospital at Chaumont, at Dijon, Savenay, Vittel, Contrexeville, and in the vicinities of Bordeaux, St. Nazaire and Brest. As yet no central organization directed their assignments and their work. The office of senior chaplain at army headquarters, created by the commander-in-chief and filled by his appointment of Bishop Brent, was calling order out of chaos in the service of troop chaplains, but not yet functioning in any but field hospitals. In the Red Cross offices at 4 Place de la Concorde there was gradually taking shape the immense system into which the welfare activities at all the hospitals were soon to be incorporated.

This was the situation in February, 1918, when the

In this article Bishop Perry, who has been serving as Chief of the Red Cross Chaplains in France, gives to The Churchman readers the first published story of the Red Cross Chaplains. The account, embodying Bishop Perry's experience in the war zone, will be continued in succeeding issues of The Churchman.—Editor.

commissioner for France, Colonel James M. Perkins, requested the Bishop of Western Michigan, the Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, then in Paris representing the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, to organize the Red Cross Chaplains' Bureau and serve as chief with rank of major for the assignment and supervision of chaplains at base, evacuation and mobile hospitals. Bishop McCormick accepted the appointment on the understanding that the new bureau should work in close liason with G. H. Q. chaplains' office. With him were associated, as members of the official staff, Father William A. Hemmick of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Washington, D. C., and the Rev. Robert Davis, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Englewood, New Jersey.

The first matter of importance to engage the attention of the bureau was an increase in the number of available chaplains. Until this time no recruits had been called for assignment. Appointments had been made only before invitation by commanding officers. There were now arriving every week, and moving to their bases, hospitals to which no chaplains were attached. Evacuation and mobile units were being organized and sent to positions in the Vosges, where the American troops were going into the line, as Evacuation No. 1 at Toul, No. 2 at Baccarat, and later No. 39 at Allnois in Lorraine.

A cable was sent through Red Cross headquarters at Washington, calling for volunteers, the first six available for immediate transportation,—thereafter twenty a month until vacancies should be filled. Church commissions were notified and recruiting began. No attempt was made to distribute the appointments among denominations by allotment. The work required haste, and the machinery by which the quotas of army chaplains were filled on a basis of proportions had caused provoking and serious delay. For Red Cross service the Roman Catholic Chaplains' Board, the War-Time Commission of the Churches, and the Episcopal War Commission were requested to send names of applicants who could qualify for immediate enrollment. So it happened that the large majority of the first two groups were Episcopalians. Later appointments were more evenly divided. Before the end of March five applicants had qualified and were on the way. In another eight weeks twenty-four were added, representing the Roman Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, Christian and Dutch Reformed Churches. On their arrival there was a waiting time of a few days in Paris, while the indispensable red "worker's cards" were prepared under the watchful eye of the French Government. Then they went out either singly or, when conditions required and numbers permitted, in pairs to report to their commanding officers, announce their services, take their allotted duties with their units and their daily rounds in the wards.

Strangely varied in manner of life and in environment were the conditions which awaited them. At Mont-pont, among the hills east of Bordeaux, an ancient monastery harbored Base No. 3, while No. 1 luxuriated in the group of fashionable hotels and turned its convalescent patients out to bask in the parks and promenades of Vichy. Other resorts among the hills of Puy de Dome at Royat and Châtel Guyon, or in the Vosges at Vittel and Contrexeville, offered alluring retreats in terraced gardens, spacious courts and groves. In cruel contrast with these were the flat plains of deep dust in summer and unspeakable mud through the numberless other unnamed seasons of France, where cities of frame or concrete hospital barracks sprang and spread like some rank growth to challenge the unfailing skill and discipline of the official staff. Under the shadow of St. Denys' Cathedral the stately though cold columned buildings of Napoleon's school for the daughters of the Legion of Honor were warmed by the gracious hospitality of the officers of the University of Virginia. Groups of dingy French hospital buildings at Nantes and Bordeaux were expanded and transformed by the magical touch of the units from the Philadelphia Episcopal Hospital and the Massachusetts General; while the Cleveland unit and Base No. 202 made themselves at home in the cathedral cities of Rouen and Orleans. Far to the east, like outposts defying the menace of adjacent hostile lines, and suffering the terrors of unheralded air raids by day and night, were the evacuation hospitals—No. 1 spreading over the flat plains of Sebastopol just north of Toul, Nos. 6 and 7 following hard upon the heels of battle from Château Thierry to Souilly, where through the late summer and autumn they were to gather the human wreckage from the struggles of St. Mihiel and the Argonne.

A few miles farther to the north and east, Evacuation No. 8 and Mobiles No. 1 and No. 2 stood near Verdun.

At every one of these and many another the chaplain found, for the most part, the same opportunities and the same problems. The personnel, consisting of the medical staff, the nurses and the orderlies, constituted his parish. They were not always parochially inclined, nor usually predisposed to his mission. He had to make his way against pre-occupation, often against prejudice. As he went in and out among them from day to day, sharing their hardships, gaining their confidence, he became known as the friend, pastor, priest of the unit. Somewhere in the hospital lie had his altar. It might be in a tiny office chapel, where a very few would gather in the early morning, or if space permitted in an ample building appointed as a church. Here or in a Red Cross hut or mess hall the congregations met for Sunday services, a marked event in the program of the week. At certain well favored points, as at Vittel, Royat, Contrexeville and Châtel Guyon, little English chapels were given over to the chaplains who became by common consent ministers in residence for whole communities. Services in wards were of necessity restricted to a minimum. On Sunday morning a chaplain would go from ward to ward, holding in each a service of four minutes while doctors and nurses suspended work. There would be a few brief collects, a single passage for a lesson, a two minute sermon and the benediction. Forty wards in our hospitals where this order was followed every week left the impress of Sunday on the patients—and on the chaplains.

THE LEAGUE: A WESTERN POINT OF VIEW

BY THE REV. HAROLD S. BREWSTER

WHEN the President of the United States is so severely attacked for trying to express the feeling of the American people, it is the height of presumption for a missionary, in an obscure town on the Pacific slope, to attempt to give the feeling of the West in regard to the League of Nations. The fact that a man has lived in some region does not give him the rare qualities which enable him to interpret the life of which he has been a part: and the following impression is given only at the request of one for whom his friends would undertake almost any task.

But while the interpretative ability herein represented is not of a high order, the writer's associations have been such as to make it impossible not to discover a great deal with regard to the feelings of the various sorts and conditions of men who make this western civilization the fascinating study that it is. For, after all, when once the ice is broken and one has been received into the good-fellowship which gathers regularly in the "Brewery Gulch" establishments where Bevo and buttermilk formerly did not play the leading rôles, it is not difficult to know what the intelligent miner says to his mate as together they eat their noonday meal in the uncertain light of the carbide "bug." Nor is it any more difficult, if he has Union credentials in some legitimate organization, to know what the train crews are saying as, in journeying from mission to mission, he mingles with the pure democracy of the caboose. What these men say, moreover, is little different from the views of the "homesteader" wrestling with an exacting soil under a trying sun or those of the cowboys on the range: for all these groups incline to think and act together.

In the downright frankness of the West they are clearly distinguished in character and aspirations from the so-called "big men" whose consuming aim seems to them to be to exploit the western resources and people, amass a fabulous fortune, and build a palace on Fifth Avenue. These men in their insatiable greed for undeserved concessions are believed always to be polluting the springs of government and corrupting the administration of the law. They are everywhere supposed to have obtained control of the daily press in such a way that pure journalism has not even a clever imitation on the Pacific slope.

Thus, in this region, sharp social and political distinctions stand out as clearly as the details of the landscape in our crystal sunlight. We have here, obviously, that same phenomenon which has appeared everywhere abroad. That major element of humanity which greeted our great war President at the wharves of Brest and thronged the thoroughfares of Paris, London and Rome, shouting their admiration for him and sharing his saving vision of a better day, is found here in all its vigor. Our proletariat may be more fortunate in its material conditions than that of Europe but it has the same clear consciousness that democracy is at its supreme crisis—that now is the psychological moment for making a long stride toward real democracy by raising humanitarianism above the commercialism which is its mortal enemy. Now if ever must be struck the blow that shall redeem us from our bondage to an unpicturesque, anti-idealistic, bourgeois aristocracy; and out here on the desert you will frequently hear from the most unlikely sources the expression of the opinion that, if we are not freed through the strong gentleness of one disciplined to the highest point of refinement by the humanities, we shall see a reckless dash toward freedom by an angry multitude developed by inhumanities.

For, in the West, the opposition to the League of Nations is clearly seen to be bound up with commercialism. We know (what the East seems to ignore) that those who are deriving vast fortunes through metal production do not want armaments to diminish and wars to cease. In the past few months I have heard, personally, numerous conversations between mine owners and managers in which the beneficent effects of war were so extolled that one almost regretted that wars had to cease even temporarily. One of the leading attorneys for the dominant mining corporation of Arizona has seldom made a speech during the last four years without devoting some of his time to a demonstration of the untold good that war accomplishes.

For those familiar with these facts it is impossible not to be suspicious when the most violent attack upon the League of Nations is begun by a senator from a mining state who is high in favor with the mining corporations. The case of his colleague from a state on the Mexican border is more patent. This man, whose sense of senatorial dignity has to be judged by his refusal to dine at the White House for honest discussion, has confessed publicly that he has financial interests in Mexico: and he is, undoubtedly, heart and soul behind the hideous movement now appearing in the Southwest "to settle Mexico's affairs for her own good," which is a euphemism for displaying our Teutonic inheritance in looting a sister nation. His bitter and intense dislike for the President is largely due to Mr. Wilson's masterly defeat of the jingoes in their former designs upon Mexico.

For a similar reason that high priest of all jingoes, Mr. Hearst, takes his proper place in the opposition. No more is he reviled by the élite as unpatriotic, and his advocacy of government ownership, which is the real cause of the virulence with which he has lately been treated, is now forgotten in his service against the league. He has never been very severe against Teutonic rapacity, and the Hearst interests in Mexico will soon demand a recourse to militarism. His interests are one with those of the munitions combine in regard to the suppression of all pacific tendencies in America.

The Hearst element in the opposition is not exceptional but characteristic of the entire movement. Good men, no doubt, oppose the league in all sincerity: but those in political life whose reputations are most unsavory are loudest in opposition.

The first reason, then, why the common people of the West advocate the League of Nations is the nature of the opposition to it. We would not deny that sincere men in the Senate may oppose the league because they fear that it will embroil us in too many future struggles. But we know that, in this region at least, it is most violently fought by those who are afraid that it will prevent too many conflicts. We know of no better argument for the league than that, to a man, the militarists and munitions profiteers are against it.

We are no more impressed by the ostensible fear of European embroilments than we are impressed by the ghastly cynicism of that group of senators which, in making a resolution against the league, affirmed, with carefully composed faces, their desire for world peace. We remember that those papers which are now loudest in the maudlin hue and cry about the President's compromising the Monroe Doctrine were, only yesterday, branding him as infamous because he did not urge war the moment Belgian soil was invaded.

Our papers would not give the impression that we feel as we do. But our papers, thank God, are not ourselves. They do guide us but they guide us in the opposite direction from that to which they point. When our "subsidized press" urges anything we usually vote against it: and the best known paper in California almost invariably defeats the candidates whom it supports.

But there are more constructive reasons why we favor the league. We like to think that our western country is big-hearted and large-minded. So that the West naturally takes it for granted that, in entering a league of nations, our own nation must make concessions. Such concessions are, obviously, the absolute prerequisite of world peace. The West instinctively believes in the square deal and is sincere enough in that belief to carry it into international relations. We westerners may not all be so versed in the New Testament as to carry with us the continual consciousness, which is the first element of the Christian faith, that he that loseth his life shall find it, but the obvious lesson of Prussia that the nation which exalteth itself shall be abased has not escaped us; and many of us feel that a nation which in the presence of what the Holy Spirit is now saying to all men of goodwill, would think only of military, naval and commercial supremacy, is, if there be any justice in heaven, a damned nation.

But the West is also large-minded. It has not as yet attained a high degree of culture but it has far less than the East of the illiterate bourgeois prejudice against letting men profoundly learned in political questions handle political issues. This anti-cultural prejudice is, to all who are capable of refinement, the most ominous symptom with regard to the future development of America. Clever writers in the Atlantic Monthly have for several years been bewailing our American lack of culture and attributing our best selling novels and their parallel bad art and bad music to advancing democracy. With regard to the symptoms these writers are accurate but they have mistaken utterly the disease. Democracy has not been advancing and the evils which they rightly decry are the necessary outcome of the triumph of mercantile-bourgeois aristocracy, the inevitable goal of which is plutocracy. The certain indication of a tendency in this direction is a permeating contempt for idealism.

The mind of the West has not yet so shrunk as not to admit of a saving idealism. That is why the West is doing big things, for it is only in the mind large enough for great ideals that great practical projects can be conceived. Because Jefferson was big enough to give the nation its democratic ideals, he was big enough to make the Louisiana Purchase. Lincoln who saved Jeffersonian idealism to the nation and gave that idealism its classic expression, was so practical that we are now beginning to realize that many of the worst mistakes of the Civil War would have been avoided if his advice had not been rejected. We do not make the clodhopper distinction between idealism and practicality.

For there is one belief held by the overwhelming majority of common men in the West whether they be Democrats or Republicans; and that is that the consensus of the world's opinion, outside of the United States, with regard to the President is fully justified. That section of the country which aims to accept a man on nothing but his intrinsic worth feels that the God who prepared and provided Washington's genius for the issues of his day, and who gave Lincoln for the crisis through which he guided our fathers, has again visited His people with a genius, inspired through laborious preparation, for a service that shall make all men hereafter rise up and call him blessed.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS—A SYMPOSIUM

A FORTNIGHT ago THE CHURCHMAN telegraphed to several of our bishops in the West for an expression of opinion on the draft covenant of the League of Nations which Mr. Wilson presented to the Paris conference. Owing to the delay in the mails, we have just heard from Bishop Johnson, Bishop Nichols and Bishop Faber.—EDITOR.

The Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D.D.—The League of Nations as conceived by Mr. Wilson and put forth by the peace conference is a program for the future understanding between nations. It has the limitations that any program has which contemplates something new under the sun. And it is impossible to say how practical it is before it is attempted. It is a tremendous forward step from the Hague Conference. It is a tremendous improvement upon the iniquities of secret diplomacy. It is an effort for the nations of the earth to get together and work out the problems of internationalism without bloodshed. It is opposed, like the efforts at church unity by partisan prejudice, by vested interests, and by conscientious objectors. In its details it may prove very faulty, but no living man has the wisdom to foretell how it will work or fail to work. It is a sin and a shame that men are not big enough to consider a question propounded not only by President Wilson, but by the leading statesmen of France and England, which is a question of universal importance on other than petty grounds, because of a personal dislike for Mr. Wilson, or a fear of its effect on local politics, or a narrow vision of national responsibility. If it was our duty to interfere in Europe in the time of war, the difficulties and dangers which confront Europe and the United States are just as great today as they were in 1917 or 1918, and those who cried for war then, are not the ones today to urge a policy of non-intervention. Bolshevism is a far more universal danger than Prussianism, and one cannot hide behind the Monroe Doctrine to save us from its dangers.

I would not say that it was unchristian to oppose the League of Nations, because I believe that the Gospel of Christ does not deal with international politics, but I would say that it is a consummation devoutly to be hoped for and to block its progress at this stage is a piece of reactionary stupidity, for it is an attempt to block a plan of universal action which may be faulty as to its details, but which is comprehensive enough to serve as a working hypothesis to protect the world from militarism, Bolshevism and political chauvinism.

The Rt. Rev. William Frederic Faber, D.D.—My earnest feeling about the proposed League of Nations has been expressed for me, much better than I could express it myself, by Archdeacon Greig in his cathedral sermon recently printed by you. But why speak of it as "Mr. Wilson's draft?" It is the unanimous report of the representatives of fourteen nations; it would be assuming rather more than the most devoted admirer of our President would be prepared to claim for him, that the representatives of thirteen other nations meekly affixed their signatures to a document drawn up by him! He was the chairman of the commission, but the covenant is the result of much discussion and careful deliberation on the part of all its members. To my mind the opposition to this draft is largely due to personal antagonism to the President. Had it been totally different from what it is, the fury of those who hate Mr. Wilson would have been poured out upon it just the same.

"Is one un-Christian if he oppose this plan?" Well, that would depend entirely upon why he opposed it. If upon impartial and non-partisan grounds, upon reasoned grounds, convinced that the great good desired by every Christian soul can be secured by a better plan—and by a practicable plan—then, "No." But if opposed on grounds of chauvinism, of political or commercial selfishness in the guise of patriotism,—then, "Yes." Or if because of inert or timid conservatism,—"Yes" again. Christianity is essentially international and missionary, therefore demands constant sacrifice, and that vision and faith which ever press on to newer, better things.

But this covenant is not more bitterly assailed than was the Constitution of the United States in 1787. Of it, as of that, may be said in the words of George Washington, "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair. The event is in the hand of God." And the Constitution required ten amendments in the first two years. How imperfect the first draft!

The Rt. Rev. William F. Nichols, D.D.—The "Holy Alliance" of sinister record, but of dexter interest on the part of some of its framers at any rate, has been called more of a creed than a treaty. It began in the name of the undivided Trinity. It professed the principles of the Sermon on the Mount. It seemed to commit the world of 1815 to the coruscation of a new Christian era. But those visioning the ideal were not those actually making history. And those making the history were not those who formulated the vision. Metternich "of adroit diplomacy" was by no means Czar Alexander I. with his "religious emotionalism."

From the outside at this distance it would seem that those sitting around the Paris peace table of 1919 had something of the same sort of diversity of projet. Some articulate a creed of human progress. Others are intent upon practical policies. All agree upon a league of nations, but some accept its theory but are not prepared to try to carry it into effect either as it was or is. The query is: Will the two blend their energies? The complexion of the peace commission of 1919 is by no means the same as that of 1815 as the articles of the League of Nations are in form and spirit far different from the text of the Holy Alliance.

THE IDEAL IS SECURE

In the Holy Alliance the practical policies that were to prevail were dissembled, the promoters of them treating the vision of it as visionnaire and negligible. Though any explicit recognition of God's agency in the history making present and future is conspicuous by its absence in the twenty-six articles of the modern League of Nations, we may hope that it really animates in large measure those who have framed it. The League of the Nations is implicit where the Holy Alliance was explicit in the profession of a reliance upon the Prince of Peace. The real backing of the league is explicit in its reputed standing for the righteousness of God where the manipulators of the alliance were not even implicit. The running criticism of the league is not directed against its sincerity but against its security. The ideal of world federation is secure as distinct from any passing phraseology. If the actual deal of the nations has to wait awhile yet, we remember that even the ideal has had to wait several centuries before reaching its present vogue. Let us thank God and take courage.

The Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D.D.: The league originates not in Utopia, but in the Congress of Versailles. In essence it is a continuation of the peace conference. The five great powers which ultimately control the conference will exert a preponderating influence in the league. The problems with which the league will deal are foreshadowed by the problems with which the conference is dealing.

These facts indicate both the limitations of the covenant, and its strength. The league does not begin as an all-inclusive society of nations, and by excluding Russia and the Central Powers it risks the danger of a Teuton-Slav combination. But this unavoidable risk has been minimized by Article VII which offers to the excluded powers the hope of ultimate admission. The incentive to qualify for admission would be strengthened if provision were also made for their ultimate representation upon the executive council. Like the congress, the covenant is backward in dealing with economic barriers. Provision might well be made for a greater degree of popular representation. In default of democratic control, Article X, with its territorial guarantees, might become exceedingly dangerous.

These defects can be remedied by the growth of democratic feeling and control. In the meanwhile the league, by greatly lessening the danger of war, will enable the peaceful growth of the sentiments which will ultimately control it. Its strength lies in its political realism. It solidifies the union of the nations associated in the defense and maintenance of public right, and it perpetuates their co-operation. It lifts the world out of international anarchy. It provides an organ of the human conscience to which every government on earth becomes answerable. All things considered, it is the most promising effort ever made to organize the major political forces of the world in the interests of justice and of peace.

THE STRANGER

BY F. W. HARVEY

IT happened in a blood-red hell ringed round with golden weather;
Walking in khaki through a trench he came,
When life was death, and wounded men and great shells screamed together:
I did not know his name.

But so white-faced and wan, we talked a little while together
Amongst dead men, and timbers black with flame.
"What would you do with life again," asks he, "if one could give it?"
"No use to talk when life is done," I say.
"But, by the living God, if He should grant me life I'd live it
Kinder to man, truer to God each day."

Flame and the noise of doom devoured the words, and for a while Senseless I lay. . . . Then,
Oh, then as in a dream I saw the stranger with a smile
Moving towards me over the dead men.

Red, red were his hands and feet and a great hole in his side,
Yet glory seemed to blaze about his head;
"Kinder to man, truer to God," he whispered, and then died;
Falling down, arms outspread.
Ere darkness fell upon me with the faintness and the pain,
I saw a mangled body lying prone
Upon the earth beside me. But what I can't explain
Is—The stretcher-bearers found me quite alone.

But, howsoever it happened, it matters not at last,
Since God's dear Son came down to earth and died
In bloodshed, and the darkness of clouds that groaned aghast;
With pierced hands and a great wound in His side.

It is not in my heart to hate the pleasant sins I leave.
Earth's passion flames within me fierce and strong.
But this is like a shadow ever rising up to thief Sin's pleasures, and the lure of every pattern lust can weave,
And charm of all things that can do Him wrong.

THE CHURCH AND THE NEW ERA—II

BY THE REV. GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER, D.D.

THE first question that this Church must seriously ask itself is this: What is its particular and peculiar religious contribution to American life? I hope you will not think that I am unaware of its historic ministry or its sacramental system, and its orderly worship, when I ask this question. These are its possessions. I am asking whether these powers in it are functioning so that its possessions become its contributions. When a vestryman passes the plate he is often aware of the fact that the contribution of the man in the pew is often quite incommensurate with his possessions. I believe others have commented, from time to time, on this fact. Our Church possesses certain distinctive values. Do we contribute them? If not, why do we fail? Is it because we are uncertain about them? Is it because we do not know how? Or is it because we are too complacent about them, and say that if people want them let them come for them? Or is it because the people do not want them? Are we failing to learn the method of stimulating the demand? Any observer of our national life will see that even the most necessary and useful commodities must be attractively presented to the people.

It is perhaps a difficult matter for us to agree on our peculiar values. Individuals would determine them differently. But from our whole body of diverse opinion one great conviction arises. Our Church possesses a body of truth that more completely satisfies the intellectual hunger, more completely frees man's spirit from narrow traditions or superstitions, more adequately adjusts his whole being to the best elements in his environment, more courageously encourages him to moral freedom with moral responsibility, more satisfactorily opens to him proper recreations, and more abundantly permits him to fulfill his own personal destiny, more completely consecrates his own material labors as a part of the service of the Kingdom, and more closely unites him with the spiritual sources of strength to do all these things, than does any Church of our continent. That is our charter.

But I fear that we are content to possess these things. We have ten thousand books on our library shelves which establish the fact beyond peradventure. They are like bonds in a strong box. But do we contribute them? Frankly, we do not share them with the American people. We contemplate our possessions, we fringe them about with canons and rubrics, we ornament them with gorgeous temples and we write about them.

We try to share them. Yes, indeed. Hundreds of clergy with self-sacrificing effort attempt to bring them to the people. The efforts are heroic. The laity, too, share in the effort. Somehow the efforts fail. I am an optimist. I believe that this Church holds the future in the hollow of its hand. But I believe that the future will never be ours until we find the right methods. Any temporary successes are but futile if they are only the result of enthusiasm under high pressure. There must be a calm and deliberate and seasoned and well-organized method for contributing our possessions.

Why do we not face the facts with reference to our condition? I know men who wrap themselves in the garments of delusion, and because their particular bed of pansies has a few blossoms they see the whole land covered with flowers.

The facts are these. We have a few outstanding places where local strength brings local success, or unusual leadership accomplishes wonders.

Our failures are apparent. They are relative, of course, and must be measured by our claims and by our opportunities. Let me but state a few:

Our ministry is almost numerically stationary, although geographically agile.

We have but 1583 parishes of over 200 communicants, and some of them, all know, are on the ragged edge. Nearly two-thirds of these parishes are within the borders of five states.

Over one-half of our communicants are within the borders of five states.

Our mission stations are sick with the fever of alternating hope and hopelessness.

Of our million communicants probably 200,000 are "padding."

Something is amiss. We feel it but it has been considered bad form for the clergy to refer to it. We sometimes feel that the laity are indifferent. I believe that our best policy is to take the laymen into our confidence. Instead of the clergy blaming the laity for their apparent lack of interest and their apparent failures, it is time for the clergy to consult the laity. The laity have accomplished wonders in the realm of industry, education and social reform. May we not invite their attention to the Church and ask them to apply the gifts of leadership so clearly manifested in other fields of effort.

The great weakness in administration in our Church is that we have a decapitated federal organization. We have a body without an active and powerful administrative head. Our noble and beloved presiding bishop, with his heroic spirit, does not occupy an office within whose jurisdiction lies any determination of national administrative policy. The policy of action and administration in each of our ninety dioceses and missionary jurisdictions is largely in the hands of its own bishop. He propels the work in his diocese according to his own individual judgment.

This system is a modified but multitudinous papacy. Our bishops have been steadfast and untiring. But bishops are humans as well as divines. They differ in wisdom, temperament, and capacity, to say nothing of that elusive quality which is apparently of so much consequence to us, but of so little apparent importance to the unchurched, churchmanship. As spiritual pastors and chief shepherds our bishops must find their guidance and motive power in Almighty God. But bishops are more than chief shepherds. They are administrative officers, with the highly complex work of relating their diocesan efforts to the progress of the Church as a nation-wide institution. To whom shall they look for guidance in the united, consolidated, strategic movement that alone will prevent unco-ordinated diocesan activities from meeting defeat?

One person of whom this question was asked, replied, "To the General Convention, of course."

In what situation would our nation have been in this war if the land had depended on Congress to carry out its program? Our General Convention corresponds to Congress. Its executive functions are tardily and haltingly expressed in cumbersome commissions, who report, at length, if at all, three years later. The General Convention is not the final expression of the federal government which we need. It has indeed created a few departments which are doing national service. The Board of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education, the Social Service Commission, are doing splendid things. But they are not co-ordinated under a higher command.

There is no man or group of executives commissioned to think and act nationally on every matter affecting the life of the Church. We need a council that will be concerned with every phase of the Church's life and will co-ordinate all the independent thinking and acting that now expends itself in grooves. We have outgrown the principle of local, diocesan or even provincial determination of issues that affect our national life.

Now I am not suggesting a papacy. The war has punctured that bubble. The papacy may meet the fate of the Holy Roman Empire, which expired even as a title in 1806, with the death of Francis II. I mean a great executive council, in which every important interest of our Church shall be represented, and which will co-ordinate the various interests instead of allowing them to struggle for the attention of the Church. I mean a council of men constantly in session and constantly at work, who will do for every interest of the Church what Bishop Lawrence, given a fair field, did for the Pension Fund. The value of such a council would be enormous, without in any way affecting the independence of dioceses, or of organizations already in existence. The mind of the Church is confused by the multitude of unco-ordinated general agencies. Our mails are filled with appeals for the support of various projects. We have not caught the national view of the Church.

We are entering upon the uncharted sea of a new era of democracy. Enormous problems face us. If each diocese sets sail under its own captain with only its journal of the General Convention as its guide, the craft will soon be scattered over the broad ocean. We must sail as a unit under some supreme command.

This supreme command ought to be representative indeed of the Church at large, and it ought to be empowered to act. If it were merely a council of advice or strategy alone, it would result in a symposium, no doubt interesting, but somewhat ornamental. It must have qualities of leadership and ability for performance. The men composing it must give all their time and energy to this supreme task. They must be generously paid and wholeheartedly supported by the enthusiasm of the Church.

Such a national council, with a chief executive who ought to be the strongest man the Church can summon to the task, would find an enormous field of work. I am not concerned as to the title of such an officer, and would vote impartially for either archbishop, patriarch, chairman or cardinal, if we had a man who preferably did not know himself what his title was, but did know what his task was. I am not concerned about the personnel of the council; they might be bishops, priests, or laymen, if they loved this Church and knew how to propel it with national vision.

Such a council would have no concern with questions of Faith and Order, of course. The General Convention alone has that responsibility.

What practical things could such a federal council do? They are almost countless. Inasmuch as I was asked to present this matter in a practical way I shall venture to suggest a program.

(1) Such a federal council could create a great foundation to propel this Church. The Methodists are about to raise $80,000,000 and the Presbyterians $75,000,000. With all the wealth of this Church we ought to raise $200,000,000. It would take time, but I have been assured by a man who knows as much about the financial strength of this Church, probably, as any man in America, that it could be done if the program were big enough to justify the foundation, and if leaders equal to achieving the program were secured. But someone will object, "Of course, we could all do wonders if we had money. Every bishop would have a model diocese if he could get the money to upbuild it." I doubt it. There are so many projects that need co-operative national effort before the result can be seen in diocesan strength, that money used distributively, not collectively, would but exaggerate conditions that are unhappy enough now. A central foundation would make it possible for us to affect the roots of our difficulty. Such a foundation would attract bequests which often now go toward projects which do not stimulate the growth of the Church.

FOR FAITH

O HIDDEN God, grant that Thy inscrutable presence may at last shine forth in us in all the glory of Thy divine life, which Thou hast willed us to attain, that meanwhile its fruit may abound, and we become the blessed instruments of Thy will, the manifestation of Thy mind, in our day even as Thou hast ordained for us. Amen.

REQUIEM

BY LAURA SIMMONS

FOR Love alone my tired feet would return
For cheer withheld—for tender words unsaid;
This only do we learn by being dead:
"Love was the blessed thing!"

I cannot stray
Back to old paths; but Oh, Lord Judge, I pray
Wherever rides my soul, let me discern
New lands, new sunrise, and a morn untried—
With such old wisdom as shall help me compensate
For all I grudged of service ere I died!
Oh, knight me now beneath Thy flaming sword—
Armored for others' sorrows!

Lord Most Great,
I ask not to retrace—but on some shore
Lavish life's good; spill all my prudent hoard
Of joy, in measures pressed and running o'er!

THE SIXTH WORD

"It is finished."

WHAT was finished? Our Lord's life? Did He mean that death was close upon Him? Or that the work His Father had given Him was finished?

We understand our Lord's words in this latter sense. And yet, in His case there does not seem to be a great difference between the two interpretations. For our Lord's work was of such a sort that it could not be finished so long as life remained.

There are some men with whom it is otherwise. Their work is some concrete task which they may complete at some moment before their death, and afterwards we say of them that they are only waiting now for death, that their work is done. It was so with Washington when he retired from the presidency in 1797. The two more years at Mt. Vernon counted in his life, but hardly in his work. Or a man may have to leave his work unfinished, as William Wilberforce had to retire from the fight for the emancipation of English slaves before it was won. But our Lord's work was of such a sort that it could not be finished before His death. Therefore when He said "It is finished," though it was His work He meant, His life was included in the declaration.

For our Lord's work was the revelation of God. We said that the heart of the message from Calvary is that God loves man; that God hates sin; that God will go any length to raise man from his sin; that in spite of all that bids us think the contrary, man is not the child of the devil, but the son of God. To bring us that truth; to fill us with love and confidence and aspiration by convincing us of that truth; to make us victors over sin by its strength; to glorify God by making us see and acknowledge that God is our loving Father:—this was Christ's work.

And this was no task like the spanning of a river or the writing of a book. It was not something at which He could work so many hours a day, and then lay it aside. For this blessed truth could only be brought to us in one way, by being lived. Of course, Jesus taught His message in words, too. We have His parables, and the Sermon on the Mount, and many another saying of His to help us understand. Nevertheless, words alone were absolutely incapable of conveying the truth. So far as we can see there was only one way in which the revelation could be made:—if the fulness of the beauty of the righteousness of God could make its abode in the heart of a man, and the man live his whole life in obedience to that spirit. Only as God lives the life of a man can we understand what God is, or what man may be. That was Christ's work:—so to live that He could truly say "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

And that work could not be finished until His life was finished. Any ceasing to live the divine life, the coming of any moment when to see Him would not have been to see the Father, would have undone, would it not? all that had gone before. The victory over temptation in the wilderness, and the victory over those who wanted to make Him an earthly king, would have been barren unless He had won the victory at Gethsemane also. If the cup was to give life to mankind, He must drink it to the very bottom. So long as He had life, therefore, so long there was work for Him to do. He could not say "It is finished" until He knew His life had reached its close.

We might turn our words around the other way, and say that as His work could not be finished before His death, so neither could it be unfinished at whatever moment death might have come, and still express a truth. His work was to reveal God, to reveal God in human life. That did not mean He was to bring into human life something beside or outside of true humanity. As Dr. DuBose has said, "The thing to be explained in Jesus is not something beside or outside of His true humanity, but the perfection of the power of that humanity to realize or fulfill itself; and not only to fulfill itself, but to be the principle and power of all other humanity to fulfill itself." If you want to see how divine Jesus was, don't begin by asking, How was He divine? Begin by asking, How was He such a man? And how has He helped others to be such men? Try to explain that, and you will soon learn to call Him divine! You will find the sign of His divinity in the perfect thing which He made of humanity. But humanity is not the same at all ages. The perfect child is as perfect as the perfect man, but not the same. The one develops from the other. Now, at whatever moment our Lord had died, in one sense His work would have been finished. So far as He had gone on the journey of human life, so far the divine revelation would have been complete. Still, we can see that if Christ had died too soon, we might have been unable to receive the revelation, just as the world may fail to recognize a great poet in some youth cut down before his time, though all his verses may have been such as a great poet would write at that age. The world must see the finished work of the mature man. And we can see how Christ might have died before His great white soul had shone out in all its purity by coming close against the blackness of human sin, and so we might have failed to realize how white it was. I think Christ felt that He might die too soon. He felt He must live until the light from His life was strong enough to be seen. That was why He would not let them take Him sooner. "His hour was not yet come."

But now it is here. The revelation is made. From the cradle, through youth to manhood, He has lived God's life in human life. He has won every battle, conquered every temptation, "he that looketh upon Him shall see the Father." "It is finished."

THE ANGELUS

On "Lac du Saint Sacrement" (Lake George, New York)

BY LOUISE MARSHALL HAYNES

ACROSS the sun-set mirrored lake
Our bark canoe floats on the crest
Of waters once forever blessed,
Now ruffled by our paddles' wake.

A thrush sings from a nearby hill, —
The clear tone of an old French bell
Echoes and floats its holy knell:—
Our paddles pause—and all is still.

PROPOSALS TOWARDS: UNITY SOME OPINIONS

THE CHURCHMAN will present to its readers during the coming weeks the opinions of some laymen, presbyters and bishops in the Church upon the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity which was published in our last issue. We hope also to publish the opinions of leading ministers in the Congregational Church.—EDITOR.

The Rt. Rev. Edwin S. Lines, D.D.—The proposed canon concerning the ordination of ministers of other communions than our own gives me great satisfaction. It appears to me a very reasonable proposition, marking a much needed advance from discussion to action. It is my sincere hope that the course proposed may commend itself to our own Church and may have favorable consideration by other Christian brethren. The demand for action looking to church unity is very persistent and it is a great satisfaction to see the names attached to the fine statement which accompanies the proposed canon.

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D.D.—I am very much impressed by the Proposals for An Approach Towards Unity. It seems to me to present an opportunity, which, if seized, may bring about wonderful changes. I quite agree with the proposed canon, and I am more than glad that there is courage enough to plan a presentation of it at the next General Convention. Undoubtedly there will be a contest, but nothing is ever gained save through contest. May God bless the undertaking.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Davies, D.D.—The proposed canon seems to me to be a step in the right direction. Some years ago a proposition like it came up in the Diocese of Western Massachusetts. I then decided, and I think rightly, that it was not possible to carry it out without canonical action. With the proposed canonical action, it appears to be a putting into effect of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral. It would extend and complete ministries already valuable and fruitful. I wish it might be made perfectly plain that all those to whom the Holy Communion is to be administered by ministers of such ordination, shall be baptized persons. In some non-conformist bodies in England, I understand that this is not always the case. In regard to Confirmation, I should expect that a minister who himself sought and received it at the hands of a bishop, would desire the same blessing for his people. And there it would likewise strengthen and complete church-membership already living. That the plan would lead to some confusion and to some difficult situations, I do not doubt; but, on the whole, it appears to me to be in accordance with our Lord's will. Practically (and important as it is, I put this last), I can think of certain conditions in which it would very greatly simplify the religious and ecclesiastical situation.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur C. A. Hall, D.D.—"Intercommunion in particular instances seems to me an impossible line. A sort of appendix to the Episcopal Church would be formed which would be distinctly liable to appendicitis. And this appendix would (in these democratic days) consist only of ministers. The people, to whom the ministers who had received supplementary episcopal ordination would minister, would be in no relation to the bishop. They would sometimes receive the Sacraments from an ordained minister, sometimes from one not so ordained. The plan gives an entirely new and restricted (one might say exclusive) sense to the description of a bishop as pastor pastorum—sed tamen ovium vel agnorum nullo modo—but of no sheep or lambs, in the appendix.

There are other important questions suggested, as for instance, concerning the possible celebration of the Holy Communion without any explicit prayer for the consecration of the elements. (See paragraph III. of the proposed canon). There would seem to be an almost superstitious reliance on the mere repetition of "the words and acts of our Lord in the institution of the Sacrament"; as there is an almost superstitious regard of an episcopal ordination by a bishop whose authority is not recognized by the congregation over whom the minister is appointed. Can this be the "tactical succession" which one used to hear denounced and derided? A germ of apostolic succession is to be more or less stealthily introduced into the Congregational (or Methodist) system, with the hope apparently that by degrees the whole will be catholicized. The result may prove to be the entire protestantizing of the cautiously infecting body.

Among minor questions one would like to be definitely and authoritatively informed (1) what ordination does a Congregational minister necessarily receive, on which "the supplementary ordination" would be superimposed; (2) what is the "ecclesiastical authority" to which a Congregational minister is subject; (3) and, finally, would a supplementarily ordained minister, on becoming "for all purposes a minister of the Church," (being elected, say, an assistant in Trinity Parish) cease to be a member and minister of the other communion to which he still belonged after receiving ordination from the bishop? (See paragraphs I. and V. of the proposed canon).

How some of the signatories reconcile these "proposals" with the principles for which they have hitherto been supposed to stand, is a puzzle. Doubtless they are actuated by the highest motives; but is the situation so desperate that the historic principles and traditions of the Church are to be abandoned for so slight "an approach towards unity?" Foremost advocates of a world conference to consider and discuss questions of faith and order propose to anticipate the conference and the discussion by a device which will certainly involve fresh questions of both faith and order.

DR. ORCHARD ON UNITY

FORTUNATELY we have passed the stage when there will be any attempt to unite the Church on the basis of each denomination surrendering its distinctive elements and agreeing on a sort of minimum; a proposal that would leave us with a religion reduced to its lowest and least interesting features. It is the elements for which the defenders of each system are prepared to die that have to be understood, represented, and fused together in one Church.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

GENERAL SEMINARY PLANS HUNDRETH ANNIVERSARY

Bishop Tuttle, Class of '62, to Preach May First

On April 30 and May 1 the General Theological Seminary will celebrate the hundredth anniversary of its founding. It was on the Feast of St. Philip and St. James, May 1, 1819, that a group of six students under the guidance of two professors entered upon their theological studies in a room in St. Paul's Chapel put at their disposal by Trinity Parish.

The celebration of this anniversary will be simple, but it is hoped that many of the alumni will be able to return to take part in the services and the meetings that have been arranged. With the alumni particularly in mind, a meeting in St. Peter's Church has been arranged for the afternoon of April 30. Bishop Greer will preside and the speakers will be Mr. Keppel, Assistant Secretary of War and former Dean of Columbia University, Bishop Rhinelander and Chancellor Brown of the University of New York. That evening there will be an alumni dinner with a program arranged by the executive committee of the Alumni Association.

There will be a choral celebration of the Holy Communion in the chapel at eight o'clock on the morning of April 30; this will be the service of thanksgiving for the hundred years of the life of the seminary. On May first there will be a commemorative service in the chapel with a sermon by Bishop Tuttle, who is a member of the class of 1862 and who is keeping the fifty-second anniversary of his consecration to the episcopate.

On April 30 and May 1 the seminary will keep open-house and those in charge confidently look for such a home-coming of the alumni as Chelsea Square has never before seen.

At the direction of the Board of Trustees the following, representing the trustees, the alumni, and the faculty, have been appointed a committee to take charge of the arrangements for the centennial: the Bishop of Newark, the Bishop of New York, Dr. Manning, George Zabriskie, Esq., Dr. Hester, the Rev. George A. Oldam, the Rev. C. Malcolm Douglas and the Rev. Professors Denslow, Shepard and Jenks.

CITY MISSION CONFERENCE CALLED FOR EASTER WEEK

The Joint Commission on Social Service together with the superintendents of the City Missions in Philadelphia, Boston and New York, has issued an invitation to the superintending officers of the city mission societies for a conference to be held at the Church Missions House on Tuesday and Wednesday in Easter Week. This conference was originally planned by Dr. Jefferys of Philadelphia, Dr. Dennen of Boston and Dr. Tinker of New York for last autumn, but was postponed on account of the influenza. The field secretary of the Joint Commission, the Rev. Augustine Elmendorf, now has charge of the conference. The conference will probably be of the roundtable variety without set addresses.

A questionnaire dealing with the organization, methods, and work carried on by the various societies has been sent to the superintendents whose names are known to Canon Elmendorf. He is, however, anxious to hear from any others who would be interested in attending this conference which will welcome anyone interested in the work of city missions.

BISHOP GREER ENDORSES CHURCH CONGRESS MEETING

Vital Questions of the Times Will Be Discussed

An official announcement of the Church Congress meeting to be held April 29 to May 2 inclusive at Synod Hall, New York, has been sent out to the clergy of the Diocese of New York by the Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, general chairman of the congress, carrying with it an endorsement by Bishop Greer. The announcement reads in part as follows:

"The executive committee has prepared a programme which it is hoped will express the varied thought within the Church concerning vital questions of the times, and concerning certain problems which will come before the General Convention for decision next October. Busy men have pledged themselves to speak upon these subjects; and we desire your voice in the discussions after the formal papers."

"Owing to the difficulty of securing rooms in hotels, it has been suggested that the clergy in the city may be glad to invite their friends who are rectors of country parishes to be their guests for the days of the congress."

In his endorsement Bishop Greer writes: "Referring to the above letter of the general chairman of the Church Congress, let me say, I hope that the sessions of the congress, which are free and open to all, will be largely attended. The topics proposed for consideration, as Dr. Slattery says, are timely and interesting, and ought to engage the earnest attention of all thoughtful clergymen and laymen, which I trust they will receive."

UNITY PLAN ANNOUNCED

New York Church Club First to Hear Proposals Towards Unity

The first public announcement of the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity published in last week's CHURCHMAN, was made at a meeting of the New York Church Club held at the club rooms on Wednesday evening, March 26. Dr. Manning and Mr. George Zabriskie, two of the signers of the document, were the speakers. Dr. Manning told of his experiences in practical co-operation with the clergy of other religious bodies during his service at Camp Upton last year, and kept the audience laughing with his amusing stories.

BROTHERHOOD DECLARES AGAINST CLASS PRIVILEGE

"We Shall Be Ashamed to Live Off Incomes We Have Not Earned"

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—A statement as to its future policy has been issued by the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which met in this city on March 15, in which it declares that there must be unity among Christians if the world is to be won for Christianity, that it supports the purpose of America to join a league of nations, and that it commends the statement of the Joint Commission on Social Service called "A Peace Message." On the matter of class relations the Brotherhood makes the following statement:

"We also believe that we must apply conscientiously and honestly each for himself the principles of Christianity in our everyday life. When the world does this we believe that class distinctions and differences will disappear and in their place the consciousness of the mass will appear; that we will be tolerant of each other's opinions, and questions of free speech and free press need no longer be controlled by an iron hand; that we will not be happy or content in spending our incomes so long as it is impossible for some to secure the bare necessities of life; that labor will be elevated to its proper place and be given its just share of the profits of production and a proportionate share in its control and management; that we shall be ashamed to live off incomes which we have not earned, without rendering an equivalent in the performance of our share of the world's work; that the privileged will voluntarily give up their undeserved special privileges; that we will co-operate one with another in a spirit of mutual helpfulness, and not compete to the discredit of our neighbors, but rather vie with each other in rendering service to our fellow men; that we will scrutinize our investments and not become part owners in any business that is exploiting our fellow citizens, be they men, women or children, and whether it be by the non-payment of living wages, maintaining unsanitary or unnecessarily dangerous places for work, or employment of child labor or the like; that each one of us will endeavor to do his uttermost to bring about a Christian social order, and to that end will give himself in Christ's name to that form of social service in his respective community best suited to his ability and opportunity."

He then outlined the plan proposed by members of the Congregational and Episcopal Churches. Mr. Zabriskie gave an historical sketch of the progress of church unity, and read the document and the appended schedule to the club, commenting upon it in an illuminating way.

The most significant thing said in the course of the evening was Dr. Manning's closing sentence. Dr. Manning said:—"There is risk involved in this plan. But the danger of taking this risk is not so great as the danger of doing nothing."

ROMAN PRIEST ASKED TO OFFICIATE AT CATHEDRAL

Bishop Greer Gives N. Y. Tribune Interview on Unity

In an interview given to the New York Tribune Bishop Greer this week discussed his invitation to a Roman Catholic priest through Archbishop Hayes, to conduct one of the Holy Week services at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, as well as the general move toward church unity.

"I think the movement is excellent," he asserted in reference to the proposed canon, which is to be freely discussed at the General Convention. This provides that ministers of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and other sects shall receive episcopal ordination in addition to that of their own denomination.

"My signature was not affixed to the canon at the time it was drawn up because I was ill, but I have given the matter careful consideration and am very much in sympathy with the movement.

"What we need in these times is organic union in the Churches," continued Bishop Greer. "If all denominations, Catholic and Protestant, combined and became one, we would then have a great universal church, instead of the divided and scattered forces of the present time. In England the war has broken down some of the barriers between the Episcopalian and the Non-conformist Churches and in Canada partial union exists between the Methodist and Presbyterian denominations, so that the United States is not alone in her movement toward greater unity.

"I don't know how we are going to reconcile Catholicism and Protestantism, but I believe it can be done. The three Episcopal bishops who have gone to Rome to see Pope Benedict XV will try to arrange for an international conference on the subject of unity.

"Personally I have asked that a Roman Catholic should conduct one of the afternoon services in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine during Holy Week. These are special devotional services and it is my right as a bishop to invite whom I like to conduct them. I would welcome a Roman Catholic to take one of these services in the cathedral. I feel friendly toward all the orthodox denominations and believe that broad and generous sympathy should prevail throughout the Church.

"I don't believe in breaking down the barriers of the Church, but neither do I believe that they should be so high that you can't get them down or climb over them."

"Wouldn't the proposed canon tend to destroy the individuality of the various Churches and give a certain precedence to the Episcopal Church?"

"Certainly not," affirmed Bishop Greer. "None of the Churches would lose its individuality. Precedence would be given to the episcopate—not to the Episcopal Church. It would mean the universal recognition of a historic order dating back to apostolic times. Most of the Churches throughout the world, including the Greek and Roman, are episcopalian, in that ordination is conferred by bishops.

"Other communions in this country, besides the Episcopal and Congregational Churches, have expressed their sympathy for the movement. It is all tentative at present, but it will be fully discussed at our triennial meeting and the possibilities of united missionary work and fuller coöperation in the home field will be thoroughly investigated."

BISHOP McCORMICK SAILS FOR FRANCE ON MARCH 29

Will Carry on War Commission Work Until Army Returns

At a meeting of the executive committee of the War Commission held on March 19, it was voted that Bishop McCormick be sent abroad immediately. This action was taken in response to a recommendation from Bishop Perry, recently returned from France, and in response to a cable from the War Commission office in Paris to the effect that a bishop was needed for visitations. The executive committee considers it of the utmost importance that the war work of the Church should be maintained at full power until the opportunity for service is over.

Bishop McCormick sailed on Saturday, March 29, on the White Star liner, Baltic.

While in England, he will confer with the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London in regard to American military conditions in England and will then proceed immediately to Paris. All communications of an overseas character should be directed to him in care of Morgan, Harjes & Company, 31 Boulevard Haussmann, Paris. Bishop McCormick will also act as the representative of Bishop Williams in the episcopal oversight of European churches.

The War Commission is continuing its work at full strength. There are many civilian chaplains still in the service. There are at least 90 commissioned chaplains overseas. There are many parishes in the neighborhood of camps which are still being financed, and from time to time new parishes are being assisted in their work among the soldiers.

Bishop Reese has returned to his diocese and will be at the commission hereafter only for a few days each month. Bishop Perry left Paris about the middle of February and has been in this country since March 2.

The War Commission will continue its active work until General Convention next October.

Dr. Empringham in New Work

The Federal Council of Churches, which controls the National Temperance Society, an organization dating back to Civil War times, has chosen the Rev. James Empringham to be general superintendent of the society, and made him editor of the National Advocate, the society's organ. The Church Temperance Society announces that the step does not mean an end to its organization, but expresses the hope that some form of co-operation will be brought about, and new life put into the venerable organ of Civil War antecedents. The Rev. Dr. Empringham succeeds the late Rev. Dr. Hopkins, long famous in temperance advocacy.

OPIUM BALLS AT $6,000 APIECE THROWN INTO FIRE

Missionaries Take Part in Destruction of Shanghai Opium Stock

By John W. Nichols

SHANGHAI, CHINA.—The foreshore opposite the Shanghai waterfront was interesting during the last two weeks of January on account of four columns of pale white smoke issuing from the same number of tomb-like ovens. The smoke represented the vanishing of the last stock of legally imported opium in China, and a notable step in freeing China from the opium curse. The anti-opium forces scored their first real success in 1906 when an Imperial Order commanded the suppression of the traffic, by a gradual process extending over a period of ten years. The British government did its share by agreeing to reduce the trade from India in corresponding steps. The result of this gradual suppression was a tremendous increase in value of the stocks in China, the remainder of which the Chinese government bought up in 1918 at the cost of several millions of dollars. This was bought for purposes of destruction, but the temptation to "realize" became too great and a scheme was launched for putting it on the market in Kiangsu and three adjacent provinces. Missionary and Christian opposition to the scheme immediately became very active and found solid backing everywhere among the Chinese, so that the government finally found it impossible to sell. One or two men who had agreed to handle the business were socially and financially ostracized with that effectiveness in which the Chinese have no equals. The scheme having failed, the actual destruction was finally arranged and carried out as has been indicated. The actual value was about $1,500,000; the salable value in China was estimated to be at least $25,000,000. Most elaborate precautions were taken to ensure that there should be no fraud or substitution. The burning was open to the public, and several members of the mission shared in this manifestation of the progress of China's welfare, being permitted to throw one or two balls of opium into the oven. Each throw was worth about $6,000!

Defends the Y. M. C. A.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Coming to the defence of the Y. M. C. A., the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Episcopal Church, have issued a statement through its executive secretary, F. S. Titsworth, frankly acknowledging that mistakes were made by the association, but declaring that in spite of them the Y. M. C. A. "did a tremendous job in a magnificent way."

No Coadjutor in Minneapolis

DULUTH, MINNESOTA.—Bishop Morrisoi has withdrawn his request made last June for a bishop coadjutor, feeling that for another year at least, he will be able to accomplish the necessary work in his diocese.

On Tuesday the Feast of the Annunciation, the bishop of the Diocese of Duluth inducted into the office of dean of Trinity Cathedral the Rev. Everett Wilson Couper

AN ANGLICAN CHURCH AND NONCONFORMISTS UNITE?

This and Question of Church Reform Much Discussed

By James Cairns

LONDON, ENGLAND.—The two questions of the day here are: Can the Church reform itself, and can it unite with non-conformists? Now the Bishop of London knows what he is about. He has come to the conclusion, apparently, that reunion in general will be best promoted by beginning the process along the line of least resistance, instead of waiting for a comprehensive scheme which would include all nonconformity, the Scottish Presbyterians, and even Roman Catholics.

Of course his scheme is criticised on that very ground, as, for instance, by the Rev. J. Scott Lidgett. While he approves the bishop's plan, as one which cannot be opposed on principle, he evidently thinks it premature. As one of the signatories of the "Faith and Order" report, he urges that the bishops should unite in a movement to advocate reunion throughout all the dioceses of England, the Free Church leaders doing the same. In this way he hopes to "create an atmosphere." To which the Bishop of London would probably reply that the object-lesson of at least one accomplished union would do more than anything else to hasten the general movement. And, besides, as the Rev. Vernon Staley points out, our Church does owe something in the way of an amende honorable to the Wesleyans for behaving so coldly to their first enthusiasm that they were compelled to worship outside of the Church of England. Mr. Staley is a well-known Catholic leader, and he declares that the Bishop of London has done nothing finer in his whole episcopate than this scheme for reunion, which goes to the utmost limit of concession, and does not betray any Catholic principle. Dr. Darrell Stone of Pusey House, Oxford, who is a competent writer and lecturer on theology, blesses it likewise, though he foresees certain difficulties.

But what do the Wesleyans themselves think? Those who listened to the bishop's address approved. One would like to think that that well-known minister, the Rev. H. T. Hooper, speaks for them all. Mr. Hooper is indeed singing his Te Deum. He pictures what Wesley would have said about such a proposal from a bishop of London. One Wesleyan newspaper, indeed, does attempt to boycott the proposal, but that paper, says Mr. Hooper, is now discredited, whereas the other Methodist paper, the Methodist Times, has pledged itself to support reunion: it is "in the hands of younger men, and it is the younger men who count."

But besides expressing himself thus in a letter to the Guardian, Mr. Hooper has had a larger opportunity given to him by the editor, and he contributes a signed leading article, in which he discusses how the scheme would work out. He takes a typical town, Whitby, where there is besides the parish church, the services at which are of the "unlabeled" type, four other churches under the control of the rector, presenting respectively the Moderate, the Evangelical, the Catholic, and the "mission" types of service. Now, what would it matter in principle if a fifth type, the Wesleyan, were added to this comprehensiveness? There would be one more building for occasional exchange of ministration, such as at present takes place between the priests of the four "daughter churches." Again, it often happens in country districts that the Wesleyan church is at a distance from the parish church, and thus conveniently placed for becoming a mission in connection with it. In fact, Mr. Hooper argues, the Wesleyans would no more lose their identity than the banks do, when several of them amalgamate. The old buildings and staffs continue, and are represented on the central management.

WIDESPREAD INTEREST IN BROTHERHOOD PLAN

War Camp Community Service Help- ing to Establish Welcome Committees

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—A Church Welcome Committee in every church to help returning soldiers and sailors fit themselves into the industrial, social and religious life of their respective communities, which is the basis of a campaign launched by the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has been taken up by the War Camp Community Service in its six hundred centers throughout the country.

The War Camp Community Service is issuing a special edition of the Brotherhood booklet, "When the Boys Come Home," for distribution in parishes of the centers it touches.

The Brotherhood plan has won widespread commendation from welfare workers since it was launched the first week in March. "It is a movement which I hope will be universally adopted," says J. Byron Deacon, director general of the Red Cross Department of Civilian Relief. "I wish the Brotherhood all success in propagating this movement and I am confident that the American Red Cross will do all in its power to assure its success."

CELEBRATES 102D BIRTHDAY

Seven Sovereigns on English Throne During Her Lifetime

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Friends and neighbors gathered recently at the home of A. S. Mann, in the parish of St. Philip the Apostle, in this city, to celebrate the 102d birthday of Mrs. Miriam Sparks Banister, the mother of Mrs. Mann.

Mrs. Banister still retains most of her faculties and takes a lively interest in the topics of the time. She was born in Sidmouth, Devonshire, England. Seven sovereigns have ascended the English throne during her lifetime. The first funeral she remembers seeing was that of Queen Victoria's father.

When Mrs. Banister was a child stage coaches were the only public mode of conveyance. The postal rate on a letter from Sidmouth to Bristol, a distance of 120 miles, was the equivalent of twenty-two cents. Mrs. Banister has three children, all living in St. Louis.

SERVICES HAVE DEVICES FOR WASTING PEOPLE'S TIME

Says Bishop of Connecticut in Urging Changes for Lent

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—The morning and evening prayers of the children, the formation of junior communicants' leagues, keeping churches open for private prayer, bringing all anthems within the full comprehension of the congregations, and stripping the services of some traditional devices for wasting the people's time and scattering their thoughts, are some of the topics taken up by the bishop in his lenten letters to his clergy and people.

He asks the clergy to see that services are begun promptly. "If there is an organ voluntary, see that the organist begins it early and concludes it not after, but before, the hour appointed for the service. If there be a procession of the choir, let it start not a moment later than the appointed time. Then let the service not drag, but proceed without pauses and with unflagging movement and spirit. The former practice of reading the hymn through has gone. Why retain the practice of playing over a familiar tune, taking time to play what every one knows by heart? If only the opening bars be struck, the singing is likely to be more spirited. . . . Above all, it is not necessary for me to ask you to appoint more frequent opportunities for the Divine Service of Holy Communion."

To the clergy and laity he writes: "We stand upon the threshold of what, in many respects, will be a new world. A new time brings new and unwonted demands. The Church must be awake, alert, and all alive to these demands of a new time. The Church means, not 'they,' but you and me. If ever life meant anything, surely it is in these tremendous days. This is an epoch of revolutions. It ought to mean for men and women a moral revolution, a changed attitude toward life, a new appreciation of the privilege and purposes of living, a reaction from shallowness and superficiality, the entrance into a deeper life. . . . Accordingly I am proposing what might be called an Every Member Lent . . . to get each member to endeavor to make it, as never before, a Lent of reality." He closes by recommending prayer and the Holy Communion, the breath and the bread of life. With his letter the bishop enclosed a folder of thoughts for each day with readings chiefly from the New Testament and apt quotations from a broad range of sources, and a card of prayers for children. For these there has been a lively demand in the churches.

Venerable Churchman Dies

PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.—Samuel R. Ross died here on March 20. He was born in Oxford, New York, on April 8, 1919, and for many months his family had been planning to celebrate his one hundredth birthday. For seventy-two years he was a regular communicant of All Saints' Church here and much of that time warden and vestryman. He was delegate to the diocesan convention; he frequently entertained visiting bishops and other clergy in his own home, and rarely missed a service until within two weeks of his death. His children and grandchildren are active in church work.

PHILADELPHIA CATHEDRAL PROJECT IS UNDER WAY

Installation Service Is Occasion for Outlining Plans for Building

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The installation service of the Rev. George L. Richardson as vicar, and the Rev. Samuel B. Booth as assistant, of the new Diocesan Church of Saint Mary which took place on Tuesday afternoon, the Feast of the Annunciation, marked the first step toward a cathedral for the diocese. A large and representative congregation gathered for the service. Following the choir in the procession came the newly organized vestry, consisting of the Messrs. Charles Biddle, Sidney L. Wright who is treasurer, Wm. Ellis Scull the secretary, Eli Kirk Price, J. J. Collier, Andrew Wheeler, Benjamin Rush, John S. Newbold, H. S. French, C. L. Borie, Jr., M. F. Roberts, and H. W. Watson.

The Rev. Dr. Hodge, rector emcritus, read the opening sentences; Bishop Garland read the lessons; the Rev. Dr. Perry, president of the Standing Committee of the diocese, read the creed and collects. The Rev. Elliot White, of St. Mark's, was the bishop's chaplain.

After the installation of the two clergy to their office and place in the diocesan church, Bishop Rhineland made an eloquent and forceful plea for this beginning of a cathedral foundation so begun.

"In the purified and regenerated city that is to come, Philadelphia must have a cathedral as a symbol of her regeneration. The Church must have a strong spiritual centre, from which its influence must radiate. At present the Church cannot and does not reach the community as a whole; this is not the work of parishes. We need a central pulpit for the clear teaching of Christian truth, and its application to the conditions of the community as those conditions now are."

The bishop made a special plea for an addition to the staff of clergy at the diocesan church of a man whose special work would be among college students in the city.

The diocesan church, he said, was to be a power house for social service, addressing itself to the eradication of social sores. But chiefly it is to be a central sanctuary, a house of prayer for all, open to all at all times.

All of this that has been so wisely planned, was said to be realizable only in a genuine cathedral; Bishop Rhineland hoped that the diocese might not wait too long for that.

The offering at this service was for the projected cathedral. The sum of $100,000 left by Mrs. H. W. Watson is to be used for the enlargement and improvement of the diocesan church of St. Mary. Already ground and buildings adjoining have been bought to make room for needed enlargement.

More than 100 men and women met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer on the following afternoon and heard Bishop Rhineland outline his plans for the cathedral.

As a result of the conference a Cathedral League will be organized to push the project to a successful completion. Bishop Rhineland will appoint a committee to arrange for the organization.

Many of Philadelphia's best known families were represented in the group which discussed the cathedral project. William Ellis Scull, vestryman of St. Mary's Diocesan Church, presided, and in addition to the bishop's address there were addresses by Bishop Garland and the Rev. Dr. George Lynde Richardson.

It was announced that $34,000 was pledged to the Cathedral fund prior to this meeting. Six prominent laymen are said to have given $5,000 each.

CLERGY OF RHODE ISLAND FAVOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—At a meeting attended by all but three of the clergy of the Diocese of Rhode Island, the following resolution, favoring a league of nations, was passed unanimously:

WHEREAS, The Christian Church is pledged to a civilization by service, and upholds the ideal of a citizenship without national selfishness; and

WHEREAS, We discern in a league of nations an idealism in public life that in freedom and peace will enable all nations to bring their glory and honor into the Kingdom of God; therefore, be it

Resolved: That we, the bishop and clergy of the Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Rhode Island, advocate the establishment of a league of nations, for the purposes set forth in the Paris Conference; and be it further

Resolved: That we favor the entrance of the United States into such a league as shall be adequate to safeguard the peace that has been won, and the security and orderly development of all self-determining peoples; and be it further

Resolved: That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Senators representing Rhode Island at Washington, and to the Providence daily newspapers.

WAR COMMISSION GIVES OUT FEBRUARY STATEMENT

The following statement shows the distribution of funds of the War Commission during the month of February: Chaplains' salaries, $3,304.46; chaplains' expenses, $4,022.74; chaplains' equipment, (equipment, $519.23; portable altars, $393.29) $912.52; army chaplains' training school, $300; foreign work, $3,811.35; Brotherhood of St. Andrew, $10,000; stationery, postage and printing, $1,132.61; appropriations for special work, $2,759.33; U. S. certificates of indebtedness, $50,523.97. Total expenditures, month of February, 1919, $77,757.28.

Three Editions Exhausted

Indications from all over the country point to a greater interest in the Lenten Offering number of the Spirit of Missions than ever before. Despite the absence of many of our clergy on the other side of the water and the unsettled condition caused by the influenza epidemic, three editions have been exhausted and a large number of schools have sent in second and third orders for copies.

BISHOP TUTTLE WARNS THE CLERGY AGAINST FRAUD

Person with "Desperately Sick Friend" Operating in Middle West

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Bishop Tuttle has sent out the following warning to the clergy:

"A game of fraud is being worked upon us out here. Someone at the phone personates Dean Davis and asks some clergyman to care for a person desperately sick, saying that Bishop Tuttle has wired or will wire a hundred dollars, and so forth. We know of two clergymen applied to. One in Wilmington, Delaware, advanced fifty dollars on receipt of the spurious message. The other, at Syracuse, New York, was cautious and would advance nothing till after plain eyesight of the patient, and so saved himself. Let the clergy be very careful about telephone messages asking help."

CHURCHES HAVE PUBLISHED SOCIAL SERVICE BULLETIN

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—The Social Service Committee of the Connecticut Federation of Churches, of which Dean Ladd, of the Berkeley Divinity School, is chairman, has published a "Survey of Proposed Social Legislation in the State" which has been widely circulated. The purpose of the bulletin is to inform the clergy of acts introduced in the legislature which have to do with social reform, and the present issue treats of bills for widows' pensions, child welfare, the minimum wage, shortened working hours and Sunday observance. The clergy are urged to attend hearings at the capitol on the questions, to interview their local representative or senator, and, in the case of the passage of a bad bill, to appeal to the Governor for his veto. In this way a practical movement is started to align the religious and moral force of the Church in the support of moral reform through legislation.

An interesting and influential Conference on Social Service was held at Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, on March 3 and 4, under the direction of the Committee of the Federation. There was a large attendance of clergy of all denominations from all parts of the state, our own clergy being well represented. Bishop Brewster presided at the luncheon, at which one of the speakers was Bishop Brewster, of Maine, and Bishop Acheson took part in the public meeting on the first evening, which was held in Holy Trinity Church. A series of valuable conferences was held on such topics as, the aims of labor, substitutes for the saloon, etc.

Bishop Greer's Gift

Accompanying the gold watch presented to Bishop Greer on the occasion of his 75th birthday by the clergy of his diocese, an account of which appeared in THE CHURCHMAN recently, was a silk fob, with a gold ornament on which was engraved the seal of the diocese. The gift of the fob was a part of the original plan for the gift, and should have been mentioned last week.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEWARK

Dedications and Ordinations at Cathedral—The third Sunday in Lent was marked in Trinity Cathedral, Newark, by the dedication of a memorial window placed back of the chancel and the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Charles Judson Child of Woodcliff and the Rev. Hugh W. Dickinson of Wortendyke. Bishop Lines officiated at both services.

Rev. R. C. Ormsbee to Serve in France—The Rev. Roland C. Ormsbee, formerly rector of St. Paul's Church, Newark, has sailed for France to serve as chaplain under the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. in connection with its reconstruction work. Mr. Ormsbee resigned his rectorship for war service, for which he prepared at the Officers' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor in Louisville, Kentucky.

Daily Self-Denial Asked of Parishioners—Members of St. George's Church, Maplewood, the Rev. F. W. Richey, rector, have been asked to maintain during Lent a daily self-denial fund of from five to ten cents, and in this way to aid in the raising of a fund for the erection of a new church edifice. Children are included in the plan, and it has been pointed out that with 400 persons in the parish and the number increasing rapidly it would be quite possible to have an Easter offering of $1,500, given as a thank offering for the mercies vouchsafed by God during the last year.

Death of Mrs. Randolph Rodman—Mrs. Caroline Louise Townsend Rodman, widow of Randolph Rodman, of 577 Hamilton Road, South Orange, died March 20 in St. Luke's Hospital, New York, following an illness of two months and an operation. Mrs. Rodman was born fifty-six years ago in New York City, and had been a resident of South Orange during the last sixteen years. In addition to her parish activities in St. Andrew's Church, she exerted a marked influence in the work of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, particularly in the effort made to further the interests of the American Church Institute for Negroes. Archdeacon Frederick B. Carter, acting rector of St. Andrew's Church, officiated at the funeral service.

Bishop Thomas Coming for Conference—Bishop Thomas has telegraphed the ladies who are arranging for the conference luncheon at the Hotel Biltmore on April 7 that he will come from Cheyenne especially to present the call of the Church to the war workers expected to attend this important gathering. Dr. Manning, chairman of the advisory council, will preside and will speak on "The Challenge of the Church," and the Rev. Mr. Henshaw of Rye, lately returned from France, will be the third speaker. A canteen supper with recruiting stations for enlistment in various forms of church work will be held at St. Thomas' community centre under the direction of the same group of women.

Chaplain Returns—Chaplain Fell of the 102nd Engineers has returned to his parish, St. Alban's in the Bronx, and preached for the first time since his return on Sunday, March 23.

Seven Days' Mission—A seven days' mission from March 30 to April 6 has been planned for St. Stephen's Church. The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, LL.D., is the missionary. The general theme of the addresses is "The Mind of Christ." Services are being held every night at eight o'clock.

Tablet to Bishop Courtney Dedicated—Immediately after the second lesson at Morning Prayer last Sunday a tablet was dedicated to the memory of the late Bishop Courtney, for eleven years the rector of St. James' Church. The tablet, which is the gift of Miss Mabel C. Courtney, has been placed on the south wall of the church. It is in the form of a bas relief, representing Bishop Courtney preaching the gospel, the chief and characteristic work of his long, distinguished and fruitful life.

Anniversary of the Church of the Transfiguration—The Parish of the Transfiguration was formed in 1848, the church was built a year later and consecrated on mid-Lent Sunday, 1850. The sixty-ninth anniversary of the consecration and first service held in the newly built church was accordingly celebrated last Sunday. The Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, superior of the Order of the Holy Cross, was the preacher. There was special music and an address by Miss Edith M. Hadley, president of the Girls' Friendly Society of the diocese in the afternoon when candidates of the Girls' Friendly Society were admitted to full membership. The parish has just presented to the National League for Woman's Service an ambulance, which was used on Tuesday for the first time and carried wounded soldiers to view the great welcome to the Twenty-seventh Division.

Preachers for the Week—Dr. Crowder and Dr. Silver were the preachers at the noonday services last week at Trinity Church. Dr. Manning preached Sunday afternoon at St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University. "The Theatre and Democracy" was the subject of a meeting held at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie on Sunday. The speakers and topics: "From Macbeth to Ole Bull," Charles D. Coburn, of the Coburn Players; "The Noh—the Aristocratic Lyrical Drama of Japan," Miss Catherine Dupont; "Is the Drama League Worth While?" Montrose J. Moses.

Diocesan Convention Date Changed—The bishop of the diocese has given notice that the date for the annual meeting of convention has been changed from May 7 to Thursday, May 1.

Cathedral Neighborhood Kitchen—Dean Rousmaniere writes as follows to the head of the Cathedral Neighborhood Kitchen—"I visited the Neighborhood Kitchen yesterday at the noon hour when the children were there for their dinner. It seemed to me such a real contribution to the welfare and the chances of those little forlorn children, and of such value as an experiment, that I cannot refrain from writing you about it. The results for good to each child which are so undoubted, seem to me only one feature of what the noon dinners are doing. I believe the data obtained over a considerable period of time will be invaluable in convincing people of the importance of seeing to it that little children must not be allowed to grow up under-nourished and with all their faculties below par."

Massachusetts Clerical Association—At the monthly luncheon, Monday, April 7, at the City Club, the Rev. J. H. Greig, B. D., Archdeacon of Worcester, England, will address the association.

Bishop Fiske at the Cathedral—The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske will be the special preacher at the noon-day services at the cathedral this week.

Incorporation Amended—On February 20th, there was signed by the Governor of Massachusetts a bill amending the Act of Incorporation of St. James' Parish, Roxbury, in such a way as to permit the corporation to increase or otherwise regulate its membership in any way it might think best. This law was formally accepted by the proprietors at a meeting held on March 7. A joint-committee of the proprietors and vestry is now at work preparing a set of new by-laws to be acted upon by the proprietors at an early date. The principal motive in these proposed changes is to give to the rank and file of the active bona-fide parishioners official membership in the corporation of the parish, so that the vestrymen and other officers shall in the future be elected by the parish as a whole.

The taking of this action was initiated by the little group of pew-owners, who are at present the only members of the corporation, because they felt that the time had come for the parish to be more democratically organized and for the parishioners as a whole to take the ultimate authority and responsibility into their own hands. To this end they introduced the bill into the State Legislature which has now become law.

Knights of Washington Initiated—Recently the charter members of the new company of the Knights of Washington in St. Paul's Parish, Peabody, with the rector, the Rev. Francis L. Beal, D.D., went to St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, and were initiated by the company there under the direction of the Rev. George A. Barrow, Ph.D., the rector, and one of the general officers of the order. The new company will be formally installed soon after Easter.

A Gift of New Hymns—St. James' Church, West Somerville, Massachusetts, the Rev. William H. Pettus, rector, has been presented with one hundred and fifty copies of The New Hymnal, by Mr. Henry E. Crowley, a communicant of the parish, in memory of his father, the late Mr. John Crowley.

with Bishop Graves, getting his China bearings and adding considerably to his clothing equipment in preparation for the chillier journeys of the next two months. The change from the "summer" of Manila to February and March in China is apt to be trying. Dr. Wood has now gone on to the Anking and Hankow dioceses, whence he will return to Shanghai about April 15, and go on to Japan a month later.

Feeling Between China and Japan—

The ill-feeling between China and Japan has not been decreased by the apparent effort of the Japanese to coerce the Chinese representatives at the peace conference in Paris. One could wish that the element friendly to China which undoubtedly exists in Japan, could become something more than an ineffective minority. There is work to be done, too, in bringing the Christian communities in China and Japan into closer touch. Certainly the Christian communities ought to be the most hopeful points of friendly contact. Chinese Christianity hardly sees this as yet. It has been necessary in a land of no patriotism to teach it as a Christian duty. This teaching has been successful. Chinese Christianity—at least the Protestant type—is patriotic to a high degree. But patriotism in itself is apt to have an anti-other-national bias, and emphasis, and Chinese Christians have not entirely escaped this evil. The complete ideal of the Christian brotherhood as a super-national thing needs and awaits further emphasis.

Mr. Littell Ill—The many friends of the Rev. S. H. Littell will be sorry to hear that he had a severe attack of pneumonia in January. I am glad to be able to report that he is now on the road to recovery.

JOHN W. NICHOLS.

HANKOW

Death of Mr. Nieh—The Rev. T. C. Nieh, priest of this diocese, died in Wuchang on February 7. Since the spring of 1917 he has been retired from active service. The Rev. Mr. Nieh was educated at Boone School and St. John's College; was ordained deacon in 1888 by the second Bishop Boone, and priest in 1902 by Bishop Ingle. He served at St. James' Chapel (Tsan Lei Tsz Hong), Hankow, from 1888-1893; from then until 1909 at Hanchuan in a position of some isolation and much responsibility. He was then moved to Sinti, where he remained until impaired health led to his retirement. His work was that of a faithful servant of our Lord and of His Church.

Graduations—Three women graduated on January 25 from St. Phoebe's School for church workers, all having completed the course provided for those preparing to be deaconesses. One of these goes to the District of Shanghai. Of the two, Miss Liao will work in Changsha and Miss Han at St. John's Church, Hankow.

The closing exercises of the Catechetical School were held on January 16 and certificates were given to six men.

Four men were graduated from St. Paul's Divinity School of Boone University on January 17. Of these, three belong to the District of Anking. The fourth will work at the Church General Hospital.

Spiritual Leadership—Signs not a few are visible on the ecclesiastical horizon of Canada, indicating the return of the Church to a sounder basis of leadership than has been in evidence for some time. The attitude of the general public towards the Church during the war was a revelation. It seemed to be taken as a convenient medium for promoting war activities of every sort and description, from recruiting, to the sale of rags and bottles for the Red Cross. Its place as a spiritual centre of instruction and inspiration was largely overlooked, due to the aggressive non-Anglican sentiment that seems to busy itself, chiefly, with subjects of the moment. For several years there has been a decided tendency in the Anglican Church to follow,—reluctantly it is true,—the public desire for the Church to "do something," to "practice rather than to preach," to magnify "deeds and not words." This found expression in the adoption of certain fads and fancies that had their day and were discarded. To-day the preaching and teaching functions of the Church are being restored to their former place. It isn't by bread alone that man lives. Neither is it by doing things that he progresses. The chart and compass are still essential to the navigator, and ideals and motives are still essential to fruitful lives. There are wholesome signs that the Church is turning to the business of setting forth truth in its comprehensive fullness as the motive power of all life. In this conception of its functions the Church is becoming the most vital and most practical force in national development.

Death of Archbishop Hamilton—The death of Archbishop Hamilton, which occurred recently in California removes one of the sweetest characters and best loved sons of the Church in Canada. He was born in Quebec and came of an old and wealthy family that has long taken a prominent place in the upbuilding of the country. He was educated at Oxford, but all his ministerial life was spent in the country he loved and called his own. His outstanding characteristics were, simplicity, fidelity, an overmastering love for his Master and His Church, an unfailing courtesy to everyone,—for to him all were Christ's brethren,—an open handed but withal modest generosity for every need and every worthy cause. From curate to archbishop, in the tenement and on the avenue, he was the same gentlemanly priest, always about his Master's business.

In the year 1914 he was convinced that his advanced years and growing infirmity unfitted him for the adequate performance of the exacting duties of his office and he voluntarily retired to make place for a younger man. He was a convinced and consistent disciple of the catholic school of theology, but he was the trusted and revered father of all his diocese. Both in and out of the Church, Charles Ottawa, drew to himself friends of the most diverse intellectual and social types. In the fullness of years and service his passing was as the sun going down at evening or the tide going out at its appointed time.

Halifax Churches Join in Keeping Lent

—The city of Halifax, that has always been one of the historic spots in Canada, came into special prominence during the recent war as one of the great shipping ports of the world. When that war was at its height the eyes and sympathies of the world were called down upon it by reason of a disastrous explosion that laid a large portion of it in ruins and claimed hundreds of innocent victims. The immediate and generous help of Americans will never be forgotten.

Public interest in this remarkable city has been aroused in still another way. At the beginning of Lent a joint pastoral signed by the Roman Catholic archbishop, the Anglican archbishop, the presiding clergy of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Disciples, and Lutheran communion, has been sent out to all citizens. This document calls for the special observance of Lent by services in all churches on Wednesdays and Fridays and daily services throughout Holy Week. It is arranged that the subjects of the sermons or addresses on Fridays shall be identical in every church in the city.

The pastoral states—"There is no desire to limit or direct what each church shall do. It is only an effort to lead the community to acknowledge their allegiance to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to seek through their churches the power to serve Him and to take their part in the development of true citizenship on the best and surest foundation." This probably has never been attempted before in our country and manifests a spirit that ought to be impressive and fruitful for good in the community. The public is growing accustomed to speak in general terms of "the Church" even when it criticizes the vagaries of some one communion. The loss of confidence in the methods or teaching of one, causes all to suffer. An experiment such as is in operation in Halifax may have an important stabilizing influence upon the whole ecclesiastical body and greatly augment its influence among men.

The Toronto Cathedral—The Church in Toronto has a cathedral problem of long standing. A former bishop dissatisfied with an edifice that was part cathedral and largely a parish church began a building that was to be a cathedral pure and simple, after the English model. In his venture he didn't carry the approval of the great body of the laity of his diocese, and as a consequence he got no further than the chancel which for nearly a quarter of a century has been an eye sore and reproach to the Church of a great diocese. Quite recently a most generous offer to the bishop was made by the executive officers of the Mother Church of St. James, the former cathedral, contingent on the restoration of the episcopal throne thereto. The financial resources of St. James' have grown with the growth of the city and are such that it may undertake vast enterprises. Public sentiment is still lukewarm towards the newer venture and the decision is a serious one. However, it has gone so far that the present bishop doesn't feel justified in abandoning it, and presumably in due time it will be completed. There is this to be said in its favor that Toronto, a city of commerce and of churches, notably lacks one great outstanding ecclesiastical edifice of architectural and devotional impressiveness that is called for in the midst of triumphant industry. Some of these days, possibly, the objections that have so long stood in the way of the completion of St. Alban's the Martyr, may be swept away and a structure of stately proportions, eloquent of devotion, adequately symbolizing the faith of our people, may be an accomplished fact.

LEXINGTON.

ALASKA

Fairbanks, February 15—In yesterday's mail a letter was received from Vaughn Taylor, who is in service in France, stating that he had been promoted from the rank of acting major to that of major. Vaughn is one of the first Alaskans to complete the course of training at West Point.

Alaskan Knitters—The Tanana Valley chapter of the Red Cross reports that three of the mission stations which have had supplies, have already turned in finished articles. Under direction of the teachers, the pupils in these three missions are knitting industriously. From Fort Yukon, with Deaconess Pick in charge, have come two consignments of socks to Fairbanks, a dozen pairs in each package. These twenty-four pairs were unusually well made, correct as to measurement, firmly knit, and with the Kitchener toe. Holy Cross Mission, away down on the Yukon, secures its yarn from Ruby, and contributed sixteen pairs of socks and one sweater to the last shipment of the Ruby branch. Best of all, they sent to Ruby voluntarily for the yarn, and are enthusiastic knitters. Stephen's Village is also knitting, but owing to its isolation has had no opportunity to ship completed garments. Thus the Indian is showing his patriotism; in addition to knitting, they have sent in donations of money and moccasins, etc.

Influenza at Salchaket—The winter has been beautifully mild, with only four weeks of severe weather, and that not to compare with the past four years. The Indians have been staying out in the hills this year, fearing the influenza, which they call the "bad sickness." It has crept up the trail to within a hundred miles, but the quarantine is strict, and we hope for immunity. Some of the Indians get a little panicky, but Old Selina showed her faith when she told the missionary in charge that she would not leave her alone; "I not afraid of God, I think I stay by you." Selina, who is far from young, still likes to dance and walks many miles hunting her porcupines! There is a new gold strike up the Salchaket, and a rush is expected this spring.

The mission was very much run down when it was re-opened last summer; but after cleaning and kalsomining, it was better. This mission station, like all others up here, is severely handicapped by lack of materials.

At Guadalajara—St. Andrew's Seminary, Rev. Efraim Salinas, principal, was re-opened in January of last year. Owing to the unsafe conditions in the suburban colony where our St. Andrew's School and farm are located it has been necessary during the past year to occupy a temporary home in the city with only the young men who are preparing for the ministry as students. The buildings on the Church's property have been badly damaged and looted but are now being repaired and Mr. Salinas hopes to move back early in June and resume the boys' department with the seminary students as teachers.

During the suspension of English services in Guadalajara the native congregation has been worshipping in St. Mark's Church. This congregation is unusual in that it is made up of professional men and their families, lawyers, doctors, teachers, school inspectors, etc. These accessions from the more intelligent class are due largely to a "class of singing" which the Rev. Mr. Salinas is conducting for men who have drifted away from their old moorings of Christian faith and are looking for a safe haven for themselves and their families.

At San Sebastian—The Rev. Josue Diaz, deacon, has a very flourishing mission at San Sebastian, an Indian town about twenty miles from Guadalajara. This is a remarkable work due to the faithful ministrations of Mr. Diaz. Although only a year old this congregation has now almost one hundred communicants and a good Sunday School. On Sunday morning while the children are being taught in the chapel Mr. Diaz conducts a class of some thirty-seven grown people out under the trees. The course being pursued is on the Thirty-Nine Articles and the Church Catechism, with the Bible for authority and reference. Mr. Diaz also has a well trained choir of a dozen voices and a band of five pieces with a leader!

Bishop Aves makes his home in Guadalajara and it is through a late letter from him that we have obtained the above notes. T. MCKNIGHT.

PHILADELPHIA

World Week in Every Member Campaign—The Every Member Campaign in the diocese has progressed from parish week, when local opportunities were set forth in every parish. Then came the diocesan week, when all the parishes in each district gathered at a common centre to be told of the relief, rescue, educational and missionary work that can only be done by all the parishes as they are joined together in the diocese.

Sunday, March 23, began the last stage of the campaign; in every parish the wider mission of the Church to the whole world was set forth. On afternoons and evenings an educational and inspirational conference has been held in the following centres:—At St. Matthew's on Girard Avenue, under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Milton of Wilmington, North Carolina. At the Good Shepherd, at Roscmont, the Rev. Dr. Parrish, of New Brunswick, is leading the people of the main line churches. At Holy Trinity, Lansdale, the Rev. H. W. Stowell, who is also instructing the people of Bristol. In Norristown the Rev. F. J. Clark of the Board of Missions. At Phoenixville and Pottstown the Rev. Dr. Wood. In the Church of the Savior in West Philadelphia the Rev. Dr. Yellott. In Kensington the Rev. Philip Cook of Baltimore. At Holy Trinity in the city the Rev. Dr. Patton is the leader. In Germantown and Chestnut Hill the Rev. Dr. La Mothe of Baltimore is conducting the meetings of great gatherings of people. The Every Member Campaign is to be made on Sunday, March 30. IRVING A. MCGREW.

LONG ISLAND

Activities at Trinity Church, Roslyn—About six hundred school text books have been sent from Trinity Parish, Roslyn, to Liberia for needed educational work there; they have twenty-five candidates to the G. F. S. who meet on Thursdays during Lent to make quilts for the Belgian babies, and on Tuesday evenings to make surgical dressings for mission hospital work in Raleigh, North Carolina; the parish gave in 1918, $110.29 to the archdeaconry as against $37.17 for the previous year. This church became an independent parish in 1869, the year that the Diocese of Long Island separated from the Diocese of New York. The Rev. Clifton H. Brewer is the rector.

Dolls—One Hundred Wanted—The rector of St. Mary's Church, Brooklyn, appeals to his people for one hundred dolls for the little girls of the Appalachian Mountains. "Did you ever," he asks, "have the pleasure of giving a doll to a keen and eager little girl who has seldom seen one, and never owned one?" He is providing a big box, and will put six dolls in it himself. This is the result of a talk given by Mrs. Hughson at a recent missionary meeting.

Record Confirmation Class—St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, is rejoicing in the fact that on Sunday, March 30, a class of thirty-seven (twenty-one adults, including seven men, and sixteen children,) was confirmed. This is double the number confirmed a year ago, and the class the largest in many years.

The Rev. Mr. Oldham preached at the 4 o'clock service Sunday in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City. The evening preacher at St. Ann's was the Rev. Stuart L. Tyson, D.D., of Princeton, New Jersey.

One Million Dollars to Be Raised—One million dollars is the amount planned to be raised at the Church Charity Foundation drive, April 5-16.

This money will be used to rebuild the orphanage destroyed by fire three years ago, to pay up all indebtedness, and build a new hospital.

Mr. William M. Baldwin is chairman of the men's committee, and Mrs. John Anderson of the women's committee.

Memorial Community House—In memory of the four boys of their parish who made the supreme sacrifice, the Men's Club of St. Bartholomew's Church, Brooklyn, the Rev. F. M. Towmley, rector, has undertaken to raise $35,000 with which to build a community house.

Much of the money has been raised and plans have been drawn, but owing to the high cost of materials and labor work will not be started until 1920.

Thirtieth Anniversary — St. Paul's Church, Flatbush, had its thirtieth anniversary, Sunday, March 30. On this Sunday thirty years ago their present rector, the Rev. Townsend G. Jackson, D.D., came and has the distinction of being the rector longest in active service in the whole diocese, beside being chancellor of the cathedral at Garden City.

This parish has 1800 communicants, ten organizations, besides a men's club of 100 members, and a very strong branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

MARY E. SMYTH.

CHICAGO

Confirmation at St. Peter's Church—On the evening of March 25 Bishop Griswold confirmed a class of forty-five at St. Peter's Church. After the service all the members of the parish who had been confirmed within the last three years, together with the vestry, gathered in the parish house, where they welcomed the newly confirmed class into the full privileges of the Church.

The Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, rector of the parish, observed the third anniversary of his coming to St. Peter's Church in February. At that time he summed up the record of the work that had been done since his coming in 1915. Besides numerous additions and improvements to the buildings, and an increase of the staff to three priests, a deaconess, and a paid director of religious education, he reported 178 persons baptized, 129 confirmed, and a total of 456 added to the parish roll in the last three years. On December 31, 1918, there were 1642 communicants, and 2277 baptized persons belonging to the parish.

Corporate Communion of the Deaconesses—The deaconesses of the Diocese of Chicago held their annual corporate Communion on Tuesday, March 25, the Feast of the Annunciation, at St. Simon's Church. Bishop Griswold was the celebrant. The seven deaconesses who are at work in the diocese were present at the service.

Work at the Cathedral—Under the leadership of Mr. Edwin B. Clark, a group of laymen at the cathedral have been carrying on a church attendance campaign during Lent, in order to increase the attendance at the Sunday morning service. Their efforts have been very successful. On Sunday, March 30, the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Church chaplain at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, was the preacher, and there were in the church at that time almost double the number that made up the Sunday morning congregation before the beginning of Lent. On Wednesday afternoons during Lent

Bishop Griswold is giving a series of meditations in the chapel at the cathedral.

CHARLES L. STREET.

The Rev. Dr. Stires in the Cathedral—

The Rev. Dr. Stires, rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, was the preacher at the lenten Thursday evening united service, March 20. The large audience, filling the cathedral, heard one of the stronger sermons of the course. The Very Rev. Hugh E. W. Fosbroke, D.D., dean of the General Theological Seminary, was the preacher on March 27. The Rev. Floyd Tomkins of Philadelphia will follow, preaching on April 3.

Deaf Mute Work—The Mission Leaflet, the organ of the Commission for Deaf Mute Work in the Dioceses of Albany, Central and Western New York and Vermont, is to be revived as a quarterly. The missionary, the Rev. H. VanAllen, is the editor.

Archdeacon Greig at Amsterdam—The Venerable J. H. Greig, Archdeacon of Worcester, England, conducted a mission in St. Ann's Church, Amsterdam, the Rev. E. T. Carroll, D.D., rector, from March 21 to 25, speaking three times daily. On Sunday night, at an additional service he spoke on the League of Nations in its relationship to the teachings of the Christian Church. The Sunday midday sermon was upon the effect of the war on the religious life in England.

SAN JOAQUIN

Well Attended Retreat—A retreat for the clergy was conducted by the bishop in the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, Fresno, March 17-18, all but three of the clergy in the district being present. Four conferences were held on the subject: "The priest training his parish (1) in worship, (2) in giving, (3) in study and (4) in good works."

Death of the Rev. F. M. Baum—The Rev. Frank M. Baum, missionary at Madera, died in Fabiola Hospital, Alameda, March 8. Mr. Baum suffered a stroke of apoplexy in December from which he only partially rallied. Though connected with this district but one year, he had endeared himself to his congregation and his fellow clergy by his singular devotion to his work and the gentleness and strength of his character, and has perpetuated his influence by leaving his books as the nucleus of a diocesan library. His ministry had been spent almost wholly in the Eighth Province, and a wide circle of friends in Washington, Idaho and Oregon will gratefully cherish his memory.

Visitors from Alaska—The visit of the Rev. A. R. Hoare of Point Hope and the Rev. George J. Zinn of Valdez has increased the interest of our parishes and missions in the Alaska Mission. Messrs. Hoare and Zinn toured the San Joaquin Valley by automobile the third week in March, speaking to congregations and branches of the Woman's Auxiliary at ten different points, and exhibiting interesting stereopticon views of missionary work in the north. At Fresno, besides speaking to large congregations in the church, Mr. Hoare addressed the students at the State Normal School.

Lecture on "The Christian Year"—A series of lectures on "The Christian Year" is being given by the bishop weekly in St. John's Parish, Stockton.

MAINE

Death of a Clergyman—St. Paul's Church, Portland, has suffered a severe loss in the death of the Rev. Joseph Battell Shepherd who died at the rectory on Sunday, March 23, after declining health for about a year. But he was able to fulfill his ordinary duties up to within a few weeks of his death.

Mr. Shepherd was the oldest resident clergyman in the city, and he was widely known and greatly respected. Apart from the claims of his vocation, he was keenly alert to the value of social and civic interests.

It was, no doubt, a supreme joy to himself, his people, and friends that on January 6 of this year he celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his own rectorship, and the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the church building.

Mr. Shepherd was born in New York City seventy-two years ago, and entered Wesleyan University in 1874, graduating with honors. He was one year at Harvard Theological Seminary, and took a post-graduate course at Yale University. He was ordained into the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, remaining in that ministry for five years when he undertook a careful preparation for the ministry of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Shepherd was married to Miss Emma Irene Smith of Vernon, Connecticut, in 1875, and she survives him together with her mother.

The funeral service was conducted at St. Paul's Church on March 26, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 A. M., the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Brewster, D.D., being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Canon R. W. Plant, rector of Christ Church, Gardiner, and the Rev. Ernest A. Pressey, rector of Trinity Church, Portland, after which the Masonic Body maintained a guard of honor in the church until the hour of the burial service at 2:30 p. m., which was taken by the bishop of the diocese, assisted by the Very Rev. Frank L. Vernon, D.D., of St. Luke's Cathedral. The vested choir of the Cathedral Church of St. Luke was also in attendance. The interment was at Evergreen Cemetery, Portland.

President Sills on League of Nations—With the purpose of gaining further knowledge of the League of Nations plan the Democratic League of Portland met for a symposium on the subject, March 18, when an illuminating presentation of the matter was given by Kenneth C. M. Sills, LL.D., president of Bowdoin Col-ge, who is a loyal son of the Church. In an address, also, was given by the Rev. Ernest A. Pressey, rector of Trinity Church, Portland, upon "Moral Evolution and the League of Nations."

Death of a Prominent Church Woman—On the death of Mrs. George K. Boutelle, St. Mark's Church, Waterville, has incurred a great loss. She died after a long period of illness and was buried March 5, Bishop Brewster officiating, assisted by the Rev. George Bruce Nicholson, D.D., of Somerville, Massachusetts.

Return of Rector from France—St. Mark's Church, Augusta, is looking forward to the return of the Rev. Victor O. Anderson from his long sojourn in France for the Red Cross. The rector expects to be with his people at the Easter services.

ERNEST A. PRESSEY.

INDIANAPOLIS

Confirmation at St. Paul's, New Albany—Bishop Francis administered the rite of confirmation on the morning of the Third Sunday in Lent, the rector, the Rev. Dr. J. Mallett, presenting a class of fourteen, the majority being men and boys. In the afternoon the bishop gave an address at a mass-meeting of the Community Welfare League at St. Paul's. The same week special-lenten preachers in this church were the Rev. John S. Douglas, rector of St. Andrew's, Louisville, Kentucky, and the Rev. J. Reginald Mallett, priest-in-charge of the Church of the Messiah, Mayodan, North Carolina.

NORTH CAROLINA

Welcoming the Soldiers—Raleigh gave a wonderful welcome to the soldiers of the 3th Field Artillery on Monday, March 4. The soldiers arrived in the city Sunday evening, and were entertained in the private homes of the people. Monday there was a great parade and a splendid dinner for the soldiers. The welcome which the governor of the state gave the returned heroes was a real gem. The diocese of North Carolina is proud to claim him as a member of the Episcopal church.

M. A. BARBER.

WEST VIRGINIA

Enthusiastic Meeting.—An enthusiastic meeting of the men of St. John's Parish, Charleston, the Rev. A. N. Slayton, rector, was held in the parish house March 21 in the interest of the campaign for missions and looking forward to the greater development of local religious work. George Laidley, city superintendent of schools, acted as chairman of meeting. He spoke of the work of parish for the last fifteen years and on the splendid spirit evidenced by the men in attendance. The Rev. Franklin J. Clark, New York, forward movement secretary of the Board of Missions, was the visiting speaker. After excellent talks from prominent men of Charleston the bishop referred to the possibilities and prospects for the community general and the congregation in particular.

It is hoped these campaigns for missions will become contagious throughout the diocese.

JAMES BARNES.

ATLANTA

A Business Woman's Organization—The Business Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, which was organized about four years ago, is one of the liveliest branches in the diocese. Their meetings are held after business hours at half-past six, once a month. Supper is served at the reasonable price of fifteen cents by the Woman's Auxiliary. This is followed by the business session, study class, lecture, or whatever the program committee has arranged for.

At the last meeting, Dean Johnston, who has recently returned from France, gave a lecture for them in the chapter house. The free-will offering taken at the door netted for missions $57.00. These women have a benefit fund by which they help members who have lost their positions or are sick. One of the latter, who is their special care, has been for five years an inmate of a tuberculosis sanitarium.

Atlanta Noon-Day Preachers—The preachers at the noon-day services at Atlanta, Georgia, during Lent are as follows: First week, Archdeacon Webber; second week, the Rev. William Way; third week, Dean Johnston; fourth week, Bishop Reese; fifth week, the Rev. P. A. Pugh; sixth week, the Rev. R. E. Campbell, O. H. C. E. S. TAYLOR.

RHODE ISLAND

Dr. Locke's Death—The death of the Rev. George L. Locke, D.D., rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol, on Sunday morning, March 23, announced in THE CHURCHMAN last week, has brought widespread grief. Dr. Locke has been rector of old St. Michael's for fifty-two years. During that time he had so grown into the life of the town as to be known and loved by the entire community, and was without question its leading citizen. In the course of the years he had filled many and various offices in town affairs. He was secretary of the Rogers Free Library for thirty years; and had served on the School Committee. He had been a prominent member of the State Board of Health for twenty-five years. In the diocese he was always a notable figure, and though shunning prominence gained it by his scholarly instincts and irresistible charm. He was for many years an examining chaplain of the diocese and a member of the ecclesiastical court. He has been the presiding officer at several annual sessions of the diocesan convention. His pastoral relations to his people, who included many of the old Bristol families, were near and tender, and gathered rich meaning with the years. At the time of his death, in his eighty-fourth year, he was the ranking presbyter of the diocese.

On Wednesday afternoon, March 26, the parish church was filled with parishioners and townspeople, when the burial service was read by Bishop Perry, assisted by the Rev. Anson B. Howard, assistant minister. Many of the clergy were present. The Holy Communion had been celebrated in the morning. Interment was at Juniper Hill Cemetery.

Lent in Pawtucket—The churches in Pawtucket and Central Falls are following out a long-standing custom of uniting in a Wednesday evening service the several churches. The following are preachers for the evening services: April 2, Trinity Church, the Rev. W. B. Hawk; April 9, Church of the Good Shepherd, the Rev. A. J. Watson. The Three Hour Service on Good Friday will be held this year at Trinity Church.

Congratulations to Dr. Goodwin—At a conference of the clergy of the diocese recently a letter of congratulation was sent to the Rev. Daniel Goodwin, D.D., of East Greenwich, on reaching his eighty-fourth birthday. Dr. Goodwin has been connected with the diocese since 1879, and is the oldest presbyter. He has been for many years the recognized authority in local ecclesiastical history.

Processional Cross—Emmanuel Church, Newport, has received a processional cross of dark oak, decorated in dull gold with the Angus Dei and the symbols of the four evangelists. It is the gift of three members of the parish as a thank offering for victory; and is designed by Ralph Adams Cram. JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

CONNECTICUT

Archdeacon Greig's Visit—Archdeacon Greig, of Worcester England, conducted a quiet day for the clergy of Hartford and vicinity, and preached in the evening at the united-parishes service at Christ Church, on March 20.

Crowd Sees Play—An overcrowded parish house and later a full town hall saw the new play, The Adz-Head, an episode in the life of St. Patrick, in West Hartford. The play gives the reason for missions as well as its lesson in history. On the evening at the town hall, Miss Mary Beach spoke on "With General Allenby on the way to the Capture of Jerusalem," with some beautiful pictures on the screen.

JOHN STOCKTON LITTELL.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Opportunity for Clergy—A delightful summer home, spacious and attractively situated in the village of Cleveland, on the shore of Oneida Lake, has been loaned to the bishops of the diocese by the owner, Mr. Bertram G. Foster, formerly of Cleveland, and now of Washington. The bishops have decided to use it as a summer rest house for the clergy of the diocese and their families during the present summer. An opportunity will be given the clergy and their families to spend one or two weeks in the house without charge between June and October, assignments to be made according to priority of application.

Clergyman Reveals Knowledge of Mining—The Rev. Theodore J. Dewees, of Christ Church, Binghamton, recently addressed the Men's Club of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Binghamton, on "The Mining and Preparation of Anthracite." The lecture was illustrated with lantern slides loaned by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Co.

Musical Services—The choir of Christ Church, Binghamton, is presenting a series of sacred compositions on Sunday evenings. On Sexagesima Sunday, Mendelssohn's Lauda Zion was given; on the First Sunday in Lent, Gounod's Gallia, and on the Fourth Sunday in Lent, Tozer's Way of the Cross. Stainer's Crucifixion will be given on Wednesday in Holy Week.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. M. P. Bowie has resigned Christ Church, Sackett Harbor, and removed from the diocese. Pending a permanent appointment the archdeacon will have charge assisted by lay readers.

A Correction—The Rev. L. A. Davison has not resigned Trinity Church, Camden, as has been reported, but has a three months' leave of absence.

Great Interest Aroused in Rome—So much interest has been aroused by the discussion of Atwater's book The Episcopal Church and Its Message to Men of To-Day by the men of Zion Church, Rome, that it has been found advisable to form two further groups. One of these is for men and women in the church on Sunday night. The third is a woman's group meeting under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of the parish. One of the group explains certain features about the plot of the book, and the discussion is introduced in the form of a conversation, four women of the parish assuming the parts of the rector, major, judge and physician of the book. One of the clergy answers any questions that arise. The lenten illustrated lectures for children have been largely attended. There were 168 present the first day, and the number has increased to 250, taxing the capacity of the parish hall.

New Parish Purchases Property—The congregation of St. Alban's, Syracuse, will purchase a residence property at 238 Strong Avenue. Title will not be obtained until June 1, but in the meantime the work of converting the first floor into an auditorium will be done. A committee have been nominated to the bishop to represent the congregation in business matters, and St. Alban's Guild has been organized under the presidency of H. W. Antley. The Rev. Dr. W. DeLancey Wilson is priest in charge.

Noon-Day Preacher at Syracuse—The Rev. David Stuart Hamilton of St. Paul's, Paterson, New Jersey, was the noon-day preacher at St. Paul's, Syracuse, March 25-27. Paterson has been the scene of many labor disturbances and it is a community tribute to his character for fairness that he has been repeatedly called in as arbiter and succeeded in settling differences to the satisfaction of all concerned.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

New Life in Petoskey—Emmanuel Church, Petoskey, has just completed a canvass for subscriptions preparatory to calling a rector, with the result that more money has been pledged than ever before in the history of the parish. Friends of the parish have also promised to paint the church and rectory. Petoskey is an important point for church work in the north and the vestry is trying to get in touch with a clergyman who will realize its possibilities. The new life is the outcome of the wise and energetic efforts of the new archdeacon.

MISSOURI

Rector Will Remain—The members of Grace parish, Jefferson City, and the people of the community in general are rejoicing over the decision of the rector, the Rev. George L. Barnes, which he has announced declining a very flattering invitation to become the rector of St. John's Church in the city of St. Louis. Mr. Barnes has been the rector of Jefferson City for two and a half years, coming here from a curacy in big St. John's Church, Waterbury, Connecticut, which is Mr. Barnes's home.

During his rectorship great gains have been made in things spiritual and there are indications of a wider financial outlook and new zeal for missionary work. Jefferson City is the capital of the state, where a new two million dollar state house has recently been completed, a place of great importance from the point of view of the Church's influence. Great affection and sympathy are being poured out to Mr. and Mrs. Barnes in the loss of their little baby boy, who was born in St. Luke's Hospital, St. Louis, March 9, and died after ten days.

Rector Home—The people of the Church of the Holy Communion are rejoicing in the return to home and to parish duties of the Rev. John Boden, the rector, who has been sojourning for a number of weeks in the south, following a surgical operation in St. Luke's Hospital.

ARIZONA

Women To Meet During Convocation—The annual meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Girls' Friendly Society of Arizona are to take place this year at Grace Church, Tucson, at the same time as convocation, the last two days of April and the first day of May. Tuesday, April 29, is to be set aside for W. A. meetings in particular, these to be preceded by a class in personal religion, to be led by Dean Scarlett of Phoenix. The G. F. S. meetings are to be held on Wednesday, April 30, the joint session of convocation, the W. A. and G. F. S. occurring at four on Wednesday. Earlier in the day a "quiet hour" will be held.

Raising Money For Pledges—The W. A. of Grace Church, Tucson, hit upon a very pleasantly successful way of raising the money for various pledges made to missions in Alaska, China, Northern Arizona, etc. It has a membership of about thirty women. These by the selection process common in children's games were grouped in two divisions each under the direction of a captain. It was decided to hold two luncheons in the rectory, giving to them the atmosphere as much as possible of private social functions.

At the first one group was to collect the food, cook and serve it at one large and a number of little tables scattered around the large lower rooms of the rectory. The other half of the members were each to pay for her own lunch and to bring one guest along who was to pay for hers. At the second lunch the order was to be reversed. It was to be a real luncheon each time, prettily set with flowers on the tables and really good things to eat, to be followed by a short musical program, so a dollar a head was to be charged. Twenty-eight was considered the capacity of the house at the first luncheon, but the number was increased to forty at the next. The result was not only the getting of a nice sum of money to help towards the Christianization in some tiny way of the heathen world; but the enjoyment of those who came the first time was so great that for the second it was impossible to accommodate nearly all of those who wished the privilege of paying their dollar and attending.

Scattered Missions—There are many scattered groups of people around Arizona which give occasion for a number of scattered missions. One of these at Fort Lowell—a place of interest to the stranger from East or West because of the picturesque adobe ruins which mark the site of a very early army post built when protection was necessary from the warlike Indians about. There a rather remarkable layman, a churchman and a lay-reader of the Episcopal Church has developed an interesting union mission, where for the Sunday service he uses the Prayer Book and wears the cassock and surplice of our Church. Those who live at Fort Lowell are almost all tubercular, here in the hope that Arizona's sunshine will restore to them their old-time health; and time frequently hangs heavy upon these men's and women's hands. The girls of the Girls' Friendly Society have adopted these "... given—to suffer for God's sake" as their occasional care. A party of bright chattering boys and girls drove out the other night and gave to these suffering ones of their brightness. They sang and recited and even danced for them.

Across the desert in another direction is a sanatorium for tubercular people of very limited means. As yet only men have been taken in. Now and then the G. F. S. girls bring of their brightness and cheer to these unfortunates also.

PITTSBURGH

Meeting of Convention—The fifty-fourth annual convention of the Diocese of Pittsburgh will take place at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 22 and 23.

Clerical Union—The March meeting of the Clerical Union took place on the 7th, at the Church of the Holy Cross, Pittsburgh, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, and followed by a conference between the bishop and the members of the union with regard to plans for the approaching convention in Easter Week. This was the first gathering of the sort that Bishop Whitehead had been able to attend for six months, and he met with an enthusiastic welcome. There was a large attendance, and a most excellent luncheon was furnished by the ladies of the congregation. In the afternoon the Rev. David Vincent Gray, of St. Mark's, Pittsburgh, read a paper on the subject, "What is the matter with us?"

After an absence of well nigh half a year, Bishop Whitehead has resumed his office hours at the Church Rooms, and has also begun a round of visitations in the city and near neighborhood.

SAN FRANCISCO

Services at Church of the Advent—The services of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco, are being conducted by the Rev. Jay Scott Budlong, superintendent of San Francisco Protestant Orphan Asylum, until the coming of the new rector, who is expected to begin his duties on Passion Sunday. The children from the orphanage attend the church school at the Church of the Advent every Sunday morning, and a number of the older children attend the services of the church.

MICHIGAN CITY

Beautifying Church Property — St. John's Church, Elkhart, has a special fund for buying plants, shrubs and flowers for the church property. Many gifts have been made to this fund indicating that the people of the parish desire to beautify the outside of the church as well as the inside.

Lenten Study Classes—The women of Gethsemane Church, Marion, are having study classes once every week during Lent, under the leadership of Miss Edna Johnson. Mrs. Wm. Wesley Daup is conducting a study class every Thursday afternoon of Lent for the women of St. John's Church, Elkhart. The young women of the St. Mary's Guild of St. James' Church, South Bend, have a study class every Monday evening of Lent. Assignments have been made and there is a different leader for each meeting.

St. James' Chapel Center of Howe Life—Howe School and the boys in attendance there were ever dear to the hearts of all the Howe family. As it was their desire that the Church and its life should be the dominating influence for the boys, St. James' Chapel has grown to be the center of school life. It has been the wish of each member of the Howe family that after death their remains might rest in the crypt of St. James' Chapel. On Feb. 5, Mrs. Mary Houghton Blake, of Boston, passed into Life Eternal. It has been but a few weeks since the death of her hus-

English Church News

The "Church Assembly"—When I said that the Representative Council was concerned about its transformation into a kind of grand committee it had not yet been apparent that its name is itself likely to disappear. It might have adopted the American use and called itself a "convention," but possibly because it had a good working example of an authoritative body closer at hand, namely in Scotland, the word "assembly" seems to be the more probable. "Council" as the Church Times remarks, might have indicated synodal functions, and is therefore best avoided.

The Hope of an "Enabling Act"—But shall we get Parliament to consent? For four days the council debated details, and at the end it adopted the scheme with certain modifications, the sole dissident being the Bishop of Hereford. There were other critics and malcontents, but they did not vote contra. The masterly summing up by the Archbishop of Canterbury has at least had one immediate effect: it has half converted the Times. I notice that the Church Family Newspaper declares the conversion to be complete, but the leading article hardly warrants so much. At least, however, our leading newspaper has dropped its advocacy of a Royal Commission and its support of the Bishop of Hereford. It sees that there is something after all in the idea of a kind of grand committee which should prepare schemes of reform, with the authority of church opinion behind them, and should submit these to Parliament. Nothing can be abated of Parliamentary control, so long as the connection between Church and state exists.

The Franchise—Another decision which makes popular consent more possible is the decision of the council to have the widest conceivable franchise for the new assembly. Very many of us have been eating our words in this matter, your correspondent included. It seemed so reasonable to claim that Confirmation was the only logical basis of membership, as seems to be generally the case in the Anglican Communion. But the council, remembering all that has been said on the subject, and possibly just a trifle influenced by the desire to make things easier in Parliament, has adopted the widest franchise, that of Baptism, which, however, is to be coupled with a declaration that the voter is a member of the Church of England, and is not in communion with any other religious body. Even the Church Times is reconciled to this change of front: "some may slip in who ought to be excluded, but not in numbers to nullify the representative character of the assembly."

Death of Dean Beeching—Space will permit only the briefest reference to the loss to the Church and to Literature occasioned by the death of Dr. Beeching, Dean of Norwich. In his days at Westminster Abbey, he was beloved by the intellectuals of London. A poet with many friends, he was a great success in his own sphere. But almost unexpectedly he was an equal success in the very different environment of Norwich Deanery.

band, Dr. Clarence John Blake, a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. James Howe, and a most loyal and devoted trustee of Howe School. The remains of Dr. and Mrs. Blake have been cremated and their ashes were mingled and consigned to a resting place in the crypt of St. James Chapel. This was the wish of the deceased. Mrs. Loy and Miss Houghton of Boston, sisters of Mrs. Blake, were present at the ceremony of interment.

HARRISBURG

An Every Member Canvass—A very successful every member canvass was carried on in St. John's Parish, York, on a recent Sunday. The results were: Offerings increased 130% over 1918 and 100% above the previous high record, the number of contributors increased 140%, many members enrolled in various parochial activities, many children added to the Sunday School, which now stands at its highest record as to enrollment and attendance.

During the past three months the rectory has been completely renovated. A modern heating plant has been installed, a handsome fireplace built and indirect electric lighting placed throughout the house. Improvements are also being made to the extensive rectory grounds under the direction of the Wm. H. Moon Company, of Morrisville, Landscape Gardeners.

The Men's Club has been reorganized and has assumed responsibility for several parochial activities. As results may be mentioned the facts that the attendance at the evening services is larger than it has been for several years and a men's Bible Class has been organized in the Sunday school. A girl's choir of thirty voices has been formed which will sing at the lenten services and assist the regular choir at the Sunday evening services.

A Social Service Club—A meeting of those interested or actively engaged in social work in York was recently held and a social service club was organized, modeled on similar clubs in other cities. Meetings are held monthly which are addressed by various speakers engaged in social service throughout the country. The rector of St. John's, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, was elected president.

Out of Debt—St. Paul's Church, Wellsboro, is reported out of debt for the first time since 1902.

"The Man Outside the Church." This is a Volume of Sermons. The American Church Monthly says of this book: "Simple, practical, to the point in every instance, and readable as most sermons are not. They are the sort of thing that needs to be preached, and that when it is preached is likely to have effect not only on the man outside the Church, but the easy-going, casual worshipper in the pew." Price $1.50 net.

"The Supreme Sacrifice." Devotional Addresses at the Good Friday "Three Hours' Service." Many periodicals have spoken highly of this book, as being a modern presentation of The Sufferings of our Blessed Lord. The sale of this book has necessitated a reprint. Price 75 cents net.

"The Religion of the Tommy." The Boston Transcript says of this book: "After all, it is the religion of the average man that pulls us up and pulls us together. This Book represents a nation's output in faith, hope and charity. Written by an American, this reveals as well as anything that we have seen the soldier's feelings about religious matters, and discusses suggestively the lessons for the churches. It is full of striking and quotable material."

St. Andrew's Cross says: "It is fruitful of the most reasonable philosophy, and the most wholesome, helpful thoughts on the problems facing the individual, the church and the world. On the whole, we should class this among the most uplifting and thoroughly enjoyable books on the war." Price $1.00 net.

The Church and the Immigrant

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just read the editorial entitled, "America's Mandatory" in your issue of March 15, and beg to thank you for calling attention to the vital matter of American's duty to the foreigner. It is evident, as you tersely put it, that "America is asleep. It recognizes neither its opportunity, nor its responsibility" to the foreign-born population or their children here. And what of the Church's duty? Some of us have viewed the subject with deep heart searchings. We have earnestly tried to arouse the Church to the seriousness of the situation, and the door open to us as to no other religious organization, to minister effectually to the many millions of strangers here. So far, our efforts have been unavailing, save as individual work has been undertaken by certain dioceses locally. But there has been a lamentable lack of recognition of either our obligation or opportunity for concerted action. Probably it has not been realized that the "problem of the foreigner" in our midst, is of national importance and nation wide proportions. The Church's indifference to this situation, passes belief.

So long ago as the Cincinnati Convention (1910), I moved the appointment of a Joint Committee on "the Church's duty to the foreign-born and their children." Bishop Talbot was chairman, and I had the honor of being selected secretary, of this committee. A most thorough investigation of the subject was instituted. Immigration had at that time reached a million or more a year. Questionnaires were sent to every bishop in the land, and, also to governors of all the states, secretaries of state, immigration officials, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the clergy engaged locally in the work among foreigners. The replies were illuminative. And on these was based the report presented to the New York Convention in 1913. It will be found in the Journal of Convention for that year under Appendix XVIII. I venture to urge its consideration by the memorialists of the provincial Synod of Washington, whose petition to General Convention this fall will be presented, and the subject I hope, re-opened.

But what became of our report? Well, we had the satisfaction of presenting it—and that was all! True, a resolution was appended which passed both houses, "that the Board of Missions include hereafter, in its aggressive program, Christian work among resident foreigners and their children, . . . and that such work be given the concerted approval, cooperation, and assistance of the Church at large."

Fearing (what has since proved to be the fact) that this was too indefinite, and desirous of securing legislation which would produce results, and provide the necessary machinery therefor, the committee offered a further resolution "recommending" the Board of Missions to appoint a permanent secretary of immigration; to obtain and publish information about foreigners in order to enable the Church to help them; to cooperate with diocesan authorities in instituting and maintaining systematic Christian work among them; and to publish in various languages, information regarding the Church, her history, doctrine, discipline, and worship; and to set forth "those ideals of Christian citizenship upon which this nation is built." We were of opinion this would constitute at least a working basis on which to begin. But the resolution thus offered by and in the name of the committee, embodying conclusions arrived at only after earnest consideration covering years of painstaking investigation and study, was shown scant courtesy and given short shrift. It was placed on the calendar, and when reached was "laid on the table," without affording the committee any chance whatever to utter a word in its behalf ! ! ! That disposed of it. And thus the work of years was nullified.

It is to be hoped that the memorial of the Synod of Washington be granted that deference and favor, befitting the cause it sponsors. But if it fail, I would suggest the memorialists have the resolution which was adopted with our report, as a point from which to proceed with a movement which potentially means so much to both the Church and nation.

Immigrant Work

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN :

The Board of Missions is preparing to publish a book on the immigrant, to be used in mission study classes next year. It is desirable of course that the book be as complete as possible, especially regarding all forms of active relationship shown by our Church toward immigrants. Will you therefore permit me, through your columns, to request that anyone who is engaged in, or who knows of, religious or social work, conducted by the Episcopal Church, specifically on behalf of people of foreign birth or parentage in the United States, will, as soon as possible, write me stating the location of the work, its character and its extent. By so doing, they will be of the utmost assistance in helping to make the forthcoming book of the greatest value. This request is not intended to apply to those priests and others with whom I have already been in correspondence regarding this matter.

Unfortunate Editing

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN :

In my review of Dr. Steele's book Addresses and Sermons to Students I wrote: "His messages insist on a practical idealism that is held in such sure vision that the truth has no fears but can even take a human delight shining here and there without respect of institutions or traditions, exposing them to the world in a way that makes it improbable of their reelection to positions of influence." Your office, no doubt hard pressed by the affairs of the great city and the burden of the world resting thereon, edited my rather long sentence to make it read that Dr. Steele would hereafter fail of election to positions of influence. As we of the far West keep our heads cool with ice packs the element of nonsense you introduced into our grave review is quite obvious to us. Dr. Steele of course will not suffer nearly as much as our own pride but in all fairness to the brave men and women who valiantly shoulder the pen and "rush in where angels fear to tread" some explanation should be given the eager and expectant public.

The New Books

James I's Policies

POLITICAL WORKS OF JAMES I. Reprinted from the edition of 1616 with an introduction by C. H. McIlwain. Harvard University Press. 1918.

This is the first volume of what are to be known as the Harvard Political Classics which are to be reprints of scarce books on political theory. The volume is intended rather for university students than for churchmen. It contains the Basilikon Doran, the book of instructions which James I wrote for his sons, his essay on Free Monarchies, his Apology for the Oath of Allegiance, a long defense of the Right of Kings, and a number of speeches.

The edition reprinted is the one prepared by the King himself and the chief reason for reissuing it was the difficulty most people experienced in getting access to it.

While it may not seem at a glance the sort of book to be of interest to the average rector or layman, it is one of real interest and value. The ideas of James are interesting in themselves. He is one of the most distinguished past defenders of a theory of kings, whose most distinguished exponent of the present day is now in retirement in Holland. James's arguments are a great deal more convincing than the Kaiser's and James himself is a much more interesting man to meet.

The book is also important because of the amount of light it sheds upon the personality of James and some of the important questions of his reign which is now conceded to be one of the important periods of English Church history.

The great compromise with the Roman Catholics made by Bancroft and James has lasted until the present day and still governs the relations of the Roman Catholics to the English Church and to the State. James himself has furnished one of the best explanations and commentaries upon it that we have. No one again can understand the Hampton Court Conference and the Puritan question without some acquaintance with James himself, for his personal influence on such questions was considerable.

Professor McIlwain's scholarly introduction will provide most readers with exactly what they wish to know. It is well worth reading even by those whose interest in church history is neither very extensive nor very profound. The roots of the English Church are in the reigns of Elizabeth and James.

The Miracle at Cana

THE WINE OF GOD, A SPIRITUAL STUDY OF OUR LORD'S FIRST MIRACLE. By Shirley C. Hughson, O.H.C., Holy Cross Press, 1918.

Father Hughson's study of our Lord's first miracle is full of beauty and might well be made the basis of quiet meditation. It is a useful book to read in Lent. There is much in it that is well said and needs to be said often. It may be questioned, however, whether his interpretation is in all points correct. He takes the ground, for example, that the Blessed Virgin appeals to our Lord at the marriage supper in order to hasten the manifestation of His Messiahship—"That manifestation which she knows is so near at hand." Possibly this is true, but the fact that she so often afterward misunderstood our Lord's words and acts would seem to tell strongly against such a view. There are also definite statements which are open to objection, such as "Judgment is an intellectual, not a moral, faculty, and, thank God, we shall not be held accountable at the Judgment for our intellectual shortcomings." One imagines that this will depend upon whether or not our intellectual shortcomings are due to our own fault. And when it is said, "It is the uniform teaching of Holy Scripture, that the one fundamental virtue which must be the basis of all other Christian virtues is humility," it is necessary to substitute the word love for the word humility if the statement is to be correct.

Lest this seem captious criticism it should be repeated that the book as a whole is very beautiful and will repay quiet study.

The Creed

THE MEANING OF THE CREED. Edited, with an introduction, by the Rev. G. K. A. Bell. The Macmillan Company. $2.00.

Here are fourteen scholarly yet uncontroversial papers on the Articles of the Apostles' Creed, originally issued as separate tracts in direct connection with the National Mission of Repentance and Hope. Apart from the worth or value of any one tract above another (and like all such composite efforts there is bound to be inequality of treatment), the fact they were published as a "war measure," to remove popular misconception as to "the character of the Gospel message and its relation to the daily life of ordinary men and women" in a time of crisis, reminds American churchmen of the good use of such literature for the unchurched and others unfamiliar with the fundamentals of the faith. The man of the street in this country may not have the same religious background as his English brother for an appreciation of such tracts, but they are needed nevertheless. Perhaps not in the same dress or language, but needed.

Nearly all the papers have been written by well known teachers and leaders—e.g., by two regius professors of divinity—one of Oxford, Dr. H. Scott Holland, writes on the "Resurrection"; the other, of Cambridge, Dr. V. H. Stanton, writes on "Jesus Christ and History." The Dean of Christ Church, Dr. Strong, writes on "Faith"; the Bishop of Ely on the "Ascension"; Father Figgis on the "Church"; Dr. Swete (late regius professor of divinity, Cambridge) on "Jesus Christ as Judge." Mr. Rawlinson's paper on the "Communion of Saints" is written with the full glare of the war on the use of prayers for the dead.

There is a very carefully prepared bibliography on every article, but alas, no index of much material hidden away in every paper.

Hours of Joy

THE JOYFUL HOURS OF JESUS. By the Rev. J. Gibson Lowrie, D.D., The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, 1918. $1.25 net.

After months of war, the Governor-General of Canada urged his people to go back to as normal a life as possible, "Otherwise," he said, "we shall be a nation of nervous wrecks." How much we need this lesson! Dr. Lowrie is doing a good work in directing our attention to the hours of joy which came to our Lord, as an example for us. In simple, graphic words the author, in the opening chapter, shows the elements of happiness in Jesus' life, the fine normal poised childhood and youth, and later, the qualities which spiritually and mentally and physically wrought that life into our Perfect Pattern. It's a wonderful chapter written for everyday folk, and it would astonish and gladden many an harassed soul, if they could read it.

By the Bishop of Zanzibar

CONQUERING AND TO CONQUER. By Frank Weston, D.D., Bishop of Zanzibar. Published by the S.P.C.K. Foreword by the Bishop of London. London, 1918. 1 shilling.

"A tender little book," the Bishop of London calls it, because it is meant to be an answer to men's difficulties and perplexities and dangers in a time when all three are accentuated beyond any previous experience. It certainly is a revelation of the Bishop of Zanzibar, not suspected hitherto, for most people think of him as a hard controversialist. In simple and touching language he speaks of the Love of God which in spite of the war, its iniquities and its sufferings, must still be the basis of our faith. The chapter titles suggest the scope of the discussions, "God and our Punishments," "The Sorrows of God," "God, the World's Victim," "Love's Achievement," etc. The dedication is interesting, in that the book is offered to "the officers and men of the expeditionary forces in German East Africa." The Daily Altar

THE DAILY ALTAR. By Herbert Willett and Charles Clayton Morrison, The Christian Century Press, Chicago, 1918. $2.50.

That we are in a new day in more ways than one is evidenced by this beautiful book, bound in flexible leather, with its "set prayers" and observance of "days and seasons." It comes from the Christian Century Press and was prepared by two of the outstanding leaders of that vigorous denomination first propagated by Alexander Campbell. For each day of the fifty-two weeks of any year there is provided a theme with meditation, a scripture text, a poem and a prayer by the authors. The biblical text used is not a familiar one, but the work is excellent though many of the prayers remind us of the fact that only time can produce a book of great prayers.

Some More Books for Lent

IT would be difficult to find elsewhere within the same compass such clear and admirable teaching about the Holy Communion as is contained in this book of eighty pages, The Eucharistic Life (by two members of the Oxford Mission Brotherhood of the Epiphany; Longmans, Green, 90c.). It consists of the substance of addresses given by two members of the Oxford Mission Brotherhood of the Epiphany, at the Students' Conference of the Syrian Christian Church, held at Kottayam, India, in May, 1916. It is very reverent in tone and remarkable for the balance displayed in the treatment of its subject. As the title implies it has to do mainly with the relation of the Holy Communion to our everyday life.

Essays in Lent (by Hamilton Wright Mabie; Dutton, $1.00) consists of eight very brief but charming essays first published in the Outlook in the spring of 1915. They are written in Dr. Mabie's best style, and deal in a very suggestive and helpful way with the Christian's battle against sin and his victory over it. They are based upon our Lord's temptation in the wilderness and the triumph which He won there and in His Passion over the powers of evil. The book may be read in half an hour but most people will want to reread it more than once.

There are now available so many admirable manuals of preparation for the Holy Communion that another would scarcely seem to be necessary, but even a casual glance at My Church Prayer Book (by Herbert F. Tompkinson; Longmans, Green, 20c.) will convince one that it has its own distinct place and that its publication is abundantly justified. It is designed for boys and young men, and is especially suited to their particular needs as is evidenced by the fact that 142,000 copies have already been called for. It would be a great help if the author would get out an edition adapted to the service in the American Prayer Book.

The Holy Spirit and the Individual, An Appeal to Experience (by Arthur W. Robinson, D.D., S.P.C.K., $1.00) is a delight. It contains but ninety-five pages but is full of thought, and will be found especially useful in giving definiteness to one's conception of the Person and work of the Holy Spirit. Dr. Robinson is thoroughly abreast of the times and has done much in a quiet way, both here and in other recent books, to interpret religion from the standpoint of modern knowledge. "God and the World," "Christ and the Church," and "The Holy Spirit and the Individual," might well be carefully pondered by those who are over-zealous in their desire for a restatement of the creeds. The value of the book is increased by an epilogue in which the author depicts an ideal Christian congregation. J. W. S.

Easter Anthems

JESUS LIVES. By T. Herbert Spinney. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 10c.

After a maestoso introduction for chorus, this anthem develops a quiet theme for baritone solo, followed by a quartet. The conclusion is a bright passage on the text "For Now is Christ Risen."

LIFT YOUR GLAD VOICES. By Stanley R. Avery. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 16c.

We think the combination of a modern anthem with the "Hallelujah Chorus" is not good—either can stand alone, but in the present case the one section suffers from too close proximity to the other.

HE LIVES. By G. Waring Stebbins. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 16c.

Three unaccompanied Hallelujahs after a long tonic chord serve as an introduction, and the same harmonies appear again toward the close. The weak part of the anthem seems to lie in unnecessary chromatic modulation.

THROUGH DEATH TO LIFE. By W. Berwald. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 16c.

A nine-page anthem in six-four time throughout, with tenor solo.

LET ALL THE WORLD REJOICE. By Philip Greeley. 1919. 12c.

This is also published as a solo for high or medium voice; and it would seem as if the solo ought to prove the more effective of the two.

IN THE END OF THE SABBATH. By Louis Adolphe Coerne. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 12c. For Mixed Voices with Soprano or Tenor Solo.

The same, arranged for women's voices, three parts.

The former is rather the more effective, as the text and music warrant vigorous treatment.

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER. By George B. Nevin. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 16c.

The first page or two contains matter which is simple, direct, effective. It is when the composer begins to use the tuba, so to speak, that he falls short of his goal.

The Wars of Israel

THE WAR AND THE BIBLE. By H. G. Enelow, D.D. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. 60c.

Written to show the attitude toward, and the understanding of, war in the Bible, this little book is a classic. Its style is pure and poetic, and the author's excellent sense of religious values has done a great deal to show the beauty and strength of the Old Testament. The Old Testament patriarchs and leaders were no molly-coddles, neither were they fire-eaters, but they preserved a sane balance between necessary war and ideal peace, and between noble and ignoble wars. The rabbi who wrote this book not only understands the spirit of ancient Israel, but he has also drunk deep at the well of Christian thought. His treatment of the ethics of war, of the heroes, poetry, and prayers of war, and of the peace ideals of the Bible is excellent. SAMUEL A. B. MERCER.

Chinese Christian Murdered

Dr. Theodore T. Wong, who with two of his fellow-countrymen was recently murdered—apparently from motives of robbery—at his residence in Washington, D. C., was one of the notable fruits of Christianity in China. His father, the Rev. K. C. Wong, was the first convert of the China mission and its first deacon and priest. Dr. Wong was educated at Saint John's College, Shanghai, and at the University of Virginia. As a man he was quiet and unobtrusive, but was held in unusual respect and affection by all who knew him. Friendliness and loyalty might be stated as his prominent characteristics.

A SANER EASTER

By E. S. Taylor

WOULD anyone have believed that the two great feast days of the Church, could have degenerated into thoughtless frolics—Christmas, celebrated by elaborate dinners and dances, without a thought of the Holy Child, the Father's great gift to us, and Easter into a fashion display.

The larger the city, the longer and more noticeable the parade, until of late years, the word that signifies to church people the rising of our Lord, is used to denote this spectacle of handsome clothes.

Easter parade! Heaven save the mark! The spring with its beautiful fresh foliage and flowers, more than any other season, recalls to our minds the words of the canticle: "Thou, Lord, hast made us glad through Thy works." But the creations of the milliner, dressmaker and tailor are not suggested by these words of our service. Why should they be? They represent only money. Poor church people, to be represented on Easter day by selfishly spent money!

And that brings us to another and very personal point. For each one who can join the parade, whether in church or on the sidewalk, how many, think you, cannot even afford a new five-cent handkerchief? Do you suppose their neighbors' fine clothes, flaunted in their eyes, make the Easter season any sweeter and more comforting to them? Yet they are the ones who need its peace and comfort. The man "who fell among thieves" was not noticeably helped or materially assisted by the procession that "passed by on the other side." The injunction of St. Paul "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ," is certainly not carried out by the paraders. Is it not very much the other way? Are not the burdens doubled and quadrupled by the sight of such an unnecessary expenditure? Little Joe is not the only one who has found out the meaning of "t'othered."

I remember a young woman who had always had plenty to buy what she desired, but lost her fortune the first year of her married life, and when the second Easter came, faced the alternative of staying at home or going to church in a dress that had a darn on the shoulder, to her, the most conspicuous place on the whole waist. Being a good churchwoman, she went, but even so, she could not follow the service; her mind dwelt on the humiliation of that darn, while memory recalled how often she had encouraged women to come to the services, telling them, a clean, mended dress was good enough for anyone to wear to God's house, that clean poverty was no disgrace. Now quietly thinking it over, she realized that something was wrong, for the words didn't carry the comfort to her that she had thought they did to those others. But presently a lady passed down the aisle who was known to have plenty of money at her disposal, and lo! what a glow of kindness and good cheer came with her, for the most casual observer could see at a glance, that neither her hat nor suit were new. The little lady of the darned dress took heart, and thanking God for all His other mercies, forgot the darn, but never the object lesson. She has been able to have plenty of new clothes ever since, but she has never worn them on Easter.

Was St. Paul looking towards these latter days when he said: "Let nothing be done through vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves."

Have we ever realized that one of the greatest crosses arising from the lack of urgently needed money, does not lie in the fact that we are wearing old clothes, but in the humiliation of knowing we have no others and the certainty in our shame that every passer-by must know it also? Why should Easter be used to make this particular cross heavier and harder to bear?

Perhaps our greatest trouble is the temptation to hold fast the pleasant things of life, and to relegate the hard, painful facts and acts to others; like the sectarian who asked his neighbor, a churchman, to come to his Easter service. The latter said: "I did not know you kept Good Friday." "We don't." "Then," thundered the churchman, "by what right do you keep Easter?"

Surely, if we all kept the Three Hours of Good Friday, if we all went down to the grave with Him,—not just content with "sitting down to watch Him there,"—would we not naturally keep a saner Easter? Would we not crave and insist on it? Would not the worth while things easily overbalance the frivolous, the things of eternity swallow up the things of time?

THERE are men who are doomed to pass their lives on broken wings because some malevolent chance has excluded them from that sphere in which alone they could accomplish the highest that is in them to do.—Treitschke.

WILLIAM RICHARDS BUTLER

IN the recent death of Mr. William Richards Butler, a devoted and greatly beloved layman has been called to a sphere of higher usefulness. There are thousands of friends throughout the Church who will feel that in his removal we have lost a man whose life and personality radiated an atmosphere of genuine Christian cheer and helpfulness. While only one diocese had the honor of claiming him as its own, in a very real sense he belonged to the whole Church, and in his generous devotion to every good cause had made for himself a warm place in many hearts.

Nature had endowed him richly with many lovable gifts, which had been refined by culture, sanctified by grace, and then placed at the Master's disposal. Born within the bosom of the Church, his whole life was spent in the glad service of her work and worship. A graduate of Lehigh University, the senior warden of St. Mark's Church, Mauch Chunk, in which he was baptized as a child, he occupied many positions of dignity and honor within and without this diocese. For more than a quarter of a century he was an honored deputy to the General Convention, and for years a member of the Board of Missions. In his own diocese he was secretary of our Board of Missions, a delegate to the provincial synod, and keenly interested in every diocesan interest and undertaking.

As a public speaker he was in great demand, and his fine voice, commanding presence, and contagious sense of humor from which he often passed to the tender and pathetic, combined with a degree of moral earnestness, never failed to carry conviction to his hearers.

As would naturally be expected of such a man, he threw himself enthusiastically into war work and as chairman of the Red Cross was almost constantly engaged in making public addresses. While his religious and patriotic services were so incessant and praiseworthy, and while in the community where he lived he was easily its best known and leading citizen, perhaps it was in the privacy of his home that his virtues shone with peculiar splendor and attractiveness. In the intimacy of his happy home no one could know him without feeling the peculiar charm and fascination of his influence.

Let us hope and believe, for our comfort, that the example and influence of such a life as that of William R. Butler will be far reaching and permanent, and that many other men will have caught from him the contagion of the joy and moral beauty of gifts devoted to the service of Christ and His Church.

THE WILL TO HUMILITY

JOHN RUSKIN in describing Tintoretto's picture of the Crucifixion draws attention to a detail which many who have gazed upon the great picture may have overlooked. We see in the centre the three crosses, grim and dark, against a glowering sky. All nature seems to share the mood of the awe-struck watchers at the foot of the Cross. We see the soldiery and the women and the distant city hung in menacing clouds, and Calvary seems to stand on a bleak rock overhanging the heart of the world. All of this we are familiar with in the classic pictures of the Passion.

But the painter with an inspiration intuitively Christian added a significant touch to the scene. There in the background, easily to be overlooked, is depicted the figure of an ass feeding upon the trampled branches of Palm Sunday's triumphal procession into Jerusalem—an ass eating up the leaves of yesterday's triumph while the hero of that brief hour's adulation hangs upon the Cross.

The painter of the picture and the writer of the collect which Christendom repeats in Holy Week taught one and the same definition of life. The real triumph of the Master's life was His humility—the little that He asked for Himself from the world. The success which the crowd saw was made of such stuff as an ass may devour, to be gone forever. That is Christian teaching. It is oriental. It breathes the spirit of self-abnegation. But it is very hard for a modern man to understand it. The ass in Tintoretto's picture is devouring many of the prizes that men and women up and down the streets of the world are wearing their souls out to acquire—ascendancy and recognition. Therein lie the tragedy and the despair of multitudes of empty hearts today. Whatever our compromises are with life as we stand in the shadow of the Cross this coming week, it is at least fitting with the creed we say and the Master we claim that we face the rugged truth to which discipleship dedicates us. The will to humility is a fitting theme for Holy Week.

May it not be said that we never feel that we know the full measure of the worth of a deed until we know how the doer of that deed feels in his inmost soul towards life? Only to state the case in this way makes us blush as we search our memories. Praised for sacrifice and goodness! But if people only knew how little we gave up! Praised for resignation! But did our friends know the rebellion that is often in our hearts! Praised for courage under disappointment! Ah, but did people know how we still love the things others have won and we have lost! How that Cross of Christ at which the world is reverently gazing this week would shrivel and collapse if we were suddenly persuaded that Jesus were like us—that some things hurt His soul which we permit to sting ours!

What if it mattered to Him that Pontius Pilate had power and popularity denied to the Saviour of mankind; that it hurt Him because the king was rich and He was poor; that He had a cross and the king a crown. These are commonplace remarks, but before dismissing them we must remember that the bitterest heartburnings of our lives come from our having missed the beauty of their simple Christian truth. If we were asked to select three words from all the Scripture narratives of the Christ which grip the heart of Christianity, we should choose three words from the Palm Sunday epistle: "He humbled Himself." May they not mean that He had got so far into the heart of life that no one, nothing that could happen, could hurt Him but Himself? He literally asked nothing, nothing of the world except the joy of giving Himself in service for it. He asked nothing, nothing of God but the grace to lose Himself in the Father's life. Not till we experience that kind of humility can we know the peace of God.

Is this a soft and pious trait, emasculating life and robbing it of the zest of battle? We think we know what the aggressive will is, we modern folk. It means overcoming nature, building towers of Babel, the struggle of the fittest to survive, our great men with masterful manners and iron courage subduing the waste and dominating the world by their brain and personality. Admirable in its way. But all this is child's work in comparison with the titanic will power that must be put into the battle for Christian humility. We have seen men with iron wills fitted to control a nation or hold great industries in their grip, but you would break their hearts if you robbed them of the prize they coveted. If another got the credit for some rare deed they had done, they would stir heaven and earth to expose him and secure the laurel for themselves. It is worth while in Holy Week to face the kind of battle that lies ahead of the will to humility, lest we think it a soft and nerveless life. In a book of devotions written by a saintly bishop, who had learned through suffering the way of humility, there are set forth some questions for self-examination. Among these questions occur some like these:

Which motive is stronger in the work you are doing today, God's glory, the good of the world, or that you should win?

Can you bear it that another should get the credit for what you have done, or is it enough that God should know?

Can you bear to do obscure work that brings no praise, nor credit, yet, which you know Christ wants you to do?

Can you rejoice to see another succeed in the work where you have failed?

When we hear these questions repeated, we know that we are in the very presence of Christ.

HUMILITY AND DEMOCRACY

OUR modern self-assertion is in the end destructive of the very thing we practical folk most pride ourselves on possessing—efficiency. The will to humility is infinitely more practical, has far greater industrial value than the will to power. Self-assertion ultimately makes bad workmen and shoddy fabrics. The finest work of the world, whether we work as artisans, teachers, servants of the state, artists or statesmen has always been done by the people who have forgotten wage. They have wanted to give their best to life, come what may. Humility built the cathedral of Rheims, the will to power has destroyed it. Is this the type of our modern workmanship with all its blatant claims of efficiency? Look at the shameful list of casualties from frauds and cheats and cheap work, short cuts to wage and profit—"just to get by," as the vernacular has it! Look at politics, national and international! We cannot, try as we may, make an oriental rug or weave a piece of tapestry equal to the magic beauty created by mediæval peasants and serfs. It took humility to do that. Capitalism clamoring for profits and workmen battling for wages have spoiled our handicraft.

There is something on the other side of the ledger—the multiplication of comforts which the multitudes are sharing today. But there is one supreme comfort that the multitudes are not sharing today, even if every workman can own his victrola and his Ford. We mean joy from his work. That is a religious thing. It belongs to humility. Without single-mindedness, any man's work is tainted. Without humility, no man ever achieves the singleness of heart that transforms drudgery into a free will offering to God. Humility is the only grace that can save democracy from tragic ruin.

The youth of the world today are standing upon tip-toe with a great light in their eyes and a mighty hope in their hearts. Suddenly what was once the dream of poets and saints, is no longer a dream. It has become a mighty resolution. In the world that is to be, the mighty shall be put down from their seats; the humble shall be exalted. Two groups of men are proclaiming that resolution. One is a menace to the race. The other is singing the battle cries of the Kingdom of God. Can one think of anything more dangerous than the rule of the majority, absolute democracy, if that majority is to have as its ruling impulse the old spirit of self-assertion? The selfishness of the world from which we are emerging today was at least curbed by intelligent self-interest. But pure democracy may exist without any discipline whatever. We are going to have democracy in government, in industry and social life. The writing is on the wall. But the prayer which night and day all lovers of the Christ the world over should be sending up to the throne of God is that in that democracy, humility, not self-assertion, may be exalted. Christendom has experimented with all the minor virtues of Christ's religion. It has persistently dodged the heart of the matter—the grace that made St. Francis, Brother Lawrence and St. Vincent de Paul.

Never before in history has it been made so clear as it is today that upon the Gospel of the Cross pivots the future of the race. The only democracy we can entrust with civilization is a Christian democracy. The heart of the world is hungry today for something better than a peace which means merely the cessation of war. We want the peace of God in our hearts, our homes and our workshops. We who claim to be brothers of Christ must seek again at the foot of the Cross this Holy Week the preparation of a humble spirit to do our part towards the peace of the world.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

BISHOP LAWRENCE RETURNS TO HIS WORK

IT was rumored after Bishop Lawrence's severe and dangerous illness this winter that he would be obliged to relinquish his work for at least a year. His physician advised a long season of recuperation and rest. But we learn that the bishop is again in his diocese making visitations. The whole Church will rejoice in this sign of recovery but all of us sincerely hope that the bishop's eagerness to return to his duties will not place too great a tax upon his strength. Massachusetts is in the midst of the great Twenty Weeks' revival. Nothing, we venture to say, within our generation has plowed deeper into the subsoil of the religious life of a community than has the great spiritual awakening in Massachusetts, conceived and carried through by the Bishop of Massachusetts. Bishop Lawrence works without waste of energy, but his disciplined powers have been used not for sparing his strength but for increasing the output of service. He has taken on, one after another, gigantic tasks for the advancement of the Church's interests. He has earned a longer rest than he has permitted himself to take.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON AND THE WESLEYANS

WE hope that the readers of THE CHURCHMAN read the account given by our English correspondent last week of the movement in England for a union between the Church of England and the Wesleyans. The statesmanship of this endeavor was made evident by Mr. Cairns. The chasm between the Wesleyan Methodists and the Church of England is narrow. Among all the non-conformist Churches Wesleyanism is closest to the mother Church. It is the point at which the schism can be most easily healed. The Church of England has an advantage in this regard which the Episcopal Church in the United States does not possess. A bishop in the English Church counts himself to be a bishop of the whole diocese. Every soul in his diocese, whatever his church affiliation may be, is still within the bishop's cure of souls. The bishop is a bishop in the Church of God. Not all bishops, of course, may have the wisdom to use such a theory for the advancement of unity. But it is easier to capitalize that theory in England than it is in America. Therefore when the Bishop of London proposes ordination of Wesleyan ministers by bishops and presbyters, restoring the Wesleyan Church to its original intention, a "society" within the Church of England, there is made a mutual acknowledgement of responsibility for the schism and a means is offered by which the Methodists may be drawn back step by step over the road which led them away from communion with the mother Church.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON ON THE INTERCHANGE OF PULPITS

WHILE the attitude of the Bishop of London and some of his fellow-bishops on the definition of the episcopate makes admirably for unity, there is a flaw, as it seems to us, in the logic of their position when they deal with the subject of interchange of pulpits with non-conformist ministers. The Bishop of London deprecates an interchange of pulpits "which would have the appearance of reunion without the essential thing." What, in the name of reason, has an interchange of pulpits to do with the question of unity? Both sides to the controversy have exalted this simple act of Christian fellowship to a position of importance entirely out of proportion to the meaning of the act. No one was ever deceived, no one can be deceived into thinking that an invitation given to a minister ordained to a ministry other than that of our Church implies that the recipient of the invitation is a minister in our communion. No theory can transform the facts into other than they are. A Presbyterian minister is a Presbyterian minister. He knows that he is not an Episcopal clergyman. He does not wish to become such. No Episcopalian hearing him preach mistakes him for a duly ordained minister of the Episcopal Church. But the bishop as a bishop in the Church of God ought to be fearlessly trusted not to do violence to the souls of his people when he exercises his judgment in inviting ministers of other communions to preach in the pulpits of the Episcopal Church. If a bishop holds high enough a conception of his episcopal office, he is quite within his rights to select Christians of whatever name to bear testimony to the Christian religion in the pulpits of the Episcopal Church. The cry that is made that these men may grieve the souls of the faithful by false teaching has no foundation in fact. We ought to trust our bishops to have a right judgment, guided by Christian instinct, in these matters. They too have a conscience as regards their cure of souls. But may it not be the schismatic spirit that speaks when a cry is raised that an interchange of pulpits obscures essentials? An interchange of pulpits has nothing to do with church unity other than supplying the bond of charity which is one link in the chain of Christian unity.

THE CENTENARY OF THE GENERAL SEMINARY

THE CHURCHMAN felicitates the General Theological Seminary on the coming of the one hundredth anniversary of its founding. We are publishing in this issue some interesting photographs of the original buildings and those which now stand. Professor Pomeroy in response to THE CHURCHMAN's request has given us an interesting historical sketch of the seminary. We wish that there was space at our disposal for covering adequately the anniversary of the institution whose roots have gone so deep into the affections and the history of our Church. Whatever happens to the General Seminary is of consequence to the whole Church. Its responsibility as a training school for the clergy is immeasurable. Its morale affects ultimately the morale of the Church's ministry. Its spirit permeates finally the farthest mission station.

It is good to be able to offer today our congratulations to the General Seminary in a mood other than that of the conventional anniversary greetings. Never, we believe, in its long history has the seminary's promise of distinguished service to the Church been richer than it is today. A contributing cause is, of course, the urgent call of the world at the present hour for men of high loyalty and consecration. Seminaries have not escaped the cleansing fires of the world's agony. Students, faculties, trustees in our theological schools are feeling this new baptism of God.

The General Seminary faces the second century of its history under fortunate leadership. Dean Fosbroke has brought to his great post a combination of rare gifts. He is first of all a great teacher. It is essential that the deans of our theological schools be more than efficient administrators. We are now choosing our college presidents largely for their administrative gifts. This must never be the case with our training schools for the ministry. Whatever gifts in administration the present dean of the General Seminary may possess, he will always, we feel sure, be known to the Church as a teacher and a religious leader. Dean Fosbroke has served the Church in three seminaries. He knows the problem of religious education from many angles. He also knows, as is only given to men of sensitive mind to know them, the quick currents of the world's life at the present hour. The whole Church is bound to show in the coming years the impress of Dean Fosbroke's ministry at the General. We wish the seminary Godspeed.

THE CHURCH AND THE HOME-COMING MAN

WE are all, and especially the rectors, pretty keenly aware of the fact that the Church has a duty towards the home-coming men, but in regard to just what that duty is, we are a bit vague. The Joint Commission on Social Service is preparing to help us garner our good intentions. The first bulletin of its Reconstruction Series outlines a definite course of action for the parish. This program is preceded by a lucid explanation of the problem of the home-coming man under the heads of readjustment, re-employment, re-education and reclamation together with a discussion of the remedies offered by the Government and the welfare organizations.

In order that the parish may take its part in the community organization formed to meet the responsibility of the returning soldiers and sailors, the Joint Commission recommends the formation of a parish committee under the chairmanship of the rector or of some layman and an immediate canvass of the returning men. Special thanksgiving services or recognition services in the church, a return poster (on the analogy of the honor roll), a service badge like those proposed by the state comptroller in New Jersey, all as a point of departure for practical opportunities of cooperation in seeing that the men find employment, etc., are suggested. In carrying out this program opportunity may arise for recruiting for the ministry or for social service work. The information and advice in the bulletin are clear and to the point. We recommend to all those faced with the problem of the returning soldiers and sailors that they write to the Joint Commission on Social Service at the Church Missions House in New York for The Church and the Home-Coming Man.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

What a Man Can Do Who Says "I Will" and Means It

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"Wilt thou?" St. John V-6.

IT is interesting to note how frequently Jesus refuses to help a man until he is willing to begin to help himself. The waters of the pool of Bethesda were occasionally "troubled" and were then supposed to have healing virtues. The man of our text, had been lying there for thirty-eight years waiting for somebody to put him in, and as generally happens to such people, waiting in vain.

Jesus saw him and said, "Are you willing to do anything about it yourself? Wilt thou be made whole?" And the man answered, "I haven't anybody to put me in." So the Master tested his will power. He said, "Rise, take up your mat and walk." "Why," he might have said, "I haven't done such a thing for thirty-eight years. It's impossible." But he made the effort, and then Jesus did the rest. "Immediately he was made whole."

There is not a day when that miracle is not repeated; when the supreme truth is not revealed to some one that he can do things when he thinks he can, and that when he thinks he cannot, he never does.

That is the meaning of that strange statement by St. Matthew that "He did not many mighty works in Nazareth because of their unbelief." He would; they would not believe He could; and what they believed they would get, they got—nothing.

Admiral Farragut was listening to an explanation of one of his commanders as to why he had failed in taking a certain fort. The admiral interrupted him and said, "And there was yet another reason why you did not take it." And the other asked, "What was that?" And Farragut replied, "You didn't believe you could." Jesus does not do many mighty works in—any place you like—because of their unbelief. To every man or community or church who asks of Him He has but one reply: "Wilt thou?"

A few weeks ago on the twenty-first day of March, the anniversary of the beginning of the great German offensive, the editor of the Paris Matin asked General Foch to explain how it was that he had turned that great offensive into a German defeat, and he answered: "You ask me to tell you much in a few words. Victories are won by science, that is true, but also by faith. When one has faith one does not retire; one stops the enemy where one finds him.

"You tell me I gave victory to France. It was our admirable soldiers who gave it. I have but one merit, that of never despairing."

Fowell Buxton said, and I believe said truthfully, "The longer I live the more I am certain that the great difference between men, between the feeble and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy—invincible determination—a purpose once fixed, and then death or victory. That quality will do anything in this world; and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities will make a two-legged creature a man without it."

Many a man has failed in his life's endeavor because he has left off just when success was in view. I have read that when the British commander ceased his attack at the Dardanelles the Turks had fired their last shot. He would have won the victory if he had kept on just one hour longer; the war would have been shortened and hundreds of thousands of lives would have been saved.

Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute,
What you can do or think you can,—begin it!

There can be no manner of doubt that men have actually kept on living simply because they would not die; and others have died because they did not have the will to live.

Douglas Jerrold was told by his physicians that he was dying. Lifting himself on his elbow he exclaimed: "What, man, die and leave these little ones helpless! I will not die!" And he did not. He lived three years longer. On the other hand Fothergill in his Power of the Will tells us of a soldier who was sentenced to be shot. He was placed beside the open grave with the guard drawn up in front. But at the last moment according to orders received, blank cartridges were substituted for balls. The guard fired, and the man dropped dead. Not a paper wad had even touched him. He was dead because he thought he was dead. His will power had lost its grip.

You can when you think you can. Perhaps that statement seems too strong; then let me put it this way: It is possible that you may not do what you determine even when you think you can, but it is dead certain that you will never do it if you think you can't. "Wilt thou?"

But this suggests a word of caution. There are men who mistake strength of obstinacy for strength of will; a characteristic which is equally striking in the pig, which can neither be driven nor led. If you try to lead him, he pulls back, and if you try to drive him, he runs away, and has occasionally been known to dispute the progress of a lightning express, with results not altogether satisfactory to the pig, but which may serve as a suggestive illustration, not of the power of will, but of the weakness of willfulness.

Of Heathcliff in Wuthering Heights we are told, "He never once swerved from his arrow-straight course to perdition." With such men their will is simply their wont. But subject to certain qualifications which common sense will suggest, I repeat it: "You can when you think you can."

Some time ago I found a little poem by Edgar A. Guest. I have carried it around in my pocketbook and read it to so many people that it is pretty nearly worn out. It is a good mentor to repeat every morning on awakening to the new day's work.

Somebody said that it couldn't be done,

But he, with a chuckle, replied
That "maybe it couldn't," but he would be one
Who wouldn't say so till he tried.

So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin

On his face. If he worried he hid it.

He started to sing as he tackled the thing

That couldn't be done—and he did it.

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done;

There are thousands to prophesy failure.

There are thousands to point to you, one by one,

The dangers that wait to assail you.

But just buckle in with a bit of a grin;

Then take off your coat and go to it.

Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing

That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it.

"Wilt thou?"

HOLY WEEK AND THE WORLD CRISIS

BY THE VEN. JOHN HAROLD GREIG, B.D.

THE Allies and America have won a great victory, in some ways the greatest in history: yet it begins to look as if it were doomed to be fruitless. The conquerors meet in a truly imposing concourse, where the world's greatest nations are represented by their best men; and instead of order, settlement and security, the apparent result is confusion growing daily worse confounded. Men are still hoping that light and guidance will reach the Paris conference, but if one may judge by newspapers and general conversation no expectation of light or guidance from it exists any longer. Never before at the end of a great war brought to a close by a great victory has there been such a spectacle of impotence.

The difference between the present and previous peace conferences is striking. Formerly they knew what they wanted and with an immediate goal in view, moved towards it more or less quickly. But this conference appears aimless, because though some of its chief members have ideals, there seems to be no vision of how they can be realized. They talk of universal peace and of war abolished, but when asked how they would attain their ends, they reply, by force and an economic boycott. No wonder they pause a little uncertain. No wonder the world at large lacks confidence and enthusiasm. The advocates of peace advancing to their task fully armed and threatening starvation are more puzzling than inspiring. The "high contracting parties" may aim high, but their means are Teutonic; and mean time the fruits of victory are vanishing fast. As the months pass it seems as if the vision of the ideal of peace faded and the difference of opinion as to such matters as territory and cash became harder and clearer.

We are driven to ask what is the root cause of this impotence and uncertainty; and we find it in the fact that you cannot realize Christian ideals without the power and help of Jesus Christ. The idea of abolishing war and instituting the reign of peace is distinctively Christian; and apart from Him has no sanction, no national basis, no chance of realization. It can never be achieved by force or by economic boycott which at best and most can play but a negative and very subordinate part in the great work. But it can be achieved, that is to say, the way for its triumph can be securely laid, if all over the world those who profess the Christian faith

THE VEN. JOHN HAROLD GREIG, B.D.
Archdeacon of Worcester, England, who is spending Lent in this country preaching and conducting missions would league themselves together for this purpose.

We are approaching Holy Week. Once more the Lord Jesus will be set before Christendom "evidently crucified," and the love of the Cross and the victory of the empty tomb will constrain us. To what? Surely at this crisis in human history there can be only one answer—to lay aside the differences which are irrelevant to this tremendous issue, and to realize that in love of peace and hatred of war we are solidly and absolutely one. About grave matters not to be lightly tossed aside we differ. But about this, the greatest issue of all, we have only one heart and one mind. Let us realize this by having also one will, a firm, strong will embodied in some concrete league, and we can save the world by the power of Christ crucified.

To judge by their draft and their utterances our statesmen corporately have no God, no moral power, only force and the economic boycott. What is the use of our keeping Holy Week at this juncture, the most solemn in all history if the awe of His Passion and the power of His Victory do not constrain us to unite to save the world?

We are all aspiring after reunion. By special missions, organizations and prayers we are trying to compose our differences. Instead of beginning with our differences why not seize on our great unities, and acting here and now on the greatest of them all, experience the joy and power of being what in this regard we truly are, a united Christendom? The leaders of religious thought in America and the British Empire are already in touch. Let them approach the papacy and such patriarchs of eastern Christianity as can be found; and together in a solemn league and covenant assure the statesmen of the world that the whole spiritual and moral force of a united Christendom will support them, as military forces and economic boycotts can never do, to achieve their ideal, itself so essentially spiritual and moral. If our Holy Week of "His precious death and mighty resurrection" led us to this, we should be keeping it to some effect, and aiming at a result in some degree commensurate with the power of His passion and victory. Otherwise we may seem to the world—and what is far worse actually be—no more than a pietistic sect of people bent on securing their own salvation; not the ministers and stewards, the witnesses and messengers, of the Saviour of the whole human race.

MAUNDY THURSDAY HYMN

BY W. C. BENET

BREAD of Life, for sinners broken,
Bruiséd Body's hallowed token:
Jesus blessed it ere He brake it;
Will His blessing ere forsake it?
Now in faith and love we take it
In remembrance of the Lord.

Son of Man, by sin untainted,
Yet with woe and grief acquainted;
His own sorrows all unfeeling,
Healing hundreds, thousands feeding,—
Eat this bread, His great love pleading,
In remembrance of the Lord.

Cup of blessing, Wine of Heaven,
Greatest boon to mortals given;
Pledge of love that knows no ending,
Jesus' love, all love transcending;—
Drink we of it, lowly bending,
In remembrance of the Lord.

Bloody sweat in sore affliction,
Life-blood shed in Crucifixion,
Blood from piercé side forth flowing,—
Jesus' love is past our knowing;
Drink this cup, His death forth showing,
In remembrance of the Lord.

Bread and wine, His love revealing,
We receive, devoutly kneeling.
Bread of Life, with strength endue us;
Wine of Heaven, in love renew us;
Help the love that hither drew us,
In remembrance of the Lord.

Amen.

WE are all seeking a face. It may be the dream face of the ideal, our own face as it ought to be, as we could wish it to be, or the face that we could love, or a face we once caught a glimpse of and then lost in the crowds and the cares. We seek a face of such celestial loveliness that it would be possible to fall down before it in the devotion of utter sacrifice. Some seek it desperately, others seek it ever hopefully, some forget and remember and then forget again and remember again. Others live their life in the consciousness of a promise that they shall see the face at some definite time by and by. The vision of it seems completely remote from some, and they live their life hardly and darkly, but there are others who are perpetually in the light of it, and they see all the common sights of the world transfigured by it.

Each has his separate vision of the face. And as there is an infinite number and diversity of mankind, so the faces of the ideal are infinitely numerous and diverse. Yet as in truth we are all one, so all these faces are one, and all the loveliness is one loveliness.

STEPHEN GRAHAM.

O CHRIST, the King of glory, Who wast received and honoured as a King by those who were soon to ask Thy death, grant that we may never seek the praise nor fear the blame of sinful men, but may always stay our hearts on Thee and Thy unfailing promises; Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

O GOD, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of Whom every family in heaven and earth is named, grant unto our friends, to all members of this household, and to all the members of our different families, that, according to the riches of Thy glory, we may be strengthened with might by Thy Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; that we, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fulness of God; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE SACRIFICIAL ELEMENT IN CHRISTIANITY

BY CLARENTIUM

PERHAPS a better heading for this paper would have been, "Has the sacrificial element in Christianity been abolished?" for on all sides we are being told, not merely that it ought to be abolished, but that, among intelligent churches and Christians, it already has been abolished and its only survival is seen in sacrificial phrases and sacrificial symbols. But it was not from without the Church, but from within her walls, that this question of the passing of sacrificial Christianity was brought home to me in a most unexpected and startling way.

It was at the monthly luncheon of a clericus. The clericus is composed of Presbyterian ministers, but the speaker for the day was a well-known Episcopalian rector. His paper had been heard at another meeting by members of the clericus and they had asked him to repeat it at this gathering. He commenced by confessing, as all Episcopalian ministers of note from Phillips Brooks up and down always do, to Calvinistic lineage and training. With this gracious introduction he launched out upon a most extraordinary discussion. His thesis was whether or not ministers of to-day should eliminate from the vocabulary of the pulpit, from the sacramental services, from the hymnal, and from the Bible itself, all such terms as referred to Christ as a sacrifice for sin.

In particular he cited the Epistle to the Hebrews as the outstanding example of Christianity couched in the language of the Levitic ritual. To Hebrew Christians, he said, who had been accustomed to altars, incense, covenants, veils of the temple, and victims bleeding upon the altars, the phraseology had some meaning and appositeness, but none whatever for the modern Christian. This had an innocent enough sound. Like Gallio, we should say, "If this is a question about words and names, look ye to it." There is nothing sacred in a name, even if that name be in the Bible. But our friend did not stop there. It was quickly evident that this restiveness under the terminology of Hebrews, "blood of bulls and goats," "Melchizedek," "remission of sins" was but a sort of "camouflage" for an enmity to and rejection of the great Christian conceptions which those words and symbols express. His objection was not to a sacrificial language, but to a sacrifice at all. In the incomparable parable of the Lost Son, he asseverated, there is no account of any sacrifice being offered or demanded as a condition to the full pardon and acceptance of the wandering son by the loving father. Instead of that, the father descried him while he was yet a great way off, and ran, and fell on his neck and kissed him. This should be the normal presentation of our relationship to God. To represent God as demanding the blood of bulls and goats, some sort of victim, was tolerable in the days of the old dispensation, when only a few rays of divine revelation had penetrated the darkness of the world, but to do so now, when God has commanded the light to shine out of darkness, is un-Christian. It is based on the old theory that sin demanded a victim, and that somebody, it mattered little who, had to be punished, that God's wrath might be placated and the offense expiated. It makes God a deity to be appeased, not a Father to be loved and served.

It was not that the reader of the paper was pleading for such a recasting of Christianity, for he went on the assumption that, except in narrow and ignorant minds, that process of recasting had already taken place. It was rather a plea for honesty, that since we have discarded in thought that old idea of Christianity, we ought to discard the language with which we expressed that thought. It was not right to reject the ideas and retain the language. In addition to this he maintained that the retention of this sacrificial language and symbolism interfered with the dissemination of the Gospel, particularly in cultivated circles. Well educated and carefully trained persons are shocked at the thought of God wounding His dear Son for our transgressions and healing us with the stripes laid upon Christ. It was not only crude and barbarous, but unethical. Delicate and sensitive souls shrank from the spectacle of altars "dripping with atoning blood" and such a hymn as Cowper's

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins was positively revolting to refined mind and conscience.

As I listened my astonishment increased, not merely that a minister could serve, well and faithfully, as this minister has done, an important church in the heart of a great city, coming in contact with the sins and sorrows and passions and heartaches of humanity—immeasurable capacity for good, immeasurable capacity for evil—and yet feel that the sacrificial element in Christianity was not the great element, depths in God answering mysteriously but mightily unto the depths in man—deep calling unto deep—but that one who claimed to speak in behalf of cultivated and refined minds should, on the ground of crudity and vulgarity, reject that which is the true beauty and glory of Christianity, its sacrificial language and musing, its sacrificial hymns and sermons, yes, the very Sacrifice Himself.

It was a curious instance of a blind man trying to persuade men who saw that they were blind and that he saw. Here was a man whose soul was absolutely dead to that great fact in Christianity that has stirred the hearts of the greatest artists, poets, preachers, missionaries, mystics and dreamers. To him the saying of the Saviour about eating His flesh and drinking His blood, even the blessed words of the Last Supper, "This is My Body," "This is the New Testament in My Blood," were offensive. And the sad, and also amusing, thing about it all was that he thought this offended him because of superior aestheticism, whereas the truth was that it was because he was totally lacking in aestheticism. He who complained that poetic and artistic souls were offended in the Cross and the language of the Cross, was the last person to speak in their behalf, for he showed himself to be dull of soul and spirit, not comprehending the beauty of that which has touched the hearts and anointed the eyes of all who dwell in realms of the spirit.

In the after discussion it was brought out that most of the ministers present carefully avoided such a hymn as Cowper's "There is a fountain filled with blood." Cowper is generally rated by competent judges as a poet of no mean ability. He who wrote the Lines to Mary Unwin—

Mary! I want a lyre with other strings,
Such aid from heaven as some have feigned they drew,
An eloquence scarce given to mortals, new And undebased by praise of meaner things, is not to be taken lightly when he commences to sing about a "fountain filled with blood," for he oft commanded "an eloquence scarce given to mortals." The hymn is a poetical statement of the doctrine of the Atonement. It is not intended for cold and critical analysis, compelling every metaphor to yield its definite meaning. It commences with a sinner kneeling at the Cross and ends with him singing the "nobler, sweeter song" of the redeemed in the life to come. Instead of offending delicate and cultured souls, it ought to attract them. I believe that it does. I believe that what offended this Episcopalian rector and my own brothers in the Presbyterian Church was not the figures which told of cleansing by blood, but the fact implied by the figures, by Christ Himself, by all Christian teachers of the New Testament age, that man is a sinner and therefore needs cleansing. He needs an atonement. If this is not true, then the whole fabric of Christianity stands upon a false foundation, and this minister is right in his protest; we ought then to cease speaking about victims and altars and "justification," "remission," "atonement."

Cowper was not only a poet, he was a sinner. I have been glancing through the collection of Olney Hymns and it takes little reading to see how intensely the author of these songs had felt the burden of his sins and how humbly and gratefully he had accepted the mercy of God as manifested in the death of Christ on the Cross. He truly felt that that was the only way in which he could "lose all his guilty stains." The hymn is therefore both the work of a poet and a Christian. A professor at the University of Pennsylvania undertook recently to rewrite some of the old hymns, such as "Come, Thou Almighty King!" and "Holy, Holy, Holy!" I do not know that these revisions are being sung to-day in any church, orthodox or heterodox. The reason is that although man is a sinner, he is not always a fool; although sin has corrupted his nature, it has not stripped him completely of an appreciation of what art is, of what poetry is. He knows that great literature must have back of it great ideas. He realizes that the New Testament is such because it deals with the great facts of human joy and sorrow and pain and hope and fear. A Cross without a victim, or a death without the shedding of blood, which is the life, man at once recognizes to be but the name and sign of nothing.

It is not a question of rejecting the terminology of Hebrews; it is a question of rejecting not only this anonymous book, but Paul, Peter, John—yes, the Saviour Himself. How is it possible to talk of Christianity full-orbed, spirit-charged, majestic Christianity, without speaking of death, of blood, of Gethsemane agonies, of "strong crying and tears," any more than it is possible to speak of the ocean without speaking of waves and foam and spray, or of the valley without speaking of fields and rivers, brooks, and the gracious shade of trees; of the mountains without speaking of rocks and cedars and great winds; or of man without speaking of will and intellect and spirit and hope and fear and faith and love? The illiberal man, the confined mind, the unpoetical, unimaginative soul is, facile princeps, the man who talks so proudly about the "new conceptions" of Christianity which put a fool's cap on the Apostles and on Jesus Himself, and look with pity upon their sluggish brothers who cannot rise to the heights of their fanciful rhapsody. That old saying about the people perishing when there is no vision comes to my mind as I write. The greatest interpreter of Christianity wrote of the "exceeding greatness" of the love of God as exhibited in Christianity. That "exceeding greatness" captivated his imagination and thrilled his mind and was the unfailing source of his incomparable enthusiasms, which made him, whether endungedoned or free, the mighty actor of history. What would he have thought could be (perhaps he did) have looked down upon this company of his successors in the ambassadorial office, in a room clouded with tobacco smoke, at the close of a five-course dinner, telling one another that those crude and rough figures about blood of remission and fountains of cleansing must go, that the sacrificial language offends the fastidious taste of this generation! Thou who didst glory in the Cross of Christ, the symbol of thy crucifixion to the world and the world's to thee, thou battered veteran of Christ, bearing about on thy wasted body the marks of the Lord Jesus Christ, bruised, shipwrecked, battling with "beasts," what hast thou to say of these, thy successors? Wilt thou cry for them as Christ did for them that of old scorned His Cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," or wilt thou say again with tears that "they are the enemies of the Cross?"

Returning again to poetry and the Cross, I have been thinking of the last day of Matthew Arnold's life. In the morning he attended Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, and heard Dr. John Watson (Ian McClaren) preach. That afternoon he was taken with his last sickness. It was the service preparatory to the Communion and Watts' hymn,

When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of Glory died, was sung by the congregation. On his walk that afternoon Matthew Arnold referred to the hymn, speaking of it as the "greatest hymn in the English language." "Yes," he said, "in the straits of the soul the Cross still makes its ancient appeal." In the straits of the soul! The Cross was made for the soul in straits; it was made for a world in straits. To the roar of guns and the groans of the dying, man's proud order passes away. Our little kingdoms and republics, what are they more than the nations that have come and gone?

Their mighty shadows cast
The giant forms of empires
On their way to ruin. One by one
They tower and are gone.

The empire of man passes. The empire of love abides! But the Cross remains! Death, slaughter, hatred, cruelty, demoniacal barbarity, rivers of blood, clouds of blackness, unfathomed abysses of sin, floods of sorrow, but, thank God, the Cross remains. The heaviest artillery cannot demolish it. The concentrated rage and fury of mankind cannot tear it from its place. Man's infinite sin, the world's darkness and disorder, the rage of the nations and the vain imaginations of the heathen, all this finds its match and its answer in the Cross of the Son of God.

LENT: THE SPRINGTIME OF CHARACTER

BY THE REV. H. PERCY SILVER

THE spiritual feast of Lent is a period to be dreaded only by those who make a silly use of it, and drag it down to the low levels of a lot of don'ts. If we put the emphasis where it belongs there will ring out a challenge to DO, and to do something worth while. The word "Lent" (from the same root as the word "long") is from the old English "lengthen." The season is called "Lent" because it comes at the time of year when the days lengthen. As day follows day there is less of darkness and more of light. There is more light spiritually, because the movement is towards God the source of all light. The record of creation tells us after each period that "It was evening, and it was morning." It does not say it was morning, and then evening; but rather "it was evening—and then it was morning." This same comment might be made of all God's working. The movement is away from the darkness, towards the light; away from chaos towards order; away from ignorance, towards knowledge; away from time, towards eternity. This time, "when the days lengthen," we call spring. If we will study the meaning of spring we will learn WHY the Church desires us to think of Lent as the springtime of the soul.

The voice of spring is a call to activity. Nature is summoned to lay aside the grave-clothes of winter, and to step forth out of its cold and darkness into the warmth and brightness of spring. The birds return with their songs of praise, and all nature awakens from its long sleep to go forth to labor. Man responds to the call and lends his aid in co-operation with nature to bring life out of death. The surface of the soil, hardened under the stern rule of cold and of ice, forms a great wall which prevents any seed from taking hold, and at the same time cripples the power of the life within the soil itself. The farmer knows this. He knows it is foolish to go out and cast his seed on the hardened surface; he also knows that to take his plow and break up the surface of the ground is but the beginning of his labors. When the soil is cut, and plowed, and bruised, then, and not until then does the life within have any chance to do its best work. With his plow shot down deep into the vitals of the soil he calls from its sleep the powers hidden in the ground, and then it is that he casts the seed into this quickened earth that the earth itself, by the power given it, may in its turn plow open the seed by cutting through its hardened shell and releasing its life. By this process the released forces of the soil, and the released life of the seed co-operate to bring forth food for the use of man. In this partnership of the soil and the seed man himself is numbered, and the harvest depends upon each one doing his part, and all working together.

The seed is helpless alone, so is the ground, so is man; but when all work together, God Himself bends over to help; He sends gracious rains to give refreshment, and sends warmth and cheer in the rays of the sun until the seed releases its life and grows ever upward through the earth, and then still reaching upward until it holds out its ripened grain as the offering of its life to Him who called it out of its little self and gave it a chance to become nothing less than a messenger of life.

This is the lesson of Lent: We are to plow the heart with penitence and prayer; we are to break its hardened and rebellious attitude that the powers of its life may be free to function . . . but we must do more than this, for if there is to be a harvest we must cast into this plowed field the seed of God's promises.

When the divine seed is sown in the human heart, the heavens themselves will open and the gentle rain of God's grace will stimulate the hidden life so as to compel growth and development. Lent will be a real springtime for the soul if we will be as sane in the cultivation of our hearts as the farmer is in that of his field.

GOD'S treasure is like an infinite ocean, yet a little wave of feeling, passing with the moment, contents us. Blind as we are, we hinder God and stop the current of His graces. But when He finds a soul permeated with a living faith, He pours into it His graces and His favors plenteously; into the soul they flow like a torrent, which, after being forcibly stopped against its ordinary course, when it has found a passage, spreads with impetuosity its pent-up flood.—Brother Lawrence.

THE SEVENTH WORD

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

JESUS' enemies, and the idle spectators, may have left Calvary before these last words fell from His pallid lips. But His friends were still there. It must have been one of them who caught this murmured prayer. Only a friend would have cared enough to remember what He said.

Yet the words were singular enough to be remembered. In the eyes of the priests and Pharisees Jesus was either an imposter or a self-deceived fanatic, probably the former. It seemed more likely that He was deliberately imposing on the people for the sake of getting control over them. He had pretended to be the Son of God, and many of the people had been deceived. But the priests and Pharisees had perceived the fraud from the beginning. Only it had been so hard to open the people's eyes! Not until they had Him nailed to His cross had our Lord's enemies felt they had unanswerable proof of His imposture. But they had it then. "If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him; for he said, I am the Son of God." That was a fair challenge, was it not? And our Lord had not come down from the cross. In the face of that plain admission that He had been making a false claim, ought He not to have broken down completely? If He still dared to pray to the God whom He had insulted by claiming to be His Son, could His prayer be anything except a broken petition that His blasphemy might be forgiven?

Or if, after all, it had been fanaticism and not ambition that actuated Him; if it was His head instead of His heart that was at fault, ought not these hours at Calvary to have disillusioned Him? He might have really believed that He was to be the Messiah. There had been other cases of such delusion. And if He had had that strange idea, there had been much to foster it. The people crowding to hear Him; the success with which he had parried the questions put to Him in the hope of exposing Him; finally, the public welcome that had greeted Him upon His last entrance into Jerusalem:—there had been enough to confirm a fanatic in the idea that He was the Messiah. But then, again, this crucifixion should have undeceived Him. Some facts are blunt enough to dislodge the most firmly rooted delusions. However sure Jesus might have been that He was the Son of God, now that He knew He was dying in this shameful way He must see His mistake, and be terrified by the thought of the divine anger at His temerity.

Either way, then, whether Jesus were knave or fanatic, His last prayer should be a frightened cry for mercy.

But what He said breathed no whisper of fear or disillusionment. He spoke like one who knew He had done His whole duty; like one who had been serving God, not insulting Him. Instead of appealing to God's mercy He seems actually to claim God's care. "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." If those words were reported to the priests, what do you suppose they made of them!

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." To be able to call God Father in that last moment of agony was the supreme triumph of faith. I know Christ felt the presence and the love of God far more than we do. I know He understood God's ways and purposes as we do not. What we do understand is by His help. And yet I do not think His communion with the Father made everything so clear for Him that He had no need of faith. How could He have needed to pray so passionately, how could He have had to wrestle so terribly with temptation, if the Father's wisdom was always an open book for Him to read? "He was tempted at all points like as we are," remember! And what temptation meets us more often than the temptation to let go our faith! If we could always see God sitting on His throne, it would be easier to serve Him. If we could always understand what He is doing with us, and with the nations, it would be far easier to be loyal. We all bear our burdens more easily when home comes in sight. It is because we can't see God, and because so often we can't understand what He is doing, that we are sometimes tempted to drop our burdens altogether. The hardest times to serve God are the times when you're not half sure there is a god to serve, at any rate a god who has a right to service. We're far from living by sight. Our common experience is that our noblest deeds are inspired, not by what we know, but what we believe. There's a constant struggle going on in us between our faith, which says "Be true!" and our doubt, which bids us "eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die." Do you suppose Christ knew nothing of that struggle? Do you suppose He left His home in Nazareth and went out into the world for His public ministry, do you suppose He went through those three tumultuous years that began with his baptism in Jordan and ended with his crucifixion on Calvary, without one single taste of the experience so common to us of having to wrestle with doubt! If He had no need of faith, if He never had to say "I trust God even when I cannot understand," what did He know of our poor human troubles in trying to serve God? Why, He trusted as we've never trusted yet. Even when that bitter cry rang out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He trusted. And now, at the end of all, His trust finds peace, and, as His soul parts from His wracked body, finds expression: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

For God Christ lived,
For God and man;
That unto God He man might bring.
And for a time the God He served
Was hid from Him Himself.
Yet still He served, still trusted,
And at end faith triumphed
To the point where He
In perfect peace and quietude
His soul could recommend unto the Father,
Who in wisest love
Had let Him suffer all things.

THE RED CROSS CHAPLAIN—II

BY THE RT. REV. JAMES DE WOLF PERRY, D.D.

BISHOP
PERRY
UNIFORM OF
CHAPLAIN

BEFORE July Bishop McCormick returned to America and I was appointed to succeed him. In the six weeks which intervened before my arrival, the Rev. Ernest Miel, serving with the sanitary train of the 26th Division, was called to Paris for temporary duty in charge of the bureau. The office in that time was moved to comfortable rooms at 416 Rue St. Honore, not far from the Madeleine, pending the occupation of Hotel Regina by the American Red Cross. The new quarters offered an attractive rendezvous for chaplains moving in and out of Paris, the number every week being increased by reinforcements from America.

On my arrival I found fifty-two chaplains in the service, twelve of whom had come in Dr. Miel's administration. By extending the work of a few to two or more units in proximity, all of the hospitals then active were provided for. Then came a race between new units and new chaplains. Messages from the front each week reported evacuations and mobiles taking positions near the lines. Meanwhile, bases were arriving at the ports. The great barrack hospital groups at Allerey, Bazoilles, Mars, Mesves and Rimavcourt were growing by leaps and bounds to the familiar proportions and appearance of our American cantonments, increasing their capacity from five to ten—to twenty—and finally, certain of them, to thirty thousand beds. The offensive at Château Thierry had filled the wards with patients,—boys with broken bodies and homesick hearts, longing for a friendly hand to bring them comfort, to write their messages, the dying waiting for the chaplains' ministrations, the dead by scores each day awaiting burial. Nobly the chaplains rose to the emergency, working often twenty hours a day, snatching sleep when possible, serving in every capacity, at any moment, as need required, each doing the work of three men and eager to do more. Hurried visits at the front and reports received from day to day revealed a story of new life in the midst of death. One chaplain wrote after his first month at an evacuation hospital: "It has seemed at times as if the whole American army were pouring in. We are averaging almost one thousand patients a day. Only those who have seen suffering on a large scale and can recall its appalling effect on one's sympathies can imagine the state of mind we are in when beholding hundreds of weary, dejected, wounded men everywhere, lying and sitting, awaiting attention. The pleading look of a suffering dumb animal, mingled with the heroic patience of the bravest woman, yet expressed in the strong features of a man who was yet even as a little child, all seem united before our eyes to move the very soul of all who pass by . . . Most wonderful is the power of the crucified Saviour over these suffering soldiers. Flippancy and indifference have broken down. Out from behind a screen that many had supposed immovable come flashes of light that words cannot describe. I have seen in these weeks at least one hundred men whose faces beamed with the joy of a new found faith, and whose words testified to their awakened knowledge of the love of God."

Another in a mobile hospital on the same sector: "Our hospital is here in the extreme neck of the woods, far from telephones, stores and everything else. We are living in tents, and eating out of doors in mud several inches deep. . . . The work is pressing. Today I am to bury twenty-two men. I am writing for help. We need. . . ." And indeed the call for help was constant in those days of suffering. Red Cross resources always offered without stint, were yet strained to the utmost. There was need for material, need for transportation, beyond all else the need for men.

Meanwhile, in official quarters the problems engaging us were being arranged in different combinations. The War Department which had in the beginning failed to take account of the hospital chaplain was now preparing for his militarization,—and in a drastic manner. Two weeks later came a cable announcing that the War Department had requested the American Red Cross to abandon the chaplain service. The army through its commissioned chaplains would care for the work without the assistance even of auxiliary Red Cross chaplains. Those who wished to apply and could qualify for appointment as army chaplains should be given commissions. Others must terminate their service. A later message explained that clergymen whose applications had been accepted by Red Cross would be allowed to sail, but must as promptly as possible be transferred to the department of work or released.

There followed days of anxiety and uncertainty, conference with Red Cross officials and officers at G. H. Q., constant communication with Washington. The army chaplain office could not meet the need at the hospitals as they grew in number and capacity, while the troops themselves were suffering from a shortage of chaplains. Moreover, the Red Cross chaplains then ministering to a hundred thousand patients had become associated by deepening personal relations with their units and commanding officers. Many of them could not accept commissions. There were Red Cross chaplains also on the way, whose services would be in demand at many points. The situation was critical, relieved in part by a cable modifying former orders, allowing the service to continue for a reasonable term. At last a personal interview in Paris with the Secretary of War effected a final solution. The army should have final authority and responsibility for the service in the hospitals. The Red Cross bureau should continue supervising the work of its own chaplains and making assignments as recommended and approved by the G. H. Q. office. There a desk was assigned for my use at the time of my visit for conference week by week.

So we carried on. New chaplains reported in sufficient numbers to keep pace with the hospitals. Twenty came within the first month after my arrival, thirty before the lists were closed early in October, making a total of seventy-six then in the service. Only twenty-six of these received army commissions before the eleventh of November, when all appointments ceased.

It was a strangely diversified diocese, containing priests and ministers from Churches of twelve names—yet all housed together as one in the name of Him whose cross was their insignia. It would be impossible to find a more harmonious, a more consecrated company of men.

To save every minute of their time as they arrived, I organized for duty in the eight hospitals of the Paris zone a rotating staff of those awaiting working cards and travel orders,—these to be sent out in their turn to permanent assignments as others came to take their places in the local work.

Occasionally the first intimation of a projected drive would come through a sudden call for available chaplains to serve on out-post duty, taking positions near the trenches or on roads filled with troops to care for the men as need required. Nine of us started on a few hours' notice for the St. Mihiel front on the eve of the memorable September offensive. Singly and in pairs our number were encamped at points where the attack would be the heaviest. There, by day and night, they prepared hot chocolate for the men going into the line, and from there went out to tend the wounded and bring in the dead. Every such mission led to permanent assignments of a few men found on hand when line hospitals required chaplains. Those of our St. Mihiel party were kept in this way for an evacuation hospital at Bar le Duc and two mobiles near Toul.

One chaplain who had been sent as an out-post volunteer from Paris reported three months later that while preparing a traveling kitchen to send out with a group of canteen workers, he was summoned to see a hospital just opened at the other end of the town. "I left my poor brick oven and ran to find the hospital, and I never came back. The expedition went on without me, and I stayed on in the hospital throughout the drive, which brought us 5,000 wounded and sick." The summons "to the hospital across the town" led, in his case, to five months' service in all the four field hospitals of the division.

So they went upon their way, these adventurers for God, finding their opportunity where and when it offered. Traveling on foot or begging transportation as it came, using for a church the building that came to hand whether it were a hut or a ruined church or, failing that, gathering a congregation in the open air. "On one Sunday morning," one of our field hospital chaplains wrote, "I sought a passing truck, rode to Cohan and celebrated the Holy Communion for forty men beside the brook, then preaching and Morning Prayer for about one hundred and twenty-five, then a second Communion in the village church for the orderlies and officers who could not attend earlier,—then with the Red Cross workers and supplies up to the front batteries at Fismes."

To not many—twelve in all—was it given to carry their ministry so far, though everyone requested it. By the majority the romance of the work was found in the tide of suffering and human need that flowed and ebbed at the stationary hospitals. The courage that endured the incessant gunfire and the dread of nightly air raids was no finer than the patient fortitude which worked month after month to preserve that precious thing known as the morale of the unit, and kept the lines from faltering in the fight for life. From my visits at more than sixty hospitals, extending all the way from the seacoast at Bordeaux, Brest and St. Nazaire, to the hills around Verdun, the most vivid impressions that I bear home with me this evening as my ship nears port, are of these sentinels of faith, making their rounds through rows of silent sufferers in long barrack wards and corridors at all hours of the day and night, bending to catch the broken whisper or to lay their hands in benediction on a fevered head; of the same men standing at dawn, white-robed before their altars, among kneeling figures in khaki, slacks and nurses' uniforms; of the chaplain by the open trench in the acre of white crosses, laid out by his own hand now raised in blessing over the long trench while his guard of honor present arms, and the bugler sounds taps.

Nearly all have gone back to their places now—in parish, schoolroom, bishop's office, as inconspicuously as they came,—only a score remain to carry on with the army of occupation, or at bases yet to be demobilized, and some with government commissions. One will not come back; his body given to the service lies in France beneath a white cross. With every one of them, wherever he may be, will linger the memory of a Red Cross

SPRING

BY HARRISON ROCKWELL

THE sun-kissed meadows gleam with wakened life,
The murky pool reflects the blue and gold,
The frozen clod gives up its stolid mould,
And elements no longer wage their strife.
But each bare twig, each gray and deadlike thing,
The barren hill against the radiant sky
Prophetic stand of life, while zephyrs sigh
And sweetly sing processionals of Spring.
Chill Winter winds and threatening, leaden skies
Depart from life; my soul anew seeks light.
Like vernal flowers, it feels itself arise,
A thing new-born in God's paternal sight
As on me shines the Spring that never dies,
The Spring whose skies eternally are bright.

THE CHURCH AND THE NEW ERA—III

BY THE REV. GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER, D.D.

WITH such a foundation as outlined in my paper of last week the federal council would be ready for its task. The first task would be the preparation of men, clergymen and laymen alike, for the work the Church has to do. We ought to have at least twice as many laymen preparing for a life work in the Church as we have clergy. Not every man who wishes to devote himself to the Church has the qualifications or temperament for the priesthood. I do not know of a dozen laymen who are devoting themselves entirely to the work of this Church in other than a parochial way, except the laymen who have undertaken war service in the camps. We ought to have national schools for lay workers. Men go into the profession of teaching never expecting any great remuneration therefrom. Men who would shrink from the ministry because of some reason of which they alone knew the force, could be secured for lay work, if they could be trained for specific tasks. We could capture boy life in America if we had one thousand trained workers for boys in our large centres of population. They would in turn train volunteers and give us a boy clientele that would immeasurably strengthen the Church within a decade. Many a parish would welcome the opportunity to secure such a worker and pay his salary. We should have schools for Sunday School teachers. Practically every seminary in the Church is closed during the summer months. They should become great summer schools for teachers. Dioceses are not able to achieve this alone. The national Church would have to support such a project.

The federal council ought to relieve the separate dioceses of the work in every large institution of learning in our land. Our weakness at educational centres is proverbial. Yet here we have the brains of the rising generation. The student body does not come alone from the diocese in which it exists, but from every part of the land. A weak diocese may have within it a score of institutions. The bishop and the diocese are unable to meet the need. The Church should concentrate its fire upon these institutions. It is a national problem. I know of places aggregating several thousand students where the work of our Church is as ineffective as an effort to stop an epidemic with court plaster. Men should be especially trained for such places. Buildings will be needed worthy of the Church which they represent. We should be there in such force that we would be noticed. We have a vital religion to offer, and the students will respond. From such institutions a constant stream of reinforcement would go forth into the parishes of the land. It is a national problem.

A federal council would arrange a campaign of publicity. In proportion to our size we are the most insufficiently advertised organization in America. We get a line occasionally when some fashionable wedding takes place. But we fail to realize that we are misunderstood in our land and need some strong exposition. I saw recently in a local paper an entire page given to an explanation of Christian Science. Boston did it, no doubt. It was an evidence of national thinking. Our Church needs it. Short but bold statements, rehearsing the fundamental things we hold, explaining the comprehensiveness of the Church, elucidating the services and making plain its intellectual and moral liberty, ought to be blazoned forth from one end of this land to the other. We should have an authorized manual, setting forth in plain words the position of the Church, and containing the services with directions, and this manual should be distributed as freely as manufacturers of tires distribute route books. It should be written for plain people. When we are forced to wait an hour between trains at some tiny station, why could we not find a rack with some of our literature in it, instead of having to mull over a Christian Science document?

Under such an administrative federal council, each bishop, priest and lay worker of the Church would feel that the whole strength of the Church was behind him and his work, just as the soldier on outpost duty feels that he has the army behind him.

The clergy do not feel this today. We have really erected a highly competitive system, modified by the wisdom and personal kindness of bishops who attempt locally to adjust men to conditions. But a clergyman who resigns a parish and is temporarily unattached is in a serious predicament. No one is unduly concerned that his particular fitness for a special task is determined and that he be called to the work for which he is fitted, and fortified in it against the local difficulties. He must in a dignified way scratch for himself. The very fact that he is looking for a place is misunderstood.

A federal council could remedy this situation. In a way not possible to diocesan bishops it could place men, in a manner not embarrassing to the man, in a place where his particular strength could be fully utilized.

Such a federal council could give deliberate and careful attention to every new situation which might confront the Church, and could act promptly in every emergency. This Church has no headquarters, at present. We actually need such a place. Our ascending lines of action and authority do not centralize, in a body continuously active.

It would require a volume to present fully the specific activities of such a council. But let your imagination range over the field. This federal council could train experts in every department of the Church's life, who would be available for every needed spot in our land; they could centralize the Church's collective wisdom as to parochial methods, so that every young priest could have the advantage of what others had learned as to methods, systems, and supplies. But why enlarge on it. If you reject this plan, you have already found sufficient objections to it, and if you approve it you will, yourself, find countless things to suggest.

With such a council the Church could say to its greatest leaders: "The highest position we can offer you is not a bishopric, where your leadership is geographically limited and your energy expended in much routine, but a place in the national council."

The Church could say to its gifted laymen: "We need you more than the law needs you. We have a place where you can consecrate all your talents to the service of God in His Church." It could say to the banker, or teacher: "Here is your supreme work. We need all your time and energy." In fact we need most the men hardest to get! All this is machinery, you say, and machinery will never propagate the Church. True. But machinery will conserve and utilize its material, mental and spiritual resources.

PROPOSALS TOWARDS UNITY: SOME OPINIONS

Dr. Lyman Abbott.—I have read with interest the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity in THE CHURCHMAN of March 29.

Answering your request for my opinion respecting these proposals, I may say very briefly that I do not add my name to them because, while I am very heartily in favor of every effort to bring about unity in the Church of Jesus Christ, I am temperamentally a believer in growth rather than in manufacture; and my hope for a true Christian union lies in co-operation and federation rather than in organic union based upon agreement in creeds and symbols.

Some time I may like to send you a letter stating the reason why I think an exchange of pulpits between all Christian Churches ought to be practicable without any surrender or modification by Catholic churchmen of their belief in the doctrine of Apostolic succession and a permanent priesthood in the Christian Church.

The Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D.D.—You ask me in a recent letter about my opinion of the proposed canon on reunion with the Congregationalists. I think your editorial on the subject is admirable, and expresses my own view, which is one of "suspended judgment" with grave misgivings. It is a great gain, however, to have the signers recognize, as they have done, Baptism as the basis of membership in the Catholic Church for all baptized Christians and to make that the starting point of any movement for unity. More, I think, ought to be made of the fact that the question after all that divides our non-conformist friend and the churchman is not whether one is in the true Church and the other on the outside. As baptized Christians they are both on the inside, both in a true sense not only fellow-Christians but fellow-Catholics. This much being granted, let us continue negotiations as between members of the same great household of faith. Now as to the specific application of the principle to the Congregationalists, I have my doubts. Unity involves so much more than merely the question of orders. Are these Episcopal-Congregational ministers going out to teach their people the Church's view of the Sacraments? Have they any conception of the priestly office? Do they mean to exercise it? Is not the connection after all between the bishop and this quasi-episcopal minister extremely remote and undefined?

And finally, are we not in danger of defeating any greater movement for unity by these questionable experiments? Can we in this crisis afford to lose touch with either the Roman or Orthodox Churches? While I sympathize deeply with the spirit and intention of the signers, I can't see that the plan will get us anywhere.

Then episcopally ordained Congregationalists will be certain to be looked upon as turncoats by their own people. After all, no movement for unity or for anything else for that matter can succeed without the laity. The leaders are in danger of running ahead of the procession. Why not first start a great educational campaign to convert the man in the pew to the idea and necessity for unity, without as yet committing any one to any experiment or to any scheme of reunion. I have something on this line that I wrote out in Germany while I was with the army of occupation. My plan in brief was to organize a movement on the lines of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and to make an effort to see how many laymen (men and women) of all the Churches would be willing to subscribe simply to this platform, viz., to be willing to work and pray for visible and organic unity, the unity for which Christ prayed. And stop there for the present. This would not commit any one to any scheme or plan or platform, but only to the principle and to the ideal. The result would be an educational and preparatory movement to get the soil ready for the planting. The truth is the man in the pew needs to be converted in all the Churches (our own included) to the idea and imperative need for unity. When we get people agreed on the end and all praying for this end, then such pressure will be brought to bear upon the leaders that they will find a way. As it is now the clergy are timid and hesitating because they are afraid of their constituencies. Like all great movements this movement for unity must be truly democratic and come from within, from the great body of our laity. Such schemes as that proposed by the signers are ahead of the procession and are sure to meet with opposition from the laity who still need to be converted.

The Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D.—You ask me what I think of the proposed plan looking towards Christian unity which was published in this week's CHURCHMAN. Let me say that I hail it with joy and with thanksgiving.

I thank God for the grace and virtue which our brothers of the Congregational communion have shown in making this proposal. It is a noble manifestation of the spirit of Christ. I hail it also as the first practical step towards corporate reunion, and in this great matter of church unity, as in many others, I have a strong faith in the old maxim, solvitur ambulando.

Moreover it is a step which, it seems to me, can be taken with honor. There is no compromise, no equivocation about it. On the side of our Congregational brothers it recognizes simply the fact of episcopacy as the normal and regular source of ministerial order for the greater part of the Christian Church during by far the longer period of its history. And it recognizes further that if there is to be a corporate reunion it must rest upon the basis of the historic ministry.

But this recognition of the historic episcopate carries with it no acceptance of any special theory of its origin or of its exclusive validity. On the contrary the proposal recognizes frankly and gladly the validity of other Christian ministries, and in so doing it is simply true to the facts of Christian experience, to the abundant fruits of the spirit of Christ which are evident in the life of those communions whose ministry is non-episcopal.

And on the side of our own communion it makes it clear, that, with the matter and form of the two great Sacraments safeguarded, we recognize that in the reunited Church of the future there will and should be wide diversity of liturgical use and ecclesiastical discipline, that into that great Church the various Christian communions will bring their honor and glory, their tried and approved customs and usages.

So I end as I began, thanking God for the proposal, looking confidently forward to a generous and sympathetic reception of it on the part of the General Convention, and believing also that it will attract the thoughtful consideration of other great non-episcopal communions.

John Brooks Leavitt.—As an ingenious scheme for evoking among our sister Protestant Churches interest in the apostolic succession by means of homeopathic doses, the canon proposed by the memorialists should receive the hearty support of all persons in our own communion who believe in the efficacy of the aforesaid succession as a solvent of the difficult problem of church unity. It may be described as a system of inoculation by ordination. Inoculate various individual ministers in various Protestant bodies with the holy virus of the apostolic succession, and you make them immune against all schismatic poisons! The inoculated will then preach to their fellows its merits; in time those merits will be generally acknowledged; and when all the ministers, or the great majority of them, have been "duly ordained," the unity between the various Protestant Churches will have become established in fact, and their absorption into our body will be a mere matter of form. It is a good scheme and likely to succeed, if it did not proceed upon the same ignorance of human nature as that evinced by the Germans in their plans to subject the world to a Germanic unity.

In presenting it to the Church Club the other evening, its author likened it unto the norme, which evolves a cell, which in turn produces other cells, until a healthy organism results. Now this is all very well in theory, so long as you proceed upon the assumption—for it is nothing more—that Jesus Christ founded an ecclesiastical organization, called the Catholic Church, with bishops, priests and deacons, as its duly ordained officers in a prearranged succession. As there is not the slightest hint in the New Testament that He ever did so, as the assumption flies in the face of the indubitable facts of history, as it is in conflict with human nature itself, the whole idea must be dismissed as an idle dream.

Jesus Christ preached a gospel of conduct, not of opinion. He was the Great Sower of seed. When He ascended on high He gave to His followers the great mandate to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. That mandate He gave not to the eleven alone, but to all of His disciples, and He left them to their own methods of carrying it out, guided of course, by the Holy Spirit, which descended not only on the twelve Apostles, but upon the multitude of Jews, "devout men from every nation under heaven." Those "three thousand souls" continued "steadfastly in the Apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." Thus the true view of the Church as an ecclesiastical institution is that like all other institutions of government it is a human association to carry out divine ends. As such it partakes of the frailties and short comings of humanity. In all times, in all countries, it has been the sport and tool of ambitious ecclesiastics, working in theory for the glory of God, and in fact for their own aggrandizement.

The differences, which separate the various ecclesiastical organizations are merely over questions of opinion. As you cannot have any unity on such questions, it stands to reason that you cannot have church unity. Christian unity, that is unity as to Christian conduct, is a wholly different thing. That ought to be attainable. But church unity, that is the unity of Christendom, in one vast international organization, is neither feasible nor desirable; not feasible for the reason given above; nor desirable for that it would be a menace to the State.

But why pursue this train of thought? Rather, should we adopt towards these memorialists the counsel of wise old Gamaliel, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone, for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught. But, if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

The Rev. Theodore Sedgwick, D.D.—The Proposals for an Approach towards Unity, of which you have asked me to express an opinion, command my interest, and I hope will receive favorable criticism. We have prayed long for unity; and now these proposals come to challenge our sincerity. If the Church has a longing for unity, an opportunity has been afforded her to act. If, at the next General Convention, she is willing to adopt this proposed canon, she will have taken a great step forward, and should the Congregational Churches accede to it, a movement may get under way which in these days of rapidly changing order, will bring the Churches together in one holy work, as the nations are coming together in a league.

I feel the Congregational Churches, as represented by these distinguished men, have taken the greater step, and they deserve high praise for their willingness to accept so much from us. Certainly their action shows their great desire. They have come more than three-quarters of the way; surely we shall meet them, especially as we are not asked to give up anything that has to do with our faith. What we are asked to forego is only a matter of order, namely, to receive the Communion from ordained ministers with Christians who have not been confirmed. As a matter of fact, Christians of other communions are constantly coming now to the Holy Communion.

These are turbulent days. Every one will admit there has been a falling away from the Church, and a great reason is the anachronism of the profession of great love with a divided Church. The spirit and vision of men have changed from what they were. But religion will come back, and men will return to the Church, when she shows a love for her Master, Christ, that is greater than her devotion to order, and matters, which to the lay mind, are considered insignificant.

TWO VIEWS OF THE SEMINARY QUADRANGLE

THE SEMINARY CENTENNIAL

BY THE REV. RALPH B. POMEROY, M.A.

ON the thirtieth of April and the first of May the General Theological Seminary will celebrate the completion of one hundred years of continuous teaching life. On the first of May, the Feast of St. Philip and St. James, 1819, the first students, six in number, met in the vestry of St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, to begin their theological studies under the guidance of two instructors and from that time until the present the succession of teaching has never failed.

The seminary however came into existence at least formally some two years earlier and it was not until several years of wandering from St. Paul's to rooms in a school and from there to the vestry of St. John's Chapel and thence as far as to New Haven that the gifts of Clement C. Moore and Jacob Sherred rendered possible its establishment on the present site in Chelsea Square.

So there are three anniversaries which might be kept but the choice of the one singled out for especial commemoration is not without happy significance. True it was not a wholly free selection which determined it, for plans were afoot to commemorate the centennial in 1917 and doubtless they would have been carried into effect had it not been felt that a time of struggle and suffering was singularly inappropriate for so joyous a celebration.

But after all the real life of a seminary lies in its teaching work. One is reminded of the phrase in Joan and Peter where Dolly says "I am the mother and I muth." So a seminary may be imagined as saying, "I am a school and I school." Back of the work must lie the formal process of the calling of the institution into being; much of its power and effectiveness depends no doubt upon adequate physical equipment, but resolutions or charters or lands or buildings never made a seminary. Its life springs from its power to teach, to instil sound learning, to instruct men in the truth they must in turn impart.

Much of this teaching of course lies outside of the strict boundaries of any department of theological study. It is not enough that a seminary should be a graduate school of theology where scholastic accuracy and distinction shall be the sole ends sought and attained. It is a training school for clergy and its influence must touch and quicken heart and soul as well as mind; it must awaken men to the need for the Church's message and give them not simply a detached and critical understanding of it but also a love for it in all its fulness and a real desire to impart it to those who know or heed it not. And above all the seminary must impress upon its members the two great marks of the true priestly life, discipline and charity, the discipline which is the evidence of the soul surrendered to God, the love which manifests the minister of Christ.

It is a century spent in such labor by the long succession of teachers and students that will be commemorated. And as is most fitting it is around the altar that those memories of the past will gather. On the morning of Wednesday, April 30, the Holy Eucharist will be sung in the chapel as a solemn act of thanksgiving to God for the century which that day brings to a close. And as the great act of thanksgiving and worship is offered, mingled with its praise to God for the years of blessing, will arise "most high praise and hearty thanks for the wonderful grace and virtue declared in all His saints," and especially in those who in the years past have gone out from this place to be "choice vessels of His grace and lights of the world in their several generations." There will be remembered not only the bishops and pastors of the Church, or those who have been leaders of her thought and moulders of her life, or her missionaries who have carried the Church's teaching far afield but also many long-forgotten souls who served with patience and fidelity.

But there is another aspect of the seminary's life which demands due emphasis. This anniversary not only completes and closes an epoch, which is to be looked back upon with thankfulness, it also inaugurates an era which must be entered upon with courage and hope. It is not enough for a seminary to impart to its members the age-long formulae of the faith, nor to quicken their zeal nor indeed to impress upon them the true marks of priestly character. They must also be made aware of the problems and opportunities peculiarly present in their time. They are to bring the spirit of the ages to bear with moulding power upon the spirit of the age and to accomplish this they must know both. Nor has the seminary been unmindful of this in the past. No great movement to quicken the Church's life or to arouse her to a deeper sense of both her duty and power to meet the needs of successive generations has been held aloof as alien and unwelcome. The result has not always been profound peace. But from the very controversy that has raged around and within her walls has come a real deepening of the realization of the Church's resources and of their application to the life of the time.

And so one very interesting and vital feature of the commemoration will be the public meeting on Wednesday afternoon in St. Peter's Church. There the Bishop of Pennsylvania, the Chancellor of New York University and the Third Assistant Secretary of War, a former dean of Columbia College, will speak. From them should be gained not only real leading and guidance in the specific task of training men to bring the power of the Gospel of God and of His Son to our own generation but also real stimulus toward making more effective and intelligent the whole work of the Church. On the evening of the thirtieth the alumni dinner will be held in the refectory. The chief feature will be a sketch of the life of the seminary by the professor of Ecclesiastical History, himself an alumnus.

On Wednesday morning May 1, St. Philip and St. James' Day there will be a service in the chapel with commemoration of the benefactors of the seminary and a sermon by the Presiding Bishop, an alumnus of the class of 1862. Wise, strong, full of courage and cheer his counsel and blessing will fitly conclude so significant and important an event, the past remembered with thanksgiving, the future faced with thoughtful resolve and hope.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

CHURCH LEAGUE FOR PEACE WORK FORMED BY WOMEN

Great Assembly of War Workers Launch Peace Offensive

Last Monday six hundred New York churchwomen set on foot a movement which promises to have far-reaching results. Under the leadership of a committee of which Miss A. E. Warren was the moving spirit, a conference-luncheon was arranged to which war-workers were especially invited. The big concert hall on the nineteenth floor of the Biltmore was filled to its capacity. Many of the tables were taken by patriotic societies and other organizations. "Last year you were busy with war work; next year will you be busy with peace work?" was the question confronting the guests on their attractively printed programs. "You who have learned the joy of service are needed now." And the spirit of the gathering gave evidence that the response would be energetic.

Dr. Manning, the chairman of the advisory council for the luncheon, presided. In his address on "The Call of the Country" he made two signal points; first, that in meeting the obligations of peace, church people must get out of their groove of parochialism and attack the problems with concerted effort; second, that various groups should agree to back personally certain definite undertakings—school or a hospital, an orphanage or a club. Chaplain Henshaw of Rye, just back from France, in speaking of "The Dullness of Peace" emphasized the need of consecration in order to perform faithfully the monotonous round of duties that is typified by the "S. O. S." work of the army. Mr. John Jay Chapman spoke on "The Spirit of Work." Major Weld and Dr. Ellsworth Eliot also made short addresses.

The speaker of the afternoon was Bishop Thomas, who came all the way from Cheyenne to issue the call of the Church to women. Illustrating his points with many stories, he told the ex-war workers what was the peace work that lay ahead of them, right here in their own country—the education of the Negro, the Americanization of the immigrant, the development of the mountaineer, and the biggest and most challenging job of all, the upbuilding of our civilization in the West.

At once it was moved from the floor that: WHEREAS, This conference has demonstrated the need for organized service in the hospitals, settlements and other agencies for social service connected with the Church, and WHEREAS: The response to the call for service issued to those present has demonstrated the readiness of women who have been engaged in war work to enter into peace work, Therefore be it resolved that A Churchwomen's League for Patriotic Service be and hereby is formed. The motion was enthusiastically carried.

Mrs. Hamilton Fairfax was elected chairman of the league and Miss Emie Day secretary, and a temporary committee was appointed.

Hardly had the interest of the meeting been thus crystallized, when one of the ladies at the table of the Southern Women's Patriotic Society rose and said: "Bishop Thomas, if you will tell us any one thing that you want us to do for you, we will do it at once."

"That," said Dr. Manning, "is the best speech we have listened to this afternoon." Bishop Greer was present at the luncheon and pronounced the grace. Bishop Burch was also present, as were the rectors of many of the city churches, professors from the General Seminary, and laymen who had left their offices and come uptown to watch the launching of this peace offensive.

Mrs. Fairfax has called her committee together for Wednesday morning in order to draw up a program for immediate action.

Dr. Stires Deplores Peace Delay

The Rev. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church, New York City, preaching at a service commemorating the second anniversary of the war in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Sunday, April 6, declared his opinion of the situation President Wilson has permitted to arise in Paris. He said, in part, "We pray that he (President Wilson) may never experience such criticism and abuse as Washington and Lincoln knew; and yet we dare tell him for the sake of America and the world that he must not compromise with anarchy in our name, that we pray he will permit no persistent personal preference to delay a righteous peace, that his country needs him at this time of vast opportunity, and that Congress should be in session transacting the congested business of the nation."

Breadless Men Attend Trinity Service

What proved to be a very touching and solemn service occurred Sunday morning, April 6, when 450 members of New York City's breadline responded to an invitation to attend church, and filed in a column of twos into old Trinity. They were received cordially, seated as far as possible at the front of the church, and the spirit of the service was devoted entirely to their cheer and comfort. It was, according to the Tribune, a "spectacular, silent appeal" to see these men, in the depths of lonely poverty, approach the heart of the church in dignified prayer for assistance, and the appeal has been answered by material aid coming from many sources.

Joan of Arc Is Canonized

Rome, April 6.—Pope Benedict and high dignitaries of the Roman Church participated today at the Vatican at the ceremony of the canonization of Joan of Arc.

CONTROVERSY OVER BROOKS STATUE IN BOSTON

Supreme Court Decides Bela Pratt Shall Not Displace St. Gaudens

"There is no authority to warrant the removal of the St. Gaudens monument of Phillips Brooks from the grounds of Trinity Church in order to render feasible the erection of the Bela Pratt statue upon a nearby site," said Chief Justice Rugg of the Supreme Court in an opinion handed down ordering dismissed the bill brought by Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Major Henry L. Higginson, the Rev. George A. Gordon, D.D., Edward H. Clement and the Rev. Leighton Parks, D.D., against Attorney General Henry C. Attwill, Trinity Church, and Richard M. Saltonstall. The petitioners sought the right to remove the St. Gaudens group and erect the Pratt statue in Copley square.

The petition was brought by the surviving members of the citizens' committee of thirty-one, appointed by the vestry of Trinity Church in 1893 to receive contributions of money and therewith to procure and erect a memorial monument to Bishop Brooks, to be placed in Copley square.

THE REV. M. D. WILSON DIES

Prominent Rector of California Passes Away April 2

The Rev. Marden Dewees Wilson, late rector of St. Phillips Parish, Oakland, California, died after a prolonged illness, on April 2. The funeral took place on Saturday, April 5, from his church. A large number of the clergy of the diocese were present at the requiem Eucharist at nine-thirty in the morning. The bishop of the diocese officiated at the public burial service at eleven o'clock, the interment being at Cypress Lawn Cemetery. Mr. Wilson is survived by a widow and daughter.

The deceased was a graduate of Yale University and the Philadelphia Divinity School. He was admitted to the priesthood by Bishop Lee in 1882, and his first charge was as an assistant at the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. Most of his ministry, however, was served in California, where he was managing editor of the Pacific Churchman for five years, more than twenty-four years secretary of the diocese, several years correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN, besides being the pastor of a number of important parishes. Mr. Wilson leaves behind him an unusually large host of friends.

Chaplain Jefferys Back from France

Dr. Edward M. Jefferys, rector of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, who went to France in May, 1917, with the Philadelphia Hospital unit, and who since January has been in charge of the Protestant military congregations in Coblentz, landed in Boston last Sunday.

MOUNTED POLICE TRAMPLE MOBS IN LAWRENCE STREETS

Eye Witnesses Tell Story to Gathering at Greenwich House

By a Member of the Staff

Three times lately a little group of New Yorkers have gathered around the luncheon table at Greenwich House to hear from the lips of Bostonians a story to which, apparently, Boston will not listen. These men and women were in interesting contrast—probably such a group as only the metropolitan city can produce. There was the director of Greenwich House, Mrs. Simkhovitch at the head of the table; Mrs. J. Sergeant Cram, the instigator of these "Labor Luncheons"; Mrs. Raymond Ingersoll, who was appointed secretary; Dr. Devine of the School of Philanthropy, Mr. Lovett, editor of The Dial; Mr. Fitch of The Survey, Mr. West of The Public. Mr. Thomas of The World Tomorrow, Mr. Wood of the Federal Employment Bureau, Miss Lillian Wald, Mrs. Charles Tiffany, Mrs. Robert Bruere, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bruere, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Leach, Mrs. Charles Rann Kennedy, Mrs. Morgenthau, Miss Lewisohn, Mrs. Gordon Norrie, Mrs. Spinney of Greenwich House, Anne O'Hagen Shinn, Mrs. Reginald Fink, the Rev. Richard Roberts and others. They had heard that in Lawrence the authorities were attempting to break the strike of the textile workers by the use of uncalled for force, and they had come to hear from eye-witnesses the story of the Lawrence strike. Among the speakers were Mrs. Ida Ripley, vice-president of the Trades Union League of Boston, Harold Rotzel of the Boston Defense Committee for the Lawrence Strike and Mrs. Glendower Evans, a stockholder in the mills.

The speakers all seemed pretty well agreed that the strikers were peaceable in their methods and that the methods of the local authorities were, to say the least, undemocratic.

The Lawrence strike has been a peaceful strike. One of the speakers described the first mass meeting on February 1. It was marked by insistence on the part of the strike leaders on no violence. "Be gentlemen," they told the workers. Quiet and restraint has marked every meeting the strikers have held, peacefulness and a certain religious fervor and exaltation. The Greeks have held their meetings in a room lighted by holy candles burning before an icon.

But city authorities in Lawrence made up their mind to break the strike. Public opinion seems to be with them. The daily press has made a persistent effort to belittle the strike and to make the striking workers believe the strike has failed. Again and again reports have falsely announced the termination of the strike.

The Lawrence police, augmented by policemen borrowed from neighboring towns, have attempted to overcome the strikers. Mrs. Ripley described walking down Essex Street at noon on February 21, the day of the first "riot." Everything was absolutely quiet. A little knot of men stood at one corner talking. A mounted policeman, on a horse shod with nails, rode up to the group and dispersed it and then attempted to ride down an old man, lame and to all appearances much too old to be a striker. At every step she expected the horse to knock him down and trample on him. A few days before some of the mounted police had run down two children. The Italian mothers had gone wild, and had in consequence looted the provision shops.

Two hours after noon on February 21 Mrs. Ripley with her companion was at the end of the common. She had come from a meeting of the strikers held on the ash dump which they rented in lieu of a hall. The meeting was very quiet. Men, women with baby carriages, children crowded the ash dump and listened to the speakers. After the meeting they started to return across the common. The mounted police rode along the edges. There was absolute silence; tense, terrible silence. Then at a given signal the police rode into the mass of workers, rode them down and then beat them with clubs, quite indiscriminately. One old man was beaten before Mrs. Ripley's eyes by five or six policemen and then kicked with force sufficient to break his back. There had been no provocation on the part of the strikers. The provocation has been on the part of the police who seem incensed with hatred against the strikers. Stones were thrown after the police made their attack not before.

The strikers are not allowed to gather on the dump any longer. They have no meeting place. They are not well organized but they are determined. There is only one thing which may break the strike and that is hunger. The babies of Lawrence have never had a very good chance. Out of every thousand born one hundred and seventy-three, according to Mrs. Ripley, die before reaching the end of the first year. But the milk dealers are in many cases allowing the strikers to have milk on credit, and some money is being sent to the strikers to pay for food and medicines in cases of extreme want.

The Lawrence, Butte and Seattle strikes have been bracketed together by the timid as the possible beginning of a Bolshevik uprising in the United States. The daily press has fostered this point of view. The speakers at the labor luncheons said, however, that there had been no revolutionary speeches made, that no revolutionary literature has been distributed and that no Bolshevik propaganda had been put forth in connection with the Lawrence strike.

The citizens' committee in Lawrence have issued a call: "Citizens of Lawrence! Wake up! Do you want to see the city in the hands of radical Socialists, Anarchists, Bolsheviks—rouse yourselves; and protect your city and property and stand by true Americanism that guarantees individual Liberty. Attend a mass meeting in City Hall!"

Mrs. Ripley, Mr. Rotzel and Mrs. Evans found it very difficult to reconcile this call with the treatment the peaceful strikers were receiving at the hands of the police.

Burning the Mortgage

At the annual meeting of congregations in Fargo, North Dakota, on January thirteenth the mortgage for $1,500 on the bishop's house was burned, much to the delight of all interested.

BRITISH TOMMIES MUST PAY HIGH IN PALESTINE

Natives Try to Exploit Saviours Until Rations Are Enforced

Writing from Jaffa on February 12, Jacob E. Spafford, whose letters have from time to time appeared in THE CHURCHMAN, comments as follows on the death of Colonel Roosevelt and the events of the winter:—

The death of President Roosevelt came as a severe blow. An editorial rightly says he was a casualty of the war. God certainly works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform. Man would say this was the most inopportune time for the removal of a strong force—but.

Your description of the spontaneous outburst of joy on the signing of the armistice was very interesting indeed. You are a free people who voluntarily made sacrifices of your own sons and your comforts; when the result was achieved, what should stop the unlimited joy you felt and knew how to express. On the contrary we were a servile people who had been down trodden and were in the war forcedly, when we were released without any effort of our own, we dared not show it.

Again, the character here is so depraved, everything is received from abroad, even release and victory; we were simply the recipients. Hence arises what has given us so much pain and displeasure since the British have been here, i. e., the seeming ingratitude of the people and their exploiting the noble Tommies and officers for their own advantage. Had they not suffered four years? Was not this their harvest?

You can scarcely imagine how high prices have risen since these deliverers came in, and solely so they should pay it, for they have not used one straw out of the stores of the country. Eggs rose to five times higher than they had ever been, and all had to pay the price. There is no telling what heights figures would have soared to had not the authorities nobly undertaken to ration the whole population at cost price. It so happens therefore that we have in some instances come down to pre-war prices. Fancy what an arbitrary condition of things must have prevailed when at Damascus 6 lbs. of bread sold at $2.50 before the British entered, and then dropped to 25c. When deliverance came and there was no more chance of exploitation, the hoards were brought out and prices dropped.

You speak about your city being "bone dry." The Samaritans here tell a funny story inversely. You know we have been interested in, and have helped the Samaritans up to the last. Whilst the British occupied Jerusalem with a belt northward of about sixteen miles for almost a year, we much feared that the Samaritans would be great sufferers, and we prepared as soon as the way opened to send food up at once. Our astonishment was very great to find twenty days after the British got there, that they had done extremely well, making a profit of £20,000 during this time in manufacturing drinks for the Turkish and German officers, and thus were able to procure everything they needed. They would have preferred the war to continue. Neither was this stroke to their liking.

LET THE MOVIES

PAY THE BILLS

Substituting the Movie for the Lawn Party and Bazaar

Moving pictures are now being advocated as influential agents in the social and educational work of the Church. That they have long been a permanent factor in social life of communities at large has been recognized. The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors even goes so far as to report that "moving pictures are not a minor but a major influence in the mental and spiritual growth of our children . . . and of many who are adult." The social service department of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures is now suggesting and encouraging experiments which will develop the best way to employ this instrument for the Church.

It is a notable fact that the powers of attraction of the moving picture, although already great, are still steadily increasing. There are many villages and small towns throughout the country which have no cinema theatres as yet, and people travel many miles merely for an evening's entertainment. The imminent farewell of the saloon promises a great boost in popularity. Why, it is asked, cannot the Church engage some of this wealth of sociable desires for a good, healthy and instructive end?

Aside from the use of the screen as an aid in the class-room, it is urged to organize Sunday or Saturday evening programs of a healthy nature, particularly in the small town, where there is no opposition from a regular establishment. This is thought to promise a very convenient and productive successor to the bazaar or social tea. The experiment has been attempted in many localities, and sample programs submitted for criticism. For instance, following is a representative program presented by Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City, during a series of exhibitions from October, 1918, to January 11, 1919:

2:30 P. M. Children. (Attendance 555. Collection $4.45). Films: He Comes Up Smiling, Famous Players-Lasky, five reels, showing Douglas Fairbanks. Clean comedy, full of action and beautiful scenery. Burton Holmes Travelogue on Florida, one reel. Universal Weekly, current events. Story: A Boy's Hand and a Fish Story, using the Bible story of the loaves and fishes.

7:30 P. M. Adults. (Attendance above 400. Collection $17.00) Films: Same as above. Music: Lady soloist to sing.

Care, of course, must be used in the selections on the programs, but it is convenient now to obtain expert advanced notice on practically all the good films produced. There should be no excuse for purchasing inferior products. But the educational, social and economic sides of the plan are well worth study and consideration.

The "Victory Bell" of Rochester

Weighing about 2,500 pounds, the big bronze "victory bell" was hung in the tower of St. Luke's Church, Rochester, New York, a few days ago, under the direction of a workman from the foundry of the makers, the Meneely Bell Company, of Troy. Prior to its erection, the bell was on exhibition in the vestibule of the church where many people came to read the fifty-six names of the men and women of the parish who served in the army, navy, marines, Y. M. C. A., or Red Cross. Three of them were in the English army, and the others in the American army. On Easter Sunday the bell will be rung for the first time. The money for it was raised by voluntary subscriptions. The names of those who served stand out upon the bell in bas-relief as well as the following inscription:

"This bell is a thank offering from St. Luke's Parish for the coming of peace after the great war and in gratitude. There are inscribed upon it the names of those members of the parish who served in the forces of their country."

MONTCLAIR PARISH ADOPTS DEMOCRATIC PEW SYSTEM

MONTCLAIR, NEW JERSEY, — Beginning May 1, pews in St. Luke's Church here will be free. This action on the part of the church has been commended by its former rectors, Archdeacon Carter and Bishop Stearly. The Rev. Luke M. White, the present rector, has frequently presented to his congregation the importance of doing away with whatever constitutes a barrier to the church's larger service in the community and has stressed the need of making the church a house of worship free to all.

Lately an every-member canvass was made to secure voluntary subscriptions and to increase the number of duplex envelope contributions. So acceptable is the plan about to be inaugurated to many members of the parish that some have volunteered to give quarterly twice the amount of their present pew rents, while others will increase their payments fifty per cent. and still others will continue their pew rents in the form of voluntary gifts.

THE WAR ON TOBACCO

Methodist Episcopal Board Does Not Seek Prohibition Now

From a letter to the New York Sun—SIR: I know personally and intimately every man and woman who has led or influenced the movement for prohibition of alcoholic drinks. It is safe to say that not one of them would favor prohibition of tobacco, except, perhaps, its sale to minors.

Most of them look upon the use of tobacco as a bad habit, but its evil effects are upon the health of the individual, not upon industry, government and society. The liquor problem is social, political and economic; the tobacco problem personal.

Our organization fully intends to do everything possible to cause a decrease in the use of tobacco, especially by minors. But the prohibition method does not apply; nor are the methods of education and persuasion first steps toward prohibition.

Would it not be wise for the tobacco people to take measures to stop the sale of tobacco to boys and to discourage its use by women?

FAST DAY ANNOUNCED
FOR CONNECTICUTGovernor Would Waken People to Dangers Ahead

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—The following fast day proclamation was issued last week by Gov. Marcus H. Holcomb:

"During the past year an army of our young men has been in armed conflict on foreign soil in our defence. At home there has been a universal participation in everything which would contribute to our success. The armistice is signed and the reaction has come and we are still environed with destructive, evil forces which are all the more dangerous because less easily visualized.

"The people of New England have been a great force because of the Christian influence which surrounded them, developing what has been termed the New England conscience. We must not drift from our moorings. We need to be aroused from our indifference.

"I, therefore, appoint the 18th day of April as a day of fasting and prayer and earnestly enjoin all who believe in God, love, good government, and believe in the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath to pray to our God to forgive our sins and indifference and to awaken us to a clear comprehension of the dangers which threaten us."

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA,
ENDORSES CHURCH UNITY

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Richmond Clericus at a meeting held March 31, 1919. Resolved: That we do most earnestly commend the efforts of the "Voluntary Committee" looking toward practical Church Unity with other branches of the Christian Church, and that it is our desire that these efforts be furthered in every way possible through publicity and the hearty co-operation of our clergy and laity; and that we do specially congratulate our beloved bishop, the Right Rev. Wm. Cabell Brown, D.D., for the energetic and active part which he has taken in promoting and assisting in the action of said "Voluntary Committee."

Resolved further: That our Secretary be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions for publication in the New York CHURCHMAN, Southern Churchman and the Living Church.

Emergency Campaign On for Churches in Stricken War Area

Under the auspices of the Committee for Christian Relief in France and Belgium, on which are represented American Protestants of all denominations interested in the French and Belgian Protestant Churches, a campaign has been inaugurated to enlist the sympathy and support of American Christians for the cause of the Huguenot Churches. The Committee on Christian Relief for France and Belgium has estimated that at least 3,000,000 is necessary during 1919 to rebuild the destroyed Protestant Churches of Northern France and Belgium, and to aid those pastors and congregations who have lost their all.

ARMENIAN AND SYRIAN RELIEF UNDER WAY

First Shipload of Supplies Arrives at Beirut, Syria

Major James H. Nicol, deputy commissioner of the American Red Cross, writing from Beirut, Syria, tells of the arrival of the steamship Pensacola at that port from the United States with the first supplies to come through directly from America in four years. The Pensacola, a ship granted by the Navy to the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, sailed from New York on January 25 and arrived at Beirut, February 20. This boat, like the Mercurius, also sailing under the auspices of the American committee, was loaded to capacity with supplies for the starving peoples of the Near East. In the cargoes were 100 motor trucks, thirty-six small motor cars, twenty motorcycles, fifteen ambulances, 4,500,000 yards of cloth, 100,000 blankets, 50,000 pairs of shoes, 1,000 cases of refugee clothing, 200 tons of foodstuffs, fifteen 100-bed hospital units, and 10,000 cans of condensed milk. The Food Administration granted a special license for the export of this quantity of food-stuff.

CHILDREN'S YEAR NETS RESULTS

First Report from Children's Bureau Shows Encouraging Indications

A preliminary accounting of the success of the Children's Year campaign, inaugurated a year ago, "to save 100,000 babies and get a square deal for children," has been rendered by the children's bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and the child conservation section of the Council of National Defense. According to this accounting, the efforts of the 11,000,000 women who have been interested in the year's activities have resulted in permanent measures for child welfare all over the country.

The first activity of the year was a test of babies and little children under six to see whether or not they were up to the standard in height and weight. Nearly 7,000,000 record cards were issued in the course of this test and reports for 1,619,283 children have already been returned to the children's bureau, where the information they give will be tabulated. The weighing and measuring test has emphasized the need for preventive work in behalf of children. One hundred and thirty-four children's health centers, to which mothers may go for expert advice concerning the best manner for caring for their children, have been established during Children's Year in communities in fifteen states.

THE JERUSALEM AND THE EAST MISSION

Contributions Necessary to Carry on Excellent Work in Palestine

The work grows wider and the needs grow greater. A much larger tract of territory has now come under Bishop MacInness's jurisdiction and his clergy will have to minister to Churchmen from Cairo to Constantinople. The demands upon him for purely charitable and philanthropic work have also increased; nor is he able to draw on the Armenian and Syrian Relief Fund which is administered under other auspices. However much that Fund may appeal to us (and we recognize its needs) we must not overlook the peculiar opportunities afforded the Church today in Palestine and parts adjacent. The growth of the Zionist movement also makes it imperative that Christianity shall not be overshadowed by Judaism in the Holy Land. We must make Christianity such a force in Palestine that the time may be hastened when there shall be "one fold under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord."

May I not ask you to bring this matter before your congregation and to secure from them, preferably on Good Friday, a generous offering for the important and strategic work of the Jerusalem and the East Mission?

Faithfully yours,

B. W. ROGERS TAYLOR,

Hon. Sec. of Prov. 11, of the J. & E. M.

All moneys must be sent direct to the Rev. J. H. McKenzic, D.D., LL.D., (Hon. Secy., for the U. S. A.) Howe, Indiana.

Personals

REV. T. J. LACEY, Ph.D.—Dispatches from Athens of March 20 announce that the Greek government has decorated Rev. Thomas James Lacey, Ph. D., rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., with the cross of St. George. Dr. Lacey has for many years been in intimate touch with Hellenic affairs and a close student of Greek culture. His thesis for the doctorate on "Social Heredity as illustrated in the Greek People" was translated into modern Greek some years ago and largely reproduced in the Greek papers and commented on. Bishop Darlington, Bishop Green and President Hall, of Washington University, St. Louis, have also been decorated by the Greek government.

THE REV. FREDERICK S. PENFOLD, D.D., of St. Luke's Church, Racine, Wisconsin, recently returned from war service in France, has accepted the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, Rhode Island, and will enter upon his new duties on Easter Eve.

THE REV. WYTHE LEIGH KINSOLVING, in charge of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, during the absence of the now returned rector, was presented with a purse of $100 as a special tribute, given a letter expressing the vestry's appreciation of his services, and paid salary in full for the year of his tenure at St. Paul's. The Rev. Mr. Kinsolving is now without charge at 718 Lamb Avenue, Richmond, Virginia.

THE REV. CHARLES H. RICKER, assistant at St. George's Church, New York City, has accepted the call to the Rectorship of Christ Church, Manhasset, New York. He will enter upon his new duties about the first of May.

A HARD YEAR FOR THE CHURCHES

Statistics for 1918 Show Membership of All Churches Now 41,566,000

The last year of the war, 1918, made itself felt among the churches in membership. They made the smallest gain of the present century in numbers. The net increase was only 284,599, as revealed for the Christian Herald by Dr. H. K. Carroll, who has been doing this service annually for the Churches for more than a quarter of a century.

The small increase in 1918, which is shared practically by all the denominations, though a few report actual decrease, including the Methodist Episcopal, the Protestant Episcopal and the Disciples of Christ, is believed to be due to taking young pastors from their pulpits for war work, as chaplains in the Army and Navy, and for service under the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus, and in the camps and cantonments in this country. The closing of the churches during the epidemic, and campaigns for church funds, also affected regular church operations and prevented the usual increase.

The aggregate of church members now reaches 41,565,908, distributed as follows: Roman Catholic, 3 bodies, 14,927,466; Methodist, 15 bodies, 7,579,311; Baptist, 14 bodies, 7,213,922; Lutheran, 16 bodies, 2,443,812; Presbyterian, 10 bodies, 2,259,358; Disciples of Christ, 2 bodies, 1,511,160; Protestant Episcopal, 2 bodies, 1,072,321; Congregational, 815,396; Reformed, 4 bodies, 519,962; United Brethren, 2 bodies, 367,996; Evangelical, 2 bodies, 209,697; Evangelical Synod, 260,045; Eastern Orthodox churches, 472,794. Contrary to expectation, there was a considerable increase of ministers and churches.

ARE CHOIR BOYS DOOMED? AN ENGLISH VIEW

By James Cairns

LONDON.—More than once the advocates of mixed choirs, generally to be placed in a west gallery, have had their say at conferences and in the church papers. Choirboys in parish churches are a very modern institution, and even in cathedrals their history is not so very ancient. But we are likely to lose them, not for artistic or ecclesiastical reasons, but because it is too much for their human nature to be expected to sing without fee or reward. And, by a wholly unlooked-for result of the last education act, it will shortly be illegal to employ children under twelve at all on Sunday, while those over twelve may only be employed for two hours. It is curious that none of the papers, and none of the bishops in the House of Lords, thought of this difficulty when the bill was under consideration. It is not likely that a busy Parliament will pass a new special act to allow choristers to be excepted. So paid choirboys must go, unless the education office discovers and allows some way of evading the act. Possibly we may be allowed to pay them for their attendance at weekday practices, leaving the Sunday attendance voluntary.

10,000 MEDALS FOR CHURCH SCHOOL PUPILS

Leaders of Every Member Drive Reward Children for Attending Services

Ten thousand bronze medallions are being awarded to children of Sunday Schools of the Diocese of Pennsylvania in connection with the Every Member Campaign. They are presented to children who attend three catechetical services for instruction in the work of the Church throughout the world.

The medallion, inscribed with the Western Hemisphere covered by a large cross, was designed by the Rev. Horace W. Stowell, field secretary for missions of the Province of Washington and executive secretary of the Every Member Campaign. It is awarded to the little "winners," those ready to enroll as "winners of the world." Each child who attends three winners' services, learns a catechetical statement of the Church's world program, reads certain Scripture passages and offers a daily prayer is entitled to a medal.

CHAPLAINS SAY BODIES SHOULD REMAIN IN FRANCE

The chaplains of the 42nd Division which is part of the army of occupation in Germany, have discussed at length the question of the final disposition of the bodies of the American soldiers who have died in France and have come to the unanimous conclusion that the bodies should remain in France. They accordingly have addressed a letter to the senior chaplain, stating their conviction. Part of the letter follows:

"The men of the American Expeditionary Force who died in France gave their lives for freedom and humanity in the land where these were threatened. The cause was America's, and by their death our men have made the soil where they fell forever American. It is surely fitting to follow the ancient military custom that the soldier's body should rest on the field of honor. We are sure that the general feeling of the army has been expressed by the many men who have said: If we die in France, we want our bodies left here.

"We are informed that if the relatives give their consent to the bodies' remaining in France, it is the intention of the government to acquire cemeteries on all the battlefields, where the graves will be permanently marked, recorded and cared for. These cemeteries and those at hospitals will remain forever as a memorial to the men whose bodies lie there, and as a place of pilgrimage for Americans of future generations."

ESTABLISHING AN INTER- DENOMINATIONAL FORUM

A laymen's forum, the purpose of which will be to discuss freely all sides of public questions, and to combat the spirit of Bolshevism that threatens to become rampant throughout the country was organized by laymen of Watertown at the Flower Memorial Library, March 21. Men were present from the following congregations: Trinity (Episcopal), All Souls (Universalist), St. Paul's (Episcopal), Zion (African Methodist Episcopal), St. Patrick's (Roman Catholic), Christian Scientists, Faith Chapel, First Methodist, Emmanuel, First Baptist, Congregational, First Presbyterian, Asbury Methodist and Church of Christ. The representatives numbered thirty and the sentiment was unanimously in favor of a permanent organization. Ten churches of the city were not represented, but it is believed they will enter the movement. The meeting was called after committees from the First Presbyterian and Trinity Church had conferred together.

It will be the aim of the forum to bring to the city speakers who will present the various sides of the public questions of the day, and who will present the arguments against Bolshevism to the laboring classes in particular. There will be an executive committee consisting of one delegate from each church that desires to join the movement. Sunday afternoon meetings will probably be held semi-monthly in the Olympic Hall.

It was pointed out by various speakers, that this was the first practical step toward closer co-operation between the churches that had ever taken place in Watertown; that the effects would be far reaching; that church people should lead the thought of the day; that the meeting was the start of better conditions in Watertown, and had it been begun a year ago, there would not now be the same serious problems to face.

Women Petition Peace Conference

The resolution and petition which American women signed in response to the appeal of the French women and which was published in THE CHURCHMAN on January 11, has been taken to Paris by Sergeant Ruth G. Farnam who will present it to the peace conference. About 4,000,000 signatures were secured representing every state in the United States as well as Cuba, Hawaii, Alaska and Porto Rico. The petition asks that those guilty of authorized cruelties practised upon women by the German military forces and their allies be punished when possible and that the status of women in future wars be defined and protected by international law and that women, who have suffered as only women can, be honored as wounded in war.

Reconstruction Conference at Knoxville

Following is the prospectus of a call sent out by the Southern Sociological Congress for the leadership of the South to meet in Knoxville, Tennessee, May 11 to May 14, 1919. It is a notable undertaking which all progressive and forward-looking elements in the country should do well to observe and perhaps imitate.

Purpose—1st to enable southern leaders to study the sociological problems that demand immediate consideration; 2nd, to forewarn the public against Bolshevism, either political, racial or industrial; 3rd, to set forth a program for sociological reconstruction in order that human life in the South may be conserved in the largest possible way.

KANSAS PLANS TO REPEAT SUCCESS OF LAST YEAR

Clever Plan to Increase Attendance at Diocesan Convention

When 10 per cent. of the communicants of a diocese come to the annual diocesan convention and stay through a four-day session in a hot Kansas May, either the convention must be unique or there has been a modern miracle of re-awakened faith and interest. Yet that is what happened last May in the diocese of Kansas when over 500 of the diocese's 5,000 communicants flocked to Grace Cathedral, Topeka, to attend what Bishop James Wise termed a "school in practical Christianity." And when the four days were over, clergy and laity returned home not with the memory of tiresome business sessions but with a new resolve to make the Church in Kansas more than merely 1½ per cent. of the state's total church population. And despite influenza and the war the past year has witnessed more progress in the diocese of Kansas than any preceding entire decade. Naturally the "Topeka Plan" has become permanent in Kansas diocesan conventions. And this year with improved publicity methods and the greater interest awakened by last year, Topeka is planning to entertain 750 Episcopalians during the four eventful days starting Sunday, May 18. The convention this year will mean more to Topeka and the state than the mere annual gathering of Episcopalians. For with an era of reconstruction ahead, the keynote will be "social service." Not the social service of the big city slums, but the problems confronting the Church and the state in Kansas, with its vast rural population, 72 per cent. of which pays no allegiance to any Christian church, although the state has the largest number of college and university students in the nation and ranks high in the lack of illiteracy.

The Rev. A. Elmendorf, field secretary of the Church's Social Service Commission, will lead the conferences on social service, assisted by the Rev. William E. Gardner, general secretary of the General Board of Religious Education. The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell not only will be the opening speaker of the convention but will lead the conference on "The Church and the Soldier." Other visiting speakers will be the Rev. Horace Percy Silver, of New York; Frank Shelby, general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; the Rev. Francis White, domestic secretary of the Board of Missions; the Rev. R. D. S. Putney of St. Louis, who will lead a conference on "The Church and the College Student" and explain the "big brother" movement; Dr. P. C. Lutkin, head of the Department of Music of Northwestern University, who will tell of the advantages of the new church hymnal; and Paul J. Brindel of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who will tell the clergy how to assist their local newspapers in establishing weekly church advertising pages and explain the value of good church propaganda. With such a program Bishop Wise admits that the attendance this year may even reach a thousand churchmen.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

The Annual Spiritual Conference for the clergy of the diocese was held in Springfield on March 27. The conference was opened by a celebration of the Holy Communion at St. Peter's Church, the bishop being the celebrant. Archdeacon Greig of Worcester, England, then gave a series of addresses to the clergy upon the general subject of the effect of the war on religion in England. The conference then adjourned to the bishop's house for luncheon, after which there was general discussion of problems confronting various parishes, the diocese and the Church.

Neighborhood Conference in Springfield—Eight branches of the G. F. S. in Springfield and vicinity joined in a neighborhood conference at Christ Church on Sunday afternoon, March 23, more than 100 members and associates being present. The program consisted of branch reports, a suggestion box, and brief addresses by the diocesan President, Miss Sarah Hopkins, the head of the Central Candidates' Department, Miss Leila Van Schaack, the diocesan social service associate, Mrs. John M. McGann, and others by Mrs. Irving Bruce and Mrs. John H. Rosebaugh. The main subjects of the conference were candidates and rural work in Western Massachusetts. After the conference all attended a service in Christ Church, the preacher being the Rev. John M. McGann. An informal supper followed.

St. Louis Local Notes—When the war broke out, the Rev. Frederick Gowenlock was rector of St. Stephen's Church, Ferguson, a suburb of St. Louis. A native of England, Mr. Gowenlock immediately volunteered and sailed for England. He was commissioned a first lieutenant and assigned to the Irish unit, the nucleus of which was made up of the famous 16th Irish Brigade of the regular English army. Advanced to the rank of captain and the war being done, he is again in St. Louis and it is reported that he has been invited to take charge again of the church of which he was formerly rector in Ferguson. Captain Gowenlock escaped without injury in the Somme offensive and the battles of Ypres, Messines Ridge and Paschendaele, in which his command was decimated three times. Captain Gowenlock's wife, who was Miss Esther Bribach, of St. Louis, accompanied her husband across and was engaged as an inspector in a munitions plant near London. He was in active service continuously until shortly before the German offensive, when he was transferred to divisional headquarters. "Unfortunately, or fortunately," he says, "I was transferred and was not with the division in its last fight." Captain Gowenlock has been discharged from service.

Dr. George B. Mangold of St. Louis has been appointed director of the summer sessions of the Training School for Social Work in the University of California, which is inaugurating the department this year. His appointment to so important a summer post comes as a result of the high standard of the St. Louis school, which now has hundreds of graduates in many lines of philanthropic and welfare and research work throughout the country. Dr. Mangold is director of this school, which is conducted by the University of Missouri with a co-operating board of prominent St. Louisans, of which Dean Davis of Christ Church Cathedral is the chairman.

Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio, who has been the special preacher for one week at the St. Louis downtown noon-day lenten services, has been very helpful also in conducting classes in personal religion and along the lines of social service. Bishop Reese gave a series of evening sermons in connection with the lenten services of the Church of the Redeemer, the Rev. Edmund Duckworth, rector.

Herculeum's Problem—The Church's missionary work at Herculeum is just now the cause of considerable anxiety on the part of those who have it in hand. One of the largest smelters in the world is here. The community is usually swarming with the men and their families who work in the smelter. When the war was at its fiercest and lead was worth ten cents, the place was a hive of industry. Now lead is worth four cents and the demand is slight. In addition to this, labor troubles have operated to close the smelter, no one knows for how long. Many of the workmen are moving out. Those who remain, with their families, need the Church's help. Deaconess Sarah H. Sniffen, who more than anyone else is responsible for the splendid things which the Church has done at this point, holds the fort and believes that the smoke of the furnaces will rise again before many weeks. Bishop Johnson recently spent a part of a Sunday at the deaconess house with Deaconess Sniffen and confirmed a class at the evening service. The Rev. H. Nelson Tragitt, Jr., and Mrs. Tragitt, of Crystal City, are very helpful to the deaconess in the Herculeum work; Mr. Tragitt as pastor and Mrs. Tragitt as a helper in the Sunday School and at the organ. Bishop Johnson has recently confirmed a good class also in Crystal City, presented by the Rev. Mr. Tragitt.

LONG ISLAND

The "C. C. F." Drive—On Saturday, April 5, the Diocese of Long Island began a $500,000 drive in aid of the Church Charity Foundation with an official luncheon at the Hotel Bossert. Bishop Burgess was the guest of honor, and Mr. W. M. Baldwin, chairman of the campaign executive committee, presided. About 300 captains and team lieutenants were present and they are expected at each of the daily luncheons during the course of the campaign; the workers come from Brooklyn, distant Long Island towns and Manhattan. A committee of fifty has been appointed by the bishop to obtain this money, which will be in the nature of a fiftieth anniversary offering in celebration of the semi-centennial of the diocese. The organization of the campaign is being directed by Mrs. E. R. Currier and is composed mainly of parochial forces. Rectors are co-operating and have had remarkable success in selecting captains, who in turn have selected their teams, and through their united efforts every communicant in Long Island will be reached and invited to contribute. St. John's Hospital will be the chief recipient of the funds, and St. John's Orphanage, which was destroyed by fire, will come next. Mr. Charles Steele is chairman of the Committee of Fifty, and the names of the men and women comprising the committee make its success assured. The campaign ends on April 16 and the spiritual significance of the fiftieth anniversary and of Holy Week will not be overlooked at these daily functions whose only purpose is to aid the Church Charity Foundation.

Bishop Burgess—Bishop Frederick Burgess is the second bishop of the diocese of Long Island, which is now celebrating its semi-centennial. He was consecrated on January 15, 1902, in Grace Church, Brooklyn, after the death of Bishop Littlejohn, who became the first bishop in 1869.

Rev. Welwood Back from Germany—The Rev. J. C. Welwood, rector of St. John's American Church of Dresden, Saxony, is now in Brooklyn, and on Monday evening, March 31, lectured in St. Luke's Church, Clinton Avenue, the Rev. H. C. Swentzel, rector, on, "My Experiences in Germany During the War." On Friday evening, April 11, he will repeat this lecture at the Church of the Incarnation, the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington, rector, where he is well known.

Community Lenten Speakers—The speakers at Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, community lenten services, from March 31 to April 4 were Dean Robbins, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; the Rev. A. Eugene Bartlett, All Souls' Church; the Rev. John Howland Lathrop, Church of the Savior; the Rev. E. A. Shaw, Emmanuel Baptist Church, and the Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, Church of the Divine Paternity. TEXAS

Mission Held at Temple—Bishop Quinn held a mission at Christ Church, Temple, beginning Monday, March 17, and closing Sunday evening, March 23. An early celebration of the Holy Communion was held each day at 7:30 A. M., a children's service with special singing of hymns and catechising at 4 P. M., the regular mission service with sermon at 7:30 P. M. The parish has been greatly blessed and helped by the strong and inspiring sermons of the bishop. Much interest was manifested on the part of the people and a new spirit of consecration and zeal were evident.

A Mission Need—After a ride by auto of twelve miles from Burnet to Graphite Mine, the archdeacon held a service out of doors and preached to thirty-five people. This is a locality without a shepherd, and the archdeacon is trying to teach and inspire them with the truth of Christ's holy religion. We were the pioneers practically in this field, and we wish to continue to shepherd these sheep of Christ, if anyone will give a few hundred dollars to build a chapel for them. We have at least two or three hundred men, women and children, but no hall of any kind to receive them in. My first service was held in a garage, but I was soon crowded out of that.

CONNECTICUT

Christian Progress—The new Corresponding Secretary of the Society for the Increase of the Ministry is the Rev. Harry I. Bodley, rector-emeritus of St. Mark's Church, New Britain. He was chosen at a meeting held on April 1. Persons who await the Christianization of society through the Christian home, Christian education, and the formation of Christian habits, will take courage from the way things are going at Christ Church, Hartford, where another large class has been confirmed, fortunate in its majority of children. There were twenty-eight adults and forty-one children, and three confirmed Armenians, one Roman and a Greek Catholic were admitted to our communion. By raising the standard of preparation, the clergy have retained a good many candidates for a later confirmation. The class had some subsequent preparations for first Communions, which were made on the Sunday following. On the same day (mid-lent) the Bishop laid hands on fifteen men in one class at Oakville, near Waterbury. He announces that this parish has become self-supporting.

Waterbury's Gifts—St. John's Church and the parish of Trinity Church, Waterbury, Conn., have both been generously remembered by the late Henry H. Peck, a communicant of the first mentioned parish. To St. John's parish Mr. Peck left $30,000, and to my parish he made the gift of $15,000. Mr. Peck was a large and public spirited man and practically all of the charitable institutions of this city received benefactions through his will.

WESTERN COLORADO

Bishop Touret Back at Work—After several weeks of convalescence from his operation, spent at Colorado Springs, Bishop Touret resumed his active work on April 1, returning on that date to Grand Junction. Reports tell that he has come back into his accustomed vigor. The clergy and people of the district rejoice that their prayers for him have been answered.

Work at Gunnison Being Temporarily Covered—The work of the Church at Gunnison and its outlying missions is being temporarily taken care of as fully as possible by the Rev. W. M. Ford in connection with his own work in Montrose County. The recent death of the Rev. P. C. Bissell, who had charge of Gunnison, has left an important bit of work to be carried on. Gunnison is the seat of one of the state normal schools and the Church has the opening there for effective work. Mr. Bissell's memory is being held in the highest reverence. In his brief ministry here he set an enduring standard of work.

Lenten Services in Delta County—The Rev. H. D. Wilson has a schedule of Lenten services which is taking him weekly over a considerable part of Delta County. On Wednesday nights he begins at Paonia, on Thursdays he "makes" Hotchkiss, where he has been maintaining "parlor services," and Friday nights he is in St. Luke's Church, Delta. He has presented "the wealth of the Church" each week in identical addresses, believing that the West makes a ready response to expositions of such subjects as the Creed, the Prayer Book, the Bible, Church History, and the Sacraments.

The District and the New Hymnal—Several of our churches are considering the feasibility of acquiring the new hymnal. In some quarters people are proposing the possibility of getting copies in hundred lots as a district venture at the lower figure offered. Efforts are everywhere being made to set and maintain standards of church singing which will be artistic and democratic.

HUGH D. WILSON, JR.

BUFFALO

Bishop Burleson's Visit—A most welcome guest in any Buffalo parish is the Bishop of South Dakota, and we made the most we could of the two days he spent with us in March. On Saturday afternoon, March 1, he was the speaker at a district meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, in the Church of the Ascension. The same evening he was the guest of honor at a "party" of the intermediates, in the parish house of the Church of the Holy Communion, and we are sure his spontaneous merriment over the games and his evident enjoyment of the girls' simple hospitality were quite as valuable as the charming talk which he gave on his work among the Indians. On Sunday the bishop was the preacher and celebrant of the Holy Communion at the 11 o'clock service in St. John's, also addressing the Church School and the Junior Brotherhood. In the evening he preached in Grace Church, leaving for home by a late train.

Chaplain John C. Ward Returns—Grace Church was crowded to overflowing on Sunday, March 23, to welcome the hero-rector when he took his services for the first time. His people cannot conceivably be more attached to their rector than they have always been, but now they are flushed with pride over his gallantry and the recognition of it in the form of his two crosses and the words of high commendation spoken by General Pershing when they were awarded. The boys of the 108th will have plenty to say of their chaplain when they reach home this week. During the address by Bishop Brent at Convention Hall, in February, he mentioned with high commendation Mr. Ward's valor in the field and services to his men, and the applause from his 5000 hearers was simply tumultuous. All Buffalo rejoices over his safe return.

Lenten Services—Following the usual custom, noon-day services are held daily at St. Paul's, arranged by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Among the preachers this year are the following: Father Huntington, O.H.C., the Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, D.D., Rev. John Dows Hills, D.D., Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D.D., Rev. David L. Ferris, Rev. Samuel Tyler, D.D., Rev. William C. Compton, Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D.D. and the Rev. Francis S. White. The last named was at one time a choirboy in St. Paul's, and his old friends among the Woman's Auxiliary are arranging a meeting of all the Buffalo branches in the parish house on April 7, which he will address. The Saturday services are taken by Buffalo rectors. In a number of parishes the Sunday evening services provide a course of sermons, the preachers coming from other places.

Inter - Church Union—The classes arranged by the Inter-Church Union were a great success. The course was on "Reconstruction through World Friendship" and strongly missionary. What still stupifies some of us is to learn that the Episcopalians out-numbered all others combined at the evening classes in Trinity. Mrs. W. H. Farmer gave one lecture in Lockport and that too was in an Episcopal parish-house and the audience very largely made up of church people. It will do us good in more ways than one to co-operate heartily in a fine educational enterprise like this. All these little sympathetic touches make toward friendliness and understanding.

RHODE ISLAND

United Italian Services—An Italian Sunday School has been maintained for some time at St. James' Church, Providence, in whose parish boundaries are many Italians. By the invitation of the rector, the Rev. John A. Gardner, the Italian Protestant churches of the city united in a special service in St. James' parish house on Sunday afternoon, March 16. Despite the stormy weather seventy-two persons were present, from the Italian Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist Churches. The entire service was in the Italian language, and was shared by the Rev. Signor Pompana, of the Italian Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Signor Ambrosini, of the Italian Methodist Church, the Rev. Signor Di.Tiberio, of the Italian Baptist Church, and the Rev. John A. Gardner. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. C. Sartorio, of St. Francis of Assisi's Church, Boston. This is the first instance of such a service in the city, and its unifying value to the Italian work cannot be overestimated.

Memorial Tablet at All Saints', Providence—A memorial of Mr. Edward H. Shepherd, a vestryman and long-time superintendent of the Sunday School of All Saints' Church, Providence, is to be placed in the parish church by his family.

St. Augustine's Church, Providence—St. Augustine's Church, Providence, the Rev. P. G. Moore-Browne, rector, is undergoing extensive repairs on account of the serious fire a year ago. The congregation, which has been worshipping in St. John's parish house, are looking forward to occupying their old home on Easter day.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

ARIZONA

Epiphany Mission, Flagstaff — During the influenza epidemic, which proved unusually severe in the northern part of the state, the vicar, Rev. Luther Moore, like many of the clergy of the diocese, had an abundance of work to do. The county physician placed him in charge of the task of taking the first health census of the town, which was accomplished in one day with the assistance of a committee of twelve citizens. The most encouraging feature of the work in the mission during the past few months has been the steady growth of the Sunday School, in spite of the handicap of the enforced quarantine. The credit for this growth is due in no small part to Mrs. R. G. Stevenson, who took charge of the beginners' department the first of the year. Her familiarity with kindergarten methods and the attractiveness of her teaching have proved a drawing card for the entire school. Two young ladies of the normal school have been assisting her in her work. The vicar has also organized an adult Bible class and is giving a course of short lecture-lessons on the books of the Bible. These two new classes, the beginners' and the adults', have served to arouse new interest and enthusiasm in the other classes of the school. Much also has been done to increase the equipment for teaching. The boys of the manual training department of the normal school presented an excellent blackboard, mounted on an easel, and a sand tray for the small children. The generosity of a member of the mission provided many other useful things necessary for a good equipment. The great and crying need of the mission now is for a parish house. With such an addition to its plant it would be no hard task to organize a live men's club, to conduct effectively a boys' club, which has been already organized, and to form a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, as well as to provide a centre for much needed work to be conducted by the women of the mission.

St. Luke's Home Enlarged—On Thursday, March 13, St. Luke's Home in Phoenix celebrated the opening of its eleventh year with the dedication of five new bungalows, four of which were built especially for soldiers. Many friends of St. Luke's were present at the exercises, which were conducted by Bishop Atwood. Inspection of the new buildings by the visitors was then permitted. It being also the annual donation day, many gifts of money and needed articles were received. The first of the new bungalows to be built was the Dora Tripp Bartlett Memorial, to accommodate six patients and intended especially for soldiers suffering from tuberculosis. It was the gift of A. C. Bartlett of Chicago, and has been partly endowed by him. Mrs. John A. Roebing of New Jersey has also given $1100 in Liberty Bonds towards this endowment. Three more bungalows of the same type, and also for soldiers, have also been built, as well as one for women, thus increasing the capacity of the home for thirty more patients. With the building of future bungalows, for several patients in each, the old system of individual buildings will be discontinued. The most pressing need at present, however, is for an increase in the endowment fund. It now amounts to $47,000 and should be increased in the near future to $100,000. Over $10,000 are required annually for running expenses in addition to what little is paid by the patients. During the past year ninety-one patients have been treated, including seventeen soldiers. Only thirty-two patients have been able to pay the actual cost of their maintenance, which is about $16.06 per week; the average amount paid has been $9.98.

St. Luke's Parish Helps—About a thousand men are stationed at U. S. General Hospital No. 20, Ft. Whipple, Prescott. St. Luke's Parish is serving these men by establishing a club for the soldiers in the parish-house. A thousand dollars has been spent in furnishing the club-room, and a hostess, a church woman, gives her full time to the work. Over eight hundred men use the parish-house a week. The church women come frequently to entertain the men, and Saturday night is devoted to a social when the townspeople entertain the men with music and stories, and light refreshments are served. These nights the building is taxed to its capacity. One boy expressed the opinion of many when he said, "The church sure does think a lot of the soldiers when it is willing to give its parish-house for their entertainment." "Next to home, the parish-house is the best place I know," said another.

Emmanuel Class Established—An Emmanuel Study Class has been organized under the rector of St. Luke's. It began as a small group that met in the rector's study, but has grown to a membership of over fifty. So many requests have come for an afternoon class that it is proposed to hold in addition to the Wednesday night class an afternoon session on Wednesdays, so that a number of the "sick" of the town may be able to attend. The work so far has been successful in holding in the Church many who might otherwise have drifted outside for help along this line. J. R. JENKINS.

BRAZIL

Annual Council—As originally planned, this year's council of the Church's mission in Brazil was to have met on the Epiphany, so that we might celebrate with our beloved bishop the twentieth anniversary of his consecration. But,—“the best-laid plans” . . . First, adverse circumstances necessitated its postponement until February. But a far greater disappointment was the illness of Mrs. Kinsolving, making necessary the bishop's absence. Finally, nature joined in the conspiracy and by floods and washouts, prevented the clergy from Rio de Janeiro from attending all but the last session, and reducing the number of missionaries present to one presbyter, while too little rain in the south delayed for a day the arrival of the delegates from Porto Alegre.

This, however, does not tell the whole story. The council was duly opened on Saturday, February 8, in the Church of the Saviour, Rio Grande, the parish with which Bishop Kinsolving and his wife were most closely connected and where they worked together with great success for several years. This church, always beautiful without, has recently been rendered equally attractive within, having been artistically repainted through the efforts of the parish branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The council, in the absence of the bishop, was presided over by the Ven. A. V. Cabral, missionary archdeacon, and the oldest veteran among the native clergy. One of the first acts, after the celebration of the Holy Communion was the sending of a cablegram, expressing to Mrs. Kinsolving the sympathy of the council, and praying for her speedy recovery. Every one, in turn, was greatly pleased on receiving the bishop's greetings, holding out the hope of his early return to the field.

Reports from the various parishes revealed the fact that the past year was one of mixed gains and losses. Confirmations were necessarily few, due to the fact that during three-fourths of the year the bishop's visitations had to be suspended, because he was in charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Rio, during the furlough of the rector. The serious lack of workers had been further accentuated by the furloughs of Mr. Thomas and Mr. Sergel.

The Epidemic in the Mission—All parishes had suffered from the epidemic of influenza, not a few members having succumbed, among them our most prominent layman, Dr. Francisco de Castro, Jr. He, together with his wife, was the founder and main supporter of the Assistencia de Santa Theresa, a combined church, school, and hospital which is doing a splendid and greatly needed work. Dr. Castro literally gave his life while ministering to his stricken neighbors. Here, as elsewhere, the epidemic was the occasion for innumerable acts of self-sacrifice and loving service on the part of both ministers and laity.

In spite of these difficulties however steady growth and a determination to maintain all gains was reported from almost every parish. Our only parish that can boast of financial independence—that at Santa Maria—is bravely “carrying on” in spite of severe losses in numbers.

The Diocesan School for Boys—The diocesan school for boys at Porto Alegre reports the best year yet, from every point of view. Generous gifts of the New York Woman's Auxiliary and other friends in the mother Church made possible the purchase of an adjacent field, which will be used for athletic purposes and as an outlet for future expansion. A greatly needed addition was also made to the residence of the principal. A suitable church building is another urgent necessity, and the council accepted the writer's suggestion that the necessary funds be raised by means of thank-offerings throughout the mission, the proposed chapel to be a monument to mark the twenty years' faithful work of our chief pastor. Offerings and pledges have already been received amounting to one-fourth of the sum needed. Doubtless there are, in the mother Church likewise, many friends of the bishop and of the mission who would like to have a share in this thank offering. (Any such offerings should be sent as “specials” to Mr. Thomas, through the Board of Missions.)

SOUTH DAKOTA

Meeting of the Northern Deanery.—The first formal meeting of the northern deanery was held in Watertown on Friday, March 14. The meetings were held in Trinity Church rectory. Both Bishop Burleson and Bishop Remington were present. The meeting opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church at which the bishop of the district preached on the ministry. This service was followed by the conference at which Dean Bartlett of St. Mark's Church, Aberdeen, who is the rural dean of this deanery, presided. The Rev. W. H. Talmage of Redfield was elected secretary. Reports from each one of the clergymen in the deanery were called for and the problems of the field and its needs were carefully considered. The Rev. C. E. Wood reported the largest field. He ranges over a territory of about 4,000 square miles, touching thirteen points. As he has no automobile it is a pretty difficult situation.

At the afternoon session the general subjects were "Religious Education," and "Church Extension." The Rev. E. W. Pigion of Huron, the chairman of the district Board of Religious Education spoke on "The causes and remedy of the loss of Sunday School pupils." The Rev. C. E. Wood, of Milbank, spoke on "The small Sunday School," the Rev. Dr. Edward Ashley, archdeacon of the Niobrara Deanery, spoke on "The Niobrara Sunday School Lessons." Miss Edith Willis spoke on "Service in a Small Community" and the Rev. Paul Roberts, of Brookings, spoke on "The Church and College."

At 4:30 a service was held in the church at which Bishop Remington gave an address. In the evening the delegates were entertained at supper by the members of the parish of Trinity Church to which about forty men sat down. The day was full of help to the men who in this great state have so few opportunities of meeting one another for conference and advice.

St. Paul's Church, Brookings.—On Sunday evening, March 16, the church was crowded to hear a war address by the Rev. W. R. Campbell, who has just returned after twenty-one months of service in France. On Monday afternoon, Mrs. Campbell spoke to the ladies of St. Paul's Guild in the rectory. Mrs. Campbell has been for the past four years in war service in England and France.

KENTUCKY

Church Unity Again.—The largest crowds in the history of Christ Church Cathedral's existence attended the first two conferences on Christian Unity Sunday afternoon, March 23 and March 30, in Louisville. The 240,000 Baptists in Kentucky were represented at the opening conference by Dr. William Warren Landrum, a Louisville minister of that sect. On the following Sunday, Dr. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, pastor of the largest Disciples of Christ Church in the United States, told what his denomination had to offer towards a united Christendom. Because of the great interest among the various denominations the cathedral chapter is planning to publish in book form, the entire six addresses as made by representatives of the Baptist, Disciples of Christ, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches. Although invited for April 27, it has been impossible to get a Roman Catholic clergyman to speak on that date and the conferences have been advanced a week, Bishop C. E. Woodcock speaking on that Sunday for the Church.

NORTH CAROLINA

Lowering Divorce Rate.—According to the Bureau of Census, this state has next to the lowest divorce rate in the Union, being only surpassed in this by South Carolina, where an act of the legislature is necessary for a divorce. The rate here being thirteen per 100,000 of population. Churchmen of the state take a just pride in this, for they feel that Bishop Cheshire had much to do with this good showing. Some years ago the bishop conceived the idea of asking the religious denominations of the state to petition the legislature to allow a divorce upon the one ground mentioned in the gospels, and secured from the conventions of these bodies, before which he appeared in advocacy of the plan, their unanimous endorsement. The legislature passed the law requested by the churches, and it has proven a step forward in civic righteousness.

A Popular Preacher.—The Rev. Henry O. Nash, of Greensboro, is the special preacher at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, this Lent, and by his eloquent and instructive preaching is drawing large crowds. Mr. Nash was an officer in the British navy before going into the ministry, and is one of the best prepared men in the diocese. He has been having great success as a missionary, in one case having to move out of the church into the public auditorium because of the size of the congregations.

Amendment Regarding Election of Bishops.—One of the most interesting questions to come up before the diocesan convention this May is the proposed change in the canon concerning the election of bishops. The present canon provides that the clergy nominate, and the lay delegates vote on their nominee, having power simply to accept or reject. At the convention last year an amendment was offered providing for election by concurrent vote of the two orders, and after animated discussion was laid on the table. In order to get the matter before the people of the diocese prior to the convention this year, some articles on the question have appeared in the diocesan magazine, the Diocese of Chicago. In the March number, the Rev. E. J. Randall, writes favoring the change in the canon. In the April issue which has just appeared, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins argues from the other side. He makes the point that the priest stands in a peculiar relation with his bishop, inasmuch as he takes a vow to obey him and the layman does not, and that therefore the priest should have more voice in the matter of who the bishop should be than the layman. He says further, in answer to the point that there are many dioceses at present which allow the lay order equal rights in this matter, that this method of election is antiquated, and that the canons of the Diocese of Chicago, made only forty years ago, afford an improved method of election. It will be interesting to see what the diocesan convention does with this matter.

Talks on Unity at Grace Church, Oak Park.—The Rev. F. R. Godolphin, rector of Grace Church, Oak Park, is inviting the local ministers of Oak Park to participate in his services on Wednesday evenings during Lent. On successive weeks the minister of the Congregational, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, and the Baptist churches spoke of the contributions which their own churches could make toward church unity.

New Organist at St. Paul's Church.—Mr. Harold B. Simonds has come to St. Paul's Church, Kenwood, as organist, to take the place of Mr. John Allen Richardson, who died some time ago. Mr. Simonds was the music-master at Pomfret School, in Connecticut, for seven years, and after that was at Trinity Church, Newport, Rhode Island.

Empty Attic Sale for St. Mary's Mission House.—A rummage sale for the benefit of St. Mary's mission house will be held down town some time in April. Contributions of rummage of all descriptions are already coming in to the mission house at 850 Washington Boulevard, and it is hoped that the sale this year will be even more of a success than the one which was held in January a year ago.

BALTIMORE

Social Service Classes.—A course of training in social service is being given under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly Society, extending through the month of May. The instructors are the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries on "Women in Social Service," Dr. William Burdick on "Recreation" and "Reconstruction," Miss Margaretta Voorhees on "The Psychology of Play," and Mrs. Frank LeMoyné on "Hygiene." The object of the course is to qualify a girl to hold any kind of social service position, and it is expected to contribute to the growth of social work in Baltimore.

Bishop Fiske Visits Baltimore.—Bishop Fiske of Central New York has recently spent a week in Baltimore, preaching at the noon-day services at Old St. Paul's, and on Sunday at St. Michael and All Angel's, where he was warmly welcomed by his former parishioners, and also at Christ Church. The large attendance at all these services evidenced the high appreciation in which Bishop Fiske is held as a preacher in Baltimore.

NEWARK

Seven Deacons Advanced Within Two Months.—The seven deacons commended on February 3 by seven members of the standing committee of the diocese to the bishop for ordination to the priesthood have been thus advanced. They are the Rev. Louis W. Pitt for Christ Church, Newark; the Rev. Rowland K. Gimson for St. Matthew's Church, Newark, and for city mission work; the Rev. Raymond L. Scofield for Belleville; the Rev. Charles J. Child for Phillipsburg; the Rev. Hugh W. Dickinson for Wortendyke and Glen Rock; the Rev. Edwin S. Ford for Hamburg and Vernon; and the Rev. Peter Ritte Deckenbach for Westwood and Norwood.

Cleveland Services Addressed by Bishop Stearly.—During the last week in March the daily services in the opera house in Cleveland were addressed by Bishop Coadjutor Wilson R. Stearly. A large attendance was recorded each day.

Five Clergymen of Diocese Still Overseas.—Clergymen of the diocese who are still serving overseas as regular United States Army chaplains are the Rev. S. Glover Dunseath of Jersey City, the Rev. Edgar W. Anderson of Jersey City, the Rev. J. Gregory Mabry of Newark, the Rev. Burnham H. Dell formerly of Morristown, and the Rev. Charles W. Popham of Belleville.

Every Member Canvass.—Members of St. Luke's Church, Montclair, are rejoicing over the result achieved through the Every Member Canvass conducted March 30 as a preliminary step toward the inauguration of the free pew system, which will take place the first Sunday in May. Seventy-five canvassers brought in pledges which totaled more than $31,000. In 1918 there was received from pew rent and envelopes for church support $17,700. The pledges for this purpose now aggregate $25,500. For foreign and domestic missions there has been pledged over $5,500 as against $2,260 from last year's envelopes, while the number of envelope subscribers has increased from 291 to 493, including thirty-three new names not previously on the church list. A statement of the result submitted by the finance committee, composed of the Messrs. Walter Kidde, H. St. John Webb, L. O. Ivey and George I. Wichman, treasurer, was read at the morning service on Passion Sunday by the rector, the Rev. Luke M. White. Following this the congregation sang the Doxology.

Rector's Resignation Accepted.—The vestry of St. Paul's Church, Jersey City, has accepted the resignation of the Rev. S. Glover Dunseath as rector. Mr. Dunseath is at present attached as a chaplain to the American Headquarters in Paris, and has tendered his resignation because of the uncertainty of his length of service overseas. During the winter the parish has been in charge of the Rev. Ralph B. Pomeroy of the General Theological Seminary.

Holy Week Services.—During Holy Week all the regular services will be held at the cathedral, and in addition each day at five o'clock there will be a special service with preachers as follows: Monday, Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin; Tuesday, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson; Wednesday, Dr. Charles L. Goodell; Thursday, Dr. H. E. Cobb, and Good Friday, Dr. Merrill. At St. Luke's Church, Convent Avenue; the Church of the Incarnation, St. George's, the Church of the Ascension, St. Michael's, St. Bartholomew's, St. Andrew's, St. Mary the Virgin's, and St. Thomas's the clergy of the parish are taking all the services. Dr. Grant will conduct the Three Hour Service at the Church of the Ascension; Dr. Delany, at St. Mary the Virgin's; Dr. Van de Water at St. Andrew's. At Holy Trinity, Harlem, Dr. Nichols will conduct all the Holy Week services; on Good Friday there is Morning Prayer at 9:30, Three Hour service at noon, children's service at 4:30 and Evening Prayer at 8. At St. Stephen's, Professor Hall of the General Seminary will conduct the Three Hour Service. At St. Mark's in the Bowwerie services are at 8 p. m. on Maundy Thursday and Easter Even and at 10:30 a. m. on Good Friday, all conducted by Dr. Guthrie. At the Chapel of the Intercession Dr. Gates will conduct the Three Hour Service, and at St. Thomas's Church, Dr. Stires. At Grace Church on Palm Sunday the services will begin with the Holy Communion at eight. Other services will be Morning Prayer with sermon by the rector at eleven, Confirmation at 4, and later Evensong at eight, with sermon by the editor of THE CHURCHMAN. Each morning next week, the Holy Communion will be administered in the chantry at eight. A preparation service for the Easter Communion will be held in the chantry on Thursday evening at eight. On Good Friday Morning Prayer will be at eleven, with sermon by the rector. At the noon-day services (twelve-thirty) the rector will give a series of addresses on "The Figures in Our Lord's Passion." Following the noon-day service on Good Friday, there will be half-hourly services from one to three o'clock.

At Trinity Church the noon-day preacher during Holy Week will be Archdeacon Greig of England; the archdeacon will also conduct the Three Hour Service on Good Friday. At the Church of the Transfiguration, Father Officer, O. H. C. will preach at noon daily and at the Three Hour Service. At Trinity Chapel, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton will conduct the Three Hour Service. At St. Luke's Chapel, the Rev. E. H. Schlueter will conduct the Three Hour Service, and on Maundy Thursday night Archdeacon Greig will conduct the service of preparation for the Easter Communion. At Trinity Church on Wednesday night at eight o'clock there will be a united parish service for the congregations of the chapels and the mother church.

At Calvary Church Stainer's Crucifixion will be sung on Palm Sunday evening and Moore's Darkest Hour on Good Friday night. Dr. Sedgwick will preach at the Three Hour Service as well as at the daily noon-day services during Holy Week. At St. James' Dr. Crowder will preach at Morning Prayer on Good Friday, Dr. Van Allen will conduct the Three Hour Service, and Archdeacon Greig will conduct a mission service in the evening. At the Church of the Holy Communion Dr. Mottet will preach at the daily noon-day services and at the Three Hour Service on Good Friday. There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion daily at noon as well as at seven-thirty a.m. and a daily children's service at four throughout Holy Week.

Record Confirmation.—Last Sunday one of the largest confirmation classes in the history of the parish was presented at St. James' Church. There were sixty-five altogether, twenty-five of these adults. Among them were lawyers, physicians, business men, fathers of families. The service was a most inspiring one, and served to emphasize the fact that St. James' Parish is growing in usefulness and in size by leaps and bounds.

G. F. S. Notes.—The annual evening of devotion for G. F. S. was held in the Church of the Transfiguration on March 20 and conducted by the Father Huntington, O.H.C. Many associates and members were present. Father Huntington took as the subjects for his three addresses, the every day expressions: "Change cars, all change; Watch your step; step lively; Hold fast."

The branch of the G. F. S. in St. George's Church, the largest branch in this country, celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary lately in a most joyful manner. 300 associates and members gathered for the supper, four of them charter associates, four charter members and six mothers whose daughters are now members of the branch. Diocesan officers and the secretary of the G. F. S. A. were guests. There were addresses of welcome from the rector, and Miss Hadley, speeches by Deaconess Young, Mrs. Pike and Miss Uhl, telling of the early days of the branch, and a presentation of a gold watch and $35 in money to Miss Elizabeth Pretete who has been continually connected with the branch since its foundation.

Appeal for Endowment Fund.—St. Ann's Church, Morrisania, founded in 1841 by Gouverneur Morris in memory of his mother, is issuing an appeal for an endowment fund. A booklet containing an appeal to all descendants of Lewis Morris, the illustrious signer of the Declaration of Independence, has been issued by the vestry. Many of the members of this family are buried in the vaults in the churchyard. The endowment fund of the parish is inadequate, and it is hoped that it may be increased by $200,000 through this appeal. The Rev. H. G. Willis, the rector, gives an encouraging account of the condition of the parish saying that last Easter the largest number of Communion was made that the history of the parish records. There are ninety-six stars on the parish service flag.

At the Church of the Holy Apostles.—At the third meeting of the Church Council of the Church of the Holy Apostles, ways and means were discussed and action decided upon for the lifting of the church's mortgage of $12,000. It is the hope of the council to free the church from all indebtedness by Easter, 1920.

On Wednesday, March 26, a class of thirty was confirmed, many of them adults. Four were received from the Roman Church. This was the largest class presented during the last five years.

On the Sunday after Easter, April 27, the evening service will take the form of a memorial service for Deaconess Knight, whose death in France was announced a short time ago. Deaconess Knight died in the service of her Master and her country. She was for a number of years an ardent and faithful worker at the Church of the Holy Apostles, prior to her work in the Diocese of Eastern Oregon.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Chief of Police Addresses Ministerial Association—The Ministerial Association of Cortland, (Interdenominational) meeting in Grace Church, listened to a discussion of law enforcement and public morals. Chief of Police Bowker, who has dealt with matters of law and order in Cortland for the past twenty-five years expressed some opinions as to "dry" Cortland. He declared that while the number of arrests for public intoxication was much lower, a great deal of liquor is being brought into the city and sold. He also said that liquors were now stored in the cellars of many homes instead of in those of a few hotels and saloons. He believes that not until the private stores of whisky, beer and wine are exhausted, will he be able to arrive at a definite conclusion on the operation of the prohibition law. It was urged that there should be closer co-operation between the officers of the law and those who are disposed to confine their public activity to church going.

A Logical Appointment—Senator Clayton R. Luck, of Cortland, who recently addressed the Men's Club of Grace Church in that city on the serious discontent that is following the world war and threatening the foundation of the government has been named as chairman of a legislative committee to investigate complaints of Bolshevik propaganda in New York State.

Men's Club of Zion Church, Rome, Active—The Ignotus Club of Zion Church, Rome, will raise a fund of $6,000 for the purpose of remodeling the basement of Clarke Memorial Hall so as to provide bowling alleys and a club room. It is proposed to put in billiard tables and make the place attractive for the young men of the church to meet under proper influences.

Substantial Legacy to Rural Parish—By the will of Harrison L. Beatty, late chairman of the Draft Board, of Chenango County, who died suddenly in a New York City hospital following a surgical operation, $15,000 is bequeathed to the People's Trust Company of Binghamton, the interest and income to be paid to the rector, wardens and vestry of St. Peter's Church, Bainbridge, to be used, first, for the care and upkeep of Bush Cemetery, and the surplus to be used according to their discretion.

Bishop Olmsted Preaches on Fasting—At Calvary Church, Utica, March 27, the bishop of the diocese addressed a large congregation on the subject of fasting. The bishop said in part, "My text, St. Matt. vi:16; 'When ye fast be not as the hypocrites,' is taken from the Sermon on the Mount, which is regarded by all Christians as plain and simple and binding on the conscience. The first eighteen verses of this chapter are taken up with certain things that we are to do for the correction of certain errors, and instructions as to the way of correction. Three things are mentioned, namely, almsgiving, prayer and fasting.

English Church News

A "House of Women"—There were many who feared that Dr. Yeatman-Biggs was too old to undertake the founding of the new Diocese of Coventry, but even they must admit that in actual fact he is exhibiting all the enterprise of a youthful pioneer. So far from being ossified by the long traditions of the see of Worcester, he seems to be positively glad to be rid of them, and to launch out into new ventures, only possible, as he himself says, "in a new center unfettered by vested interests." At his diocesan convention in November last it was resolved, as I noted at the time, to found a House of Women in addition to the House of Laymen. The women have now been elected, and the first meeting is fixed for after Easter. The bishop retains the chairmanship, but the women will elect a vice-chairwoman (so the bishop describes this functionary, settling by a stroke of the pen the vexed question of title), and ultimately also they will elect a standing committee. Meantime the bishop is nominating the members of the committee, and as he retains permanently the right of nominating the secretary, he announces that his daughter has accepted the post. He suggests that the following subjects are likely to be discussed by the house (a) The place of women in the ministerial work of the Church, (b) the conditions of home-life and child-life, (c) rebuilding fallen women and preventing fall, (d) help in the religious development of young women, (e) fellowship in social life, including recreation.

"Community Houses" for Recreation—In Coventry, as in all great cities, the drink question has reached an acute stage. The Government has slightly relaxed the wartime restrictions, but its future policy is as yet undetermined. Dr. Yeatman-Biggs, however, knows his mind, and has been speaking it quite freely at a meeting of the C. E. T. S. The Temperance Society must strike out, risking whirlpools, or drown. It must cease condemning the man who will not take their pledge, and must enlist the moderate man "who does not see the devil in drink, but sees him in the person who drinks without control"—a phrase which meets with the approval of the Church Times. The bishop is not in favor of entire prohibition: his American visit has convinced him of the danger of surreptitious drinking where there is prohibition, and he does not believe that public opinion in this country is ripe for prohibition. What he wants is "community houses" to replace public houses (saloons) which shall be places of real recreation to be used by all.

"The three duties, almsgiving, prayer and fasting are all treated in the same way, and if one was meant figuratively, all three must have been. Those of us who believe that almsgiving means the giving of actual cash, must also conclude that when Christ says 'fasting,' He means 'fasting.'

The Future of the Catholic Party—From time to time the question arises as to the future of that section of our Church which describes itself as Catholic. A well-known Birmingham priest, Rev. Francis Underhill, discusses the point in connection with the new prospects opened up by the recent action of the Representative Council. He cannot make up his mind as to whether the Enabling Act, if it is ever passed, will or not, but evidently he fears the latter. What are they to do? He dismisses secession from the Church of England as an impossible course. Simple inactivity is also unthinkable at a time when so many other people are active. Then should Catholics fight strenuously against the new scheme? But they are by no means united in their opposition to it, and so far, no denial of any really fundamental catholic doctrine is involved. The only thing Catholics can do is to stand in with the movement, but in a watchful spirit, to see that none of their principles are compromised; so at least Mr. Underhill says.

Their future as a party is also affected by the public announcement of the retirement of Lord Halifax from the presidency of the English Church Union. He still holds the presidency till his successor is chosen, but that cannot long be delayed. Now it is notorious that Lord Halifax, though he had given his life to the Catholic cause, has been a man of the widest sympathies, whom everybody has respected. Should his successor be a man of equally strong convictions, but of lesser tact, he might easily provoke a crisis. For instance, the question of the practise of Benediction has come uncomfortably forward. Down in Cornwall, the Bishop of Truro (Dr. Burrows) has appointed a commission of enquiry into the use of Benediction at Cury church. It is unpleasant reading: there is something repulsive in the handling of such matters by a barrister. The commission decided that a case had been made out for proceeding against the offending priest under the Church Discipline Act.

We have been spared the possibility of similar unpleasantness in Birmingham. The bishop (Dr. Russel Wakefield) had prohibited Benediction, and the six priests affected sent him a joint letter of submission to his ruling. Of course, in doing so, they are careful to advocate the devotion as a very helpful one, and to predict that the bishops will soon have to allow and regulate it. If the Catholic party as a whole were equally obedient to their bishops, when the latter are acting within their canonical rights, there would be no doubt as to its future influence.

"It is sometimes argued that churchmen do all their abstinence in Lent. If they do so it is a reversal of the whole object and intent of this season. The purpose is that we may so temper our desires and indulgencies that in time we may outgrow our habits of self indulgence."

Similar Developments

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The same number of the church papers which printed Proposals for An Approach Toward Unity also published an account of the Bishop of London's plan for an approach toward unity with the Methodists, and more particularly the Wesleyans. The two plans have a good deal in common. It is interesting, however, that so far as I am aware none of the persons who were engaged in one of them has had communications on the subject with any of those who took part in the other or knew anything about the other. The significance of this circumstance is that in the Church of England and in the Episcopal Church in this country similar methods have occurred at about the same time to those who were engaged in the respective Churches in promoting the work of what was called in the Lambeth Conference of 1888, Home Reunion. Although the developments of the same principles in the same countries have not been identical they proceed largely upon the same ground.

A Case of Tyranny

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

My attention has been called to the notice in your paper regarding the prosecution of the Rev. Dr. Foster for his alleged neglect of a local municipal "ordinance." Unless, you, Sir, are familiar with the moral conditions obtaining in the smaller towns and villages of California, you can have no conception of the petty tyranny practised against Churches and ministers of religion there. The great Church of Rome, to her honor be it said, has withstood the attempt to substitute for the lawful moral authority of the Body of Christ, the truly appalling pagan tyranny of the State. You people have shared with the men of my country in the war against just such a pagan thing, "the Germany over all" doctrine as that against which Dr. Foster protests.

Since your report of the case is a very garbled one, I venture to ask that in justice to my friend and brother priest you place the facts before your readers.

Dr. Foster is a godly man and most brilliant clergyman of Irish birth and deserves a wider and better recognition by the Church for his ability and saintly character. May I ask, Sir, that you will do this act of justice.

Stowe's Clerical Directory

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It is my intention to begin, in the near future, the compilation of the 1920 edition of Stowe's Clerical Directory of the American Church, to be delivered in February, 1920. Before really starting the work, however, I wish to get some consensus of opinion from the bishops, clergy and laity of the Church, regarding the merits and usefulness of this directory; and also some suggestions as to improvements that may be made in the next edition.

Everyone knows the place that Who's Who in America takes among books of reference, in schools and public libraries, as well as its use by newspaper men, authors and the subscriber himself.

I am asking for suggestions as to whether the next edition should contain anything more than the list of bishops and the biographical sketches of bishops and clergy. In the last edition there was something like ninety pages given up to diocesan and parochial statistics. Have these statistics proved of sufficient value to be continued in the next edition?

The Bishop of Mexico

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Your editorial entitled, "What is the matter with Mexico," in the issue of March 1, is so unfair, and in some points so untrue, that you have done great injustice to men who have had to face heart-breaking difficulties and sometimes personal danger. No "gifts of leadership," however pre-eminent, could have succeeded under the conditions which the missionaries here have had to face.

For more than eight years this country has been, and in large sections still is, ravaged by bandits and torn by civil strife. The English speaking work of the Church almost everywhere has been killed by the forced emigration of Americans and others, not only on account of dangers here, but also by the imperative and repeated orders of the American government. The native work has been broken up, its clergy forced to take refuge in the large cities, some of its churches looted and ruined, while from some stations we have not now heard for several years what may have taken place there. The native school for boys established by the bishop in Guadalajara was robbed by gangs of bandits four or five times in two years, until the buildings had to be temporarily abandoned.

It is true that "one after another of the American missionaries have resigned," but it is also true that in most instances they did so after having been driven out of the country, and forbidden to return by the Government of the United States. It is true that "many of them have undertaken missionary work in other districts," but it is also true that it was impossible for them to return to work in Mexico. Even at the present writing the United States government refuses to give a passport to Bishop Aves' daughter to enable her to go to Guadalajara to keep house for her father, as she has wished to do since her mother's death last August.

Your statement that "it is something like two years," since Bishop Aves "crossed the Texan border into Mexico," is pitifully unjust as well as untrue. There has not been a year in which the bishop has not been in his district for at least part of the time. Twice within the last five years he has had to "refugee" under imperative orders from the American government. And he with his brave wife have returned as soon as might be, even under personal danger in so doing.

Since May 1, 1917, it has been unlawful, under the new constitution, for any one not Mexican born to hold a public service or have charge of any congregation. Because he was thus debarred from exercising his ministry in the native work, was one reason why Archdeacon Mellen recently resigned his position. In the face of the law the services at Christ Church, Mexico City, have been continued; but it is of course impossible under such conditions, to ask any clergyman to come and undertake work in Mexico. The bishop has been officially inhibited from holding services by the authorities of the state of Jalisco.

Also by the new constitution all church property, including churches and school buildings, has been "nationalized" and is liable to confiscation at any time.

Yet in spite of all difficulties, the Hooker School has continued its splendid work, except for an interval of less than a year, during which time the school property was, at intervals, between the lines of the contending parties. Also the native hospital at Nopala, built by specials secured by the bishop, was opened three years ago, and has since been doing a blessed work. But its appropriation for running expenses, medicines, etc., is but fifty dollars a month, and were it not for the aid of specials it could not continue. For a year the bishop's son was there as resident physician, but since he went to France with the forces the institution has had only a nurse to do a doctor's work as well as her own. There has never been an appropriation to pay a resident physician.

In brief, the chief "matter with Mexico" is not the things your editorial suggests, but conditions that would daunt and defeat (to quote your own words) "men with gifts of leadership, such as have been sent into the Orient."

ALLAN L. BURLESON.

Mexico City, Mexico.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

A clipping with the caption, "What Is the Matter with Mexico?" taken from THE CHURCHMAN of March 1st has just reached me.

With what you have to say in criticism of the Church's choice of men for work in Mexico I am not concerned. But, Mr. Editor, you have said a few things by direct assertion and by implication that reflect very seriously on the personal character of the Bishop of Mexico, and which, for the sake of truth and justice, and for the interests of the Church's work in Mexico, I must ask you to help me correct.

Certainly and beyond all doubt the mere assertion on the authority of THE CHURCHMAN that "It is something like two years since he [the Bishop of Mexico] has crossed the Texan border into Mexico, and during that time Archdeacon Mellen has kept the work of the mission from complete extinction," is enough to destroy any and all confidence your readers may have had either in the Bishop of Mexico or his work. And if those statements were true, Mr. Editor, as you evidently supposed them to be, they certainly should destroy such misplaced confidence.

But, Mr. Editor, a matter of so great importance to the Church and of such vital personal concern to the Bishop of Mexico should have required of you certainly some very careful inquiry as to its truth before being sent forth with the stamp of your approval. It would have been the matter of a moment, I presume, for you to have telephoned to Bishop Lloyd or to Dr. Gray at the Church Missions House and inquired whether or not it were true that "it is something like two years since the Bishop to Mexico has crossed the Texan border into Mexico, etc."

But let us suppose, Mr. Editor, that instead of discovering that it was utterly false, you had found it to be quite true that the Bishop to Mexico had not crossed the Texan border into Mexico within two years. In that event, Mr. Editor, would it not have been quite in agreement with the sense of duty and responsibility the editor of a religious publication must feel incumbent on him to make some inquiry as to the possible reasons for so apparent a neglect of duty before proceeding to send it forth with his own interpretation or implication? But you did not do that, Mr. Editor. In fact there are several important things the rule of Christian procedure given by our Blessed Lord demands of us before we are allowed to "tell it unto the Church"; and you did none of them. Sheer justice demands that one who is accused shall be given opportunity to be heard.

You must have had some supposedly good authority for the accusations you have made, and your informant must have been animated with some motive for reporting such astounding things. Would the delay of a few days or weeks required by the sending of a letter to the Bishop of Mexico and receiving a reply be of such great moment that it should stand in the way of the ends of truth and fairness in a matter where the interests of the Church and the sacredness of a personal character were at stake?

But you did not do that, Mr. Editor. Instead you played the part of judge, jury and executioner, without even asking the accused if he had anything to say for himself. I am sorry for this; for if you had written to me or to Archdeacon Mellen or the Rev. Allen L. Burleson as to the truth of the accusing assertions you have made, the traditionally fair pages of THE CHURCHMAN would, certainly, never have been sullied by this unnecessary scandal. You would have received not only a full accounting for the bishop's past two years in Mexico and of the very helpful work done by Archdeacon Mellen during a most trying time, but a great deal more, if asked for, that might help to a truthful and intelligent answer to your question, "What Is the Matter with Mexico?" You would have learned something of the peculiar conditions created by revolution and prohibitory legislation that have crippled, hampered and in large part destroyed our work in Mexico. You would have learned that the work for which the present bishop was elected and sent into Mexico, viz: "to minister to the religious needs of Americans and other English speaking residents in Mexico," and extended generally to the larger cities of the Republic from the northern border to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec has practically disappeared from the map, not from lack of episcopal care, but because the English speaking people have left the country; and that the resignations from this field have not been from choice but of necessity.

You would have learned that our congregations of the native field which have been now and again within the sphere of revolution, wreckage, and brigandage, and fully one third of which are now in territory held by the government's enemies, have not been without their regular episcopal visitations because the bishop has failed in duty, but because it has been a physical impossibility to reach them. You would have learned that in recognition of the fact that he could not for the time being do the

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

You will want additional copies of the big Easter Number of The Churchman. Place your orders in advance that you may not be disappointed.

I have bought and read with great care and interest and approval Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. I can unhesitatingly recommend the book as a most helpful one for giving both teachers and students a summary of the entire contents of the Bible.

Dr. Batten's Paddock Lectures

GOOD AND EVIL. A STUDY IN BIBLICAL THEOLOGY. By Loring W. Batten, Ph.D., S.T.D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and London. 1918. $1.25.

When Professor Batten decided to write on the problems of Good and Evil in biblical literature instead of on the Wisdom Literature of the Old Testament he made no mistake, for while the latter has been fairly well worked over the former lacked a systematic treatment. Dr. Batten has given us in this series of Paddock Lectures a very interesting treatment and discussion of most of the biblical material on his subject. As he himself says, there are no new discoveries or novel interpretations set forth in this book, but his originality consists in the gathering of the material.

The author begins with a discussion of the source of Good and Evil. His findings here are familiar to all students of the Old Testament. All that is evil as well as all that is good comes from God, who sends them both, but with fine discrimination. This conclusion is systematically arrived at and well illustrated. Professor Batten wants to feel himself always on firm ground, and it may be suspected that this is his reason for not suggesting that such a theory of the origin of evil could have arisen only after the idea of monotheism was fairly well established, and therefore comparatively late in Old Testament times, and that previous to that the Hebrews like other Sexites, would be expected to have ascribed the origin to demons.

He then passes to a study of the law or principle by which God's judgments were governed, and again arrives at the well-known Old Testament conclusion that there is a persistent connection between wrongdoing and calamity, the former being the cause of the latter, and the latter always following the former. The Hebrews believed that sin invariably resulted in some manifestation of evil. This the author believes to be capable of throwing interesting light upon the imprecations of the Old Testament. For whenever suffering did not follow sin, according to the supposed inflexible law of God in this matter, the persecuted felt himself justified in praying that fire from heaven might fall on the guilty, in other words, that God would bestir Himself and punish the evil. The outraged suppliant thus merely asks that the ancient law of guilt and punishment be put into execution against his oppressors.

The third lecture deals with the way in which this principle of guilt and punishment was put to the test, and arrives again at the well-known conclusion, namely, that at a slightly later period in the development of Old Testament thought there was no longer any unanimity of opinion on this subject. Some are found to hold to the old opinion, already expressed, but others find it altogether unsatisfactory, without offering any further solution. Still others look forward for further light. In this they were not to be disappointed, for as Professor Batten shows in the fourth lecture there came a time in Hebrew thought when it was seen that though evil in the world can never be accounted for apart from God, it always has a beneficent purpose. And though the way in which God acts may not be understood, there is nevertheless abundant foundation for faith in God's justice. This the author calls the "rift between pain and sin."

Turned aside from this straight course of development, the solution of the problem retarded or deflected but not given up, is found by Dr. Batten in the tendency towards dualism. Influenced by Persian thought the Hebrews of this later period came to shift the burden from a good God to an evil god. The idea of a malicious demon, of great powers, had been developed, and upon his shoulders was laid the burden of the problem. But the result is only the other horn of the dilemma. Nevertheless progress was made, for the presupposition of sin on the part of the afflicted is destroyed.

But dualism was not the last word of Hebrew thought upon the problem, for, as the author shows in his sixth and last lecture, where he discusses the subject of "deferred rewards and punishments," an entirely new contribution was made to the subject by the writers of such works as the Similitudes of Enoch and II Esdras. The whole realm of the future world was beginning to be studied by eager Jewish minds, resulting in the belief that the apparent wrongs of his life would be made right beyond the grave. Here Professor Batten has well shown that the continuation of Hebrew religious thinking is to be found in that excellent series of books which lie "between the Testaments." In them the problem of the correlation of sin with suffering, and of suffering with integrity is worked out.

The thought in the lectures is excellently illustrated and well balanced. There are many aspects of the subject which the author has not broached, such as the difference between the fate of the righteous and that of the wicked in the Sheol of early Old Testament times, problems which a casual reading of his book may lead one to think did not exist, but just that logical treatment of the subject which produces such an impression shows how well the author has arranged his material and accomplished his task. The book is reliable and most stimulating.

A Journalist's Religion

BY THIS SIGN WE CONQUER AND TWO ANCIENT RED CROSS TALES. By P. Whitwell Wilson, Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, 1918. 50c. each.

Philip Whitwell Wilson, the author of these two little books, will be remembered best for two things; one, he wrote The Christ We Forget, and he did it well, and secondly, he is an unusually good newspaper man. He is Parliamentary correspondent for the London Daily News. It makes but little difference of which of these two we recall first. In combination they give us the background of experience which enables him to write two appealing "interpretations" of old bits of Scripture, with freshness and attractiveness. Under the title of By This Sign We Conquer he gives us a "note on the strange resurrection of John-Thrice-Sixteen." In Two Ancient Red Cross Tales he has commented on the story of the paralytic let down through the roof (second chapter of St. Mark) and the familiar parable of the Good Samaritan (tenth chapter of St. Luke). Written especially with the war in mind and the need of religious folk to relinquin again the old tales of the Gospel, Mr. Wilson has modernized the message and attitude of the Savior; in the first, in strong contrast to Prussianized criticism of the Scriptures, and in the other, the method by which our Blessed Lord aided and befriended those who were in trouble. Both may be read quite easily within an hour but the impression will last for months. Both have been published in this country while the author is in America on a special mission.

R. P. K.
THE PROCESSIONAL. By P. Whitwell Wilson, Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 1918.

For rare beauty of thought and tender feeling, for vision and lovable spirit, this allegory of the modern procession to Bethlehem set as a Mosaic into Kipling's "Recessional" is one of the finest things that the gifted author of The Christ We Forgot and the forthcoming The Church We Forgot has produced.

God and the War

GOD'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WAR. By Edward S. Drown, D.D. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919. 60c.

This little book of fifty-six small pages has plenty of meat in it. One who knows Professor Drown would of course look for nothing less.

If God had been both omnipotent and loving, he would not have permitted the indescribable destruction and pain of this war. So it is urged, and many have abandoned the idea of omnipotence. The author feels rightly that that course deprives God of an essential attribute, and he shows in what sense God must be regarded as omnipotent and still be the loving Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and so of us all.

The Parish of Darrington

MEMORIALS OF A WORKSHIRE PARISH: An Historical Sketch of the Parish of Darrington. By J. S. Fletcher, with thirteen drawings by G. P. Rhodes, John Lane, The Bodley Head, London and New York, 1917. $2.50.

This book represents a labor of love, for it is a most painstaking and complete account of the parish of Darrington. The bulk of the book can scarcely be interesting to one who does not know the parish, but it is worth possessing and reading in, if not through, for the sake of the excellent accounts of parish life in different ages of English history. It is beautifully bound and printed, and not the least attractive feature, are the lovely illustrations provided by Mr. Rhodes. Moreover it is completely indexed, and can be used for reference for its bearing on the general subject of English parochial life even by one who is not particularly interested in Darrington. It is an invaluable memorial for one who knows the parish.

the Bishop of London's Lenten Book

THE INCREASE OF GOD. By A. H. McNeile, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Dublin, Longmans, Green & Co., New York, 1919. $1.20.

The general tone and character of this book may be gathered from the fact that the Bishop of London has recommended it for his diocese for lenten reading. In the chief introduction which he contributes the bishop says, "This is a clear, pointed, and in my opinion a very delightful little book." And again, "I feel certain that, if we take in and live out the teaching of this book, both as individuals and corporately as a diocese we shall grow with the 'increase of God.'" The writer's main idea is that God is striving to fulfil himself within the individual, within the church and within the human race. "My growth," he says, "is God's life straining after the self-fulfillment, physically in my body, spiritually in my soul." He lays great emphasis upon the fact that growth is necessary to the continuance of life, and presses home the question "Am I growing?" "The supreme question always remains to be asked: Is the hidden spiritual life of my soul my obedience, knowledge, and love, a growth which is anything like proportionate to my gifts? And an honest answer to that is capable of changing the most pious person on earth from the Pharisee to the Publican." The book is of very real value; its message is of vital importance, and is one which is especially needed in the life of the Church today.

An English Mr. Odell

WHEN HE IS COME: Studies in Retrospect and Forecast. By the Rev. A. C. Bouquet, S.C.F., Trinity College, Cambridge. Longmans, Green and Company, New York, 1917. 90c.

This series of studies in war-time psychology and religion provide at least interesting and stimulating reading. The one entitled Why Should the Church of England Not Die? suggests the Rev. Mr. Odell's emotions about the Church in general (if we may substitute what the writers would probably call The Catholic Church) published last winter in The Atlantic Monthly to the delight of the ecclesiastical Philistine. It is our impression that if better reasons cannot be found than Mr. Bouquet finds for the C. of E. (as we trust they can be found) it probably will die. Fault-finding is easy and for a while it tickles the intellectual palate and stimulates the ecclesiastical imagination—but one wearies of it easily and wishes that those engaged in picking faults we all perceive, would suggest for us some practical remedies.

The Boy Problem

THE WAR AND THE BOYS OF MYTOWN. By F. H. Cheley, Association Press, New York, 1918. 35c.

This is one of the standard programs of the Y. M. C. A. dealing frankly with the new problems with which all workers among boys are confronted. Those interested in the question of securing the right kind of leadership for boys will find Mr. Cheley's contribution something more than a mere program. It shows without question how utterly inadequate have been the efforts in the past and how near bankruptcy we have come as the old ways have gone tumbling and new ideas and new tasks have arisen. The clergy might find food for thoughtful consideration in some suggestive charts, representing actual interviews and vividly portraying the needs of certain types of boys, which the author has included as an appendix. The Minor Prophets

THE MINOR PROPHETS UNFOLDED (Vol. ii—Joel and Amos). By A. Lukyn Williams, D.D., S.P.C.K., London, The Macmillan Company, New York, 1918. 75c.

A popular exposition, designed for the serious lay student of the Scriptures, based on accurate scholarship. Concise and suggestive. L. G.

Holy Day Lessons

NOTES ON THE TABLE OF LESSONS FOR HOLY DAYS. E. R. Bernard, M.A., S.P.C.K., London, 1918. 1 shilling.

New Anthems

AWAKE AND SING THE SONG. By Stanley R. Avery. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 12c.

HE LEADETH ME. Anthem for Two-Part Chorus. By Stanley R. Avery. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 12c.

While not deeply religious in concept, these anthems have a melodious smoothness which lends itself well to women's voices. The latter contains soprano and alto solos.

IN HIS HANDS ARE ALL THE CORNERS OF THE EARTH. Three-Part Anthem for Women's Voices by Felix Mendelssohn, Arranged by Arthur H. Ryder. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 10c.

Very Mendelssohnian, with typical running accompaniment of sixteenth notes; and presumably very effective for women's voices.

PRAISE THE LORD, ALL YE NATIONS. By Niccolò Jommelli. Ed. by Philip James. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1919. 10c.

A strong subject dominates the whole of this admirable eighteenth century fugue number, and Mr. James has worked climatic effect and restraint into just those passages which require the proper treatment. H. A. M.

full work of his ministry in his own district, the Bishop to Mexico offered himself to the Board of Missions for temporary work wherever he might be needed. You would have learned that during the past year and a half the Bishop to Mexico has not exercised his full ministry in the native or the foreign field not because he lacked the desire to do so, but because he was legally prohibited from doing so; and that in consequence of this curtailment of work he offered his services again last summer to the Board of Missions for a part of his time at least wherever they might be needed.

And you would have learned also, my brother, that for some eight months of the two years during which you affirm that the Bishop to Mexico did not cross the Texan border into Mexico he made very few episcopal visitations and did not even attend the annual convocation in Mexico City last April, not because he did not want to, but because a higher duty held him to the bed-side of his suffering life-mate, whose life was, without doubt, humanly speaking, sacrificed by being held in Mexico by wrecked railways until the relief that might have been given north of the Texan line came too late.

But, Mr. Editor, it is not the answer to the question you have asked and answered so easily to your own satisfaction that concerns me now, but the righting of the wrong you have done by your untrue assertions and accusing implications. For you have not only placed a personal character in the pillory of false accusation, but you have thereby wounded the interests of the Church's work in Mexico; and that at a most critical moment. For there has never been, probably, in all the history of our efforts in that unhappy country a time when there was a greater need for hope and encouraging help than just now, when the rebuilding of the waste places in the native field and the renewal of efforts to meet the coming needs of the foreign field are before us.

You know, Mr. Editor, perhaps better than I do that the wrong you have ignorantly—we may not say innocently—done can never be completely righted; that the false statement you have uttered to several thousands of people can never be entirely overtaken and corrected. It is this ugly fact of evasiveness that our ancestors made so plain in the penance they imposed for slander: to walk through the town plucking the feathers from a goose and then to return and pick them all up again. It can't be done!

But, Mr. Editor, the attempt can be made and of course should be made for the sake of truth, justice, the sacredness of a "fair name" and the supreme interests of Christ's Kingdom as well as for the avoidance of anything resembling the exercise of an editorial autocracy by a Christian periodical so greatly admired and trusted as has been the CHURCHMAN.

Church Work Among the Deaf

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

An interesting feature of the meeting of the synod of the Province of Washington, held in St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, recently, which seems to have been overlooked by your regular correspondent, was the reading of the report of the Commission on Church Work among the Deaf by the Rev. A. Chilton Powell, D.D., its efficient secretary. The report described enthusiastically and in detail the work that was being done by the missionaries to the deaf in the Province of Washington and heartily endorsed the Society for the Promotion of Church Work among the Deaf which had rendered its report to the commission. The commission, the Rev. Dr. Powell said, was dependent to a great extent upon the monetary support of the society. He recommended that churches, guilds, Woman's Auxiliaries and indi-

RESOLUTION

At the funeral of the Rev. Joseph Gattell Shepherd, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Portland, Maine, who died March 23, 1919, a committee of three clergymen was appointed to represent the clergy of the diocese in an expression of their sense of loss, and an appreciation of the many rich gifts and excellent personal qualities of their deceased brother.

During a long rectorship in the diocese Mr. Shepherd was widely known as a lover of his kind, and a devoted priest, ready to minister to all classes in their need, and it is felt that such endowments of mind and heart will not fail to yield an influence for many years to come.

Sincere sympathy is extended to Mrs. Shepherd in her great loss.

? Is the Soldier Accountable to God ? for His Individual Share in the War ?

—a question, the answer for which, many Christians are seeking today, is only a part of the age-long problem which

Prof. Loring W. Batten

of General Theological Seminary, New York

treats and discusses in his new book, entitled

GOOD AND EVIL

¶ Prof. Batten's new book is recommended strongly to "Churchman" readers. The author is well known to many through his distinguished success of a quarter century at the General Theological Seminary, and his book is a fresh, broad, satisfying study—"the import of which," The Boston Transcript says, "no review can express."

THE LIVING CHURCH SAYS:

"The problem of evil in the world has always been the great stumbling block to faith. If God is a God of love, why did He not make the world good and keep it good? If evil is the result of sin, and sin a necessary possibility if man were to be given free will, why is not evil restrained? Why does suffering come alike to the just and the unjust? What shall we say of vicarious suffering? All these are problems we have always had with us; the great war has but brought them out into sharper outline."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN SAYS:

"Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read."

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

THE Rev. W. R. Bowie, D.D., whose article, "And There Was No More Sea," appears in this week's CHURCHMAN, is the rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va. During the war he served as Red Cross chaplain at Base Hospital 45, A. E. F. This article is a part of a longer paper. Unfortunately the limited number of pages in THE CHURCHMAN precluded our using the whole. Dr. Jefferys, as our readers know, is the superintendent of the Philadelphia City Mission. Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, writer, architect, philosopher, is, as our readers know, the architect of the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. New York churchmen will be interested to know that on May 3 at the annual meeting of the Cathedral League in Synod House, New York, Dr. Cram will deliver a lecture on the nave, illustrated by lantern slides.

MARCH ANGLICAN REVIEW

THE March number of the Anglican Theological Review maintains the scholarly and interesting standard set by previous numbers. It opens with an article on John Colet by Professor Jenks, which puts the famous dean of St. Paul's in his proper place in the great drama of early church life in England. Dr. Easton's scholarly treatment of Apostolic Christology is continued and concluded, and Dr. Miller's keen and penetrating criticism of Mr. Temple and Mens Creatrix is stimulating and thought provoking. In many ways Miss Scudder's article, "The Social Teaching of the Church Year," is the finest ever written on the social aspect of the church seasons from Advent to Trinity. It is critical, constructive and reverent. Besides an interesting critical note on the word "covet" in the Tenth Commandment, the number contains an excellent series of thorough and critical book reviews.

A PRAYER FOR THE WORLD

O God our Creator and Governor, at whose word the earth came forth from darkness into light; we beseech Thee to pour Thy Spirit into the hearts of all men, that they may cease from violence and turn themselves to creative work. Let Thy light shine upon the counsels of their hearts, that selfishness may be rebuked and that those who sincerely desire the good of mankind may be known and followed. Grant that all nations may perform their several parts in making Thy truth to be known, and join them in a strong covenant of peace which shall prepare Thy way and hasten the coming of Thy kingdom; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

WHAT are the old-fashioned things in the school of the world? We recognize them at once:

Hate.
Punishment.
Readiness to condemn: intolerance.
Mechanical control of individuals.
The servility of the masses.
Their consequent vulgarity.
Man not living according to his true dignity.

The feeling of being responsible for one's self alone and not in any way responsible for what others do.—STEPHEN GRAHAM.

The distinctive flavor of
Coca-Cola

The flavor of Coca-Cola is a composite of natural fruits so delicately blended that the palate is unable to distinguish any one of the component parts—the result is a distinctive flavor.

The art of compounding flavors has become a science which requires a lifetime to master. That is why it is so difficult to imitate the distinctive flavor of Coca-Cola.

The slightest deviation from the delicate balance of flavors reveals the imitation. When you ask for Coca-Cola demand the genuine by full name—nicknames encourage substitution.

EASTER

By Chaplain John Stuart Banks.

IT has been my lot to see much of the suffering of our brave boys who have left their homes and crossed the seas to fight for us and for the principles that we acknowledge to-day. They have been "strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus," and I must remember the precept of St. Paul, "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." Therefore I send you this message.

I remember Captain Davis; I saw him in the hospital every day for three months. He had his leg and arm badly shot with shrapnel and had to have them both amputated. He had seven operations to save his life. Through all his terrible suffering, he kept his spirit, the true spirit of the soldier. His smile was the joy of his ward, and I never remember his complaining at any time. The morning that they were going to amputate his leg (his hand had been amputated a month before), I talked with him, and told him how sorry I was that he had to go through so much. I tried to encourage him by telling him what an inspiration he had already been to the other men. He looked up to me and said, "Chaplain, I don't mind giving my hand and my leg too, if it does any good."

Charles A. Fiske stood by the grave of his only son, Lieutenant Fiske of the 111th Infantry, and said to me, just after taps had been sounded, "It's the price and we are both willing to pay it." He did not weep, he was a Christian and had faith. Robert S. Gill was an actor in New York, and heard the call of his country. At Soissons he received a wound in the head that caused a gradual paralysis of his whole body, until his death on September 23. He used to say to me, "Chaplain, I'll never act again but I hope that I have acted the man in a better play." Captain Hallam received a machine gun bullet in the head that severed the optic nerve as he was leading his company of marines through the Bois de Belleau to clear the left flank. They tried to save his sight, and held out hopes that they might be able to do so. But there came the time that he knew that he would never see his wife and children again. He used to come regularly to services in the chapel, led by one of his wounded companions, and always received the Holy Communion. One Sunday he stayed after the service, and when I went up to him and took his hand to say a word of cheer, he said, "Chaplain, I'll never see again, but I expected it, and I don't mind; there are some things I can see better now."

I went in to see Major-General Rhodes, after the armistice. His face was covered with bandages and his body a mass of wounds. I knew him as one of the great Christian leaders of our armies, and a devoted churchman. I said, "General, I'm sorry." He said, absolutely forgetting himself, "I'm not, I'm glad; kneel down chaplain, and thank God with me that we have been permitted to win a victory that will bring a lasting peace." Fred Arbergast, a private of marines, who was in hospital for seven months, and whom I had seen brought into the field-hospital near Château Thierry, hung on to life with the fighting spirit of the American soldier, when the surgeons had given him up. He is back at home now. He used to say to me, "I'm all right now, everything is going to be all right now."

Such are the messages of those who have been with Christ and who have united with Him in His sacrifice. It is not a message of suffering and death, it is a message of life and of victory, that I send to you this Easter. It is the word of every one of even the least of these who have suffered for Christ's sake.

WHEN A LITTLE CORNSTALK BOUGHT A BELL

By Eugenie du Maurier

FOR a long time, nearly two hundred years, in the little town of Grosslaswitz, a very interesting bell has been hanging in the little church tower. On that bell there is engraved a six-eared stock of corn. The story of that bell is very helpful. The old bell of the church could not be heard in the village. And in those days, you know, people were called to church by the bell rather than the clock. So they decided that they must have a new bell. But the people were all very poor. And they did not know how they could give enough money to buy a bell. Everybody offered to give a little. But when they had put it together it was not nearly enough to buy the new bell.

One Sunday, when he was going to church, the schoolmaster saw growing out of the wall of the churchyard a good, strong stalk of corn. You know sometimes old walls are decayed and have earth in the broken crevices. Perhaps, this seed of corn had been dropped there by one of the birds. The schoolmaster became interested in the lonely cornstalk. He wondered how it came there and what it would do. So every Sunday he watched it and watched it. And he saw that it was growing beautifully. At last it grew six well-formed ears of corn on the stalk. So he gathered them and put them away. And the next year he sowed the seed. Then he gathered it again. And the next year he sowed the seed. The next year he did the same. And the following year he had not enough room in his garden for all the corn. So he divided it among his friends. And they went on sowing the corn until after eight years they had a crop so big that when it was sold they had enough money to buy the longed-for bell. And the bell was bought. The story of how it was secured was written on the bell.

The people of Grosslaswitz have gone to church to the music of that bell all through these war-times. And I am told that at Easter-time this year the old bell will for the first time have rung from its old brass clapper some of the beautiful Easter anthems, and that the people will sing their praises to their Lord and Saviour early on the Resurrection morn, thanking Him for the promise of salvation and for the prospect of earthly peace and pardon from their enemies. The dear old hill town of Grosslaswitz will be another Bethlehem with its invisible hosts of angels joining in the glad Easter Day songs of "Peace on earth, Good-will to men. Glory to God, in the highest! Hallelujah!"

This book has a two-fold purpose: (1) To explain the right principles to use in getting at the meaning conveyed in Messianic prophecy and (2) to show that the Church is not yet aware of the full consequences of the stand that the Reformers took on the nature of the Bible as a principle of Authority in Protestantism. $1.50

SCHOOL NUMBER

The May 3 issue of The Churchman will be the first big school number of the year. It will help solve the problem of where to send your children next Fall. The Churchman carefully investigates its advertisers and can vouch for the schools that use its columns. Save the school number for reference.

Have You Left School?

with a diploma, or without it? In either case, you of course do not wish to leave off being educated. When education ends, life ends.

Take a Reading Course

Everybody reads, but too many read without any plan, and to no purpose. The college graduate is like other people in the need of system, but a little more likely to realize his need. The Chautauqua Reading Course is useful alike to the person of limited training, who labors many nights over each book, and the critic or vigorous man of affairs who can sweep thru them all in a few hours. For either, a group of related, intelligible, and competent studies leads to a well rounded result.

Don't Read at Random

For many years, the very mention of a reading course has meant without further explanation the Chautauqua Reading Course. It was the first and is still the best and it alone has a world-wide fame. The cost is trifling, $6 for a year. Are you tired wasting your odd minutes? Write for free synopsis or mail this ad, signed, to Box 234

EASTER

EASTER DAY this year will be a memorable one in every parish and in every home. It finds the war closed, but with anxieties hardly less than those which the war in its progress brought. The joy and gladness of the coming of peace are lessened by the distressing conditions in a large part of Europe and by the anxieties which are everywhere present. The fears of a great company of people for their sons in service abroad are lifted by the cessation of hostilities and the return of many soldiers, but there are thousands of homes where sorrow and bereavement have come which will be in our minds. The great lessons of Easter, of hope and joy, of life and courage, are needed and are as fresh and strong for those who can receive them as ever before. Our civilization seems like a ship saved out of the storm and stranded, not yet broken up, but not out of danger. Easter will come with its message of hope and blessed are they who can take it in. Easter Day will be for all of us what we make it by our preparation to keep it in the right way, by our thought, not of ourselves, but by our endeavor to bring with us to the house of God all whom our invitation can reach, that at the Lord's table we may all become the thankful guests of the risen Lord.—Edwin S. Lines.

THE MIRACLE

THE fact which makes the heart leap at Eastertide is that in the Resurrection spirit triumphed over matter. The Christian has always with an unerring instinct resented the dominion over his life of mechanics and matter. He knows that he does not know what matter is, but he also knows that it is the outward and visible sign of something dangerous within himself, the eternal enemy of his highest hope. That is the reason that he has so often feared, with a childlike fear, the scientist as an enemy of his faith. The things in experience which he likes best, the man of science likes least—surprises, miracles, exceptions to law. We ought to be very patient with churchmen in the battle which the Church has fought with science. It has not all of it been mere bigotry and perverse ignorance that made faith contest every inch of the ground. It has been the struggle for existence of beauty and hope. For the moment that any one announces a law which seems to imply that the whole universe is a mechanical thing, the Christian springs to the defense of his hearth. If that be true, he is done for. The Christian knows that he does not know what matter is, but he is suspicious of it. It is to him a constant reminder of something within himself that he fears—the tendency towards fixedness, inertia, inability to change.

Bergson in the brilliant exposition of his philosophy has made matter the badge of ignominy. He shows that there are two tendencies visible throughout the universe. One is characteristic of matter. It is the mechanical and the automatic. We can count upon matter. There is a fixedness about all its relations. It is going to do tomorrow what it did yesterday. It will reveal no new habits. It creates nothing new. Therein lies its ignominy. That is the sign whereby we know that it is dead. But the farther we get away from matter in the domain of life, the greater the contrast in this regard. A man is not pure mechanics. It is his glory that we cannot absolutely count upon him. He is free. He changes, he makes and breaks habits. He rises out of a dead past, into a living tomorrow. He descends from a living, free today into a dead tomorrow. He develops and grows. He also stagnates and degenerates. He is versatile. That is the story of St. Augustine, St. Francis. One day their friends came and found them changed, different utterly, risen from the dead. Just when we think that we know all about a man and can fix him in a definition, his goings and his comings, his hopes and his fears, his bigness and his littleness, behold! he is not there. He has risen to something other than he was.

Matter has nothing of this romance about it. The ignominy of it is that it can neither be saved nor damned. Therefore when our lives tend towards the mechanical, the fixed, we are behaving not like free spirits but like the body in the tomb. The ever-glorious battle of every man's soul is to keep rising from the dead. How aptly Tolstoy named his novel Resurrection, for he traced there the rising from the dead of two lost souls—lost, however, in different ways. One was imprisoned, caught like a helpless bird in the net of a brutish life, a life of bestial and unlovely things. The other was lost, caught in the mire of fixed, unyielding habits, prejudices and standards. Both at the touch of Christ rise from the dead.

It is difficult to understand how any one reading his gospels can carry away with him the conviction that Christianity is merely a system of decent morals. By the time the deeds we do get to be morals, they are dead. They no longer live. Our morals merely represent a crystallized past. Where the spirit of God is, there is always motion upward—life. Are our relationships today alive and growing, expanding with the years into something ever finer and bigger? Are we putting something into the state, into the family life, into our church life, into all the ties that bind us to our fellowmen, something that is alive, creative, growing? If so, we have stood the philosopher's test of life and we have stood the Master's test,—we are not like clods of matter, we are free. No tomb can hold such spirits bound.

What an Easter of hope for the world this Easter of 1919 should be! We have sloughed off the dead coverings of an old civilization. Men everywhere who never called upon the name of Christ before are hailing Him Master and Lord of the new day. Out of the tomb of dead habits and prejudices, old formulas outgrown, selfishness and cruelties that gripped our souls with the grip of death, men everywhere are seeking a new and better way of life. It is not merely the assertive desire to get justice long withheld, it is not chiefly the wish to shake our limbs free from the shackles that hindered the joy of life. It is the will to be free, to grow and serve and to know the meaning of life. Through four long years of agony, the Spirit knocked at the door of the tomb. It has opened and our faith tells us that again Christ in us has risen from the dead.

SWIFT AS LOVE

A RESURRECTION is always sudden. Life does not leak into the tomb. Suddenly the bonds of death are broken and behold!—He is risen. He is not there. How long at the rate that some of us are learning to live, will it take before life is really worth the living? How long at the rate the world has been getting Christian, will it take before the rank and file of men and women the world over can say that life is really a beautiful thing?

Salvation is as swift as love. It does not take a million years to learn to love. Like a flash of light it descends from heaven upon the heart and behold, all things are made new. The tomb of habits old is broken and a soul, glowing and alive, bursts forth. There is a dangerous but common illusion about the coming of the Kingdom. We are told that we must be patient and wait; mend a little, here and there; alleviate a wrong by a half-right. We have no business to be patient. Patience does not teach us how to love. The failure of the program of Christianity has been that men are too patient about it,—willing to wait, willing to go on years and decades and centuries living crippled, mean and half-lives in the illusion that things are getting better. Did you ever know a wrong to be righted gradually? While it yet remained a wrong it was a wrong. One day somebody made up his mind to do the thing right. Not till that moment was it done right. Some day, God helping us, the children of men will say: "Let us live it right; let us stop tinkering with outworn and useless things; let us cease to be patient with the tomb of things long dead."

Resurrections never go by halves. We are alive with love or we are dead. If the Spirit of God is within us, no tomb can hold us. We shall change, ever change, and begin anew. The world, looking for us where it left us yesterday, mired in our selfishness, our prejudices, our ambitions and our compromises will be told: He is not here; he has risen with his Lord.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHALLENGE

EVERY churchman will read with pride and enthusiasm Bishop Lloyd's announcement published in this issue, "The Challenge of the Hour Accepted."

Within three years twenty million dollars is to be raised. With that twenty million dollars the Episcopal Church proposes to meet the responsibility which today the Cross and the Flag lay upon the Christian citizens of America. The men behind this program have heard the challenge of the hour; their Christian vision has taught them how to answer that challenge. With that vision, all they need is money and men. They will get the money; they will find the men. God helping us, the Church in America will during the next decade battle manfully to preach the Gospel to the poor, heal the broken-hearted, preach deliverance to the captives, recover the sight of the blind and set at liberty them that are bruised.

It is a glorious work that humanity calls upon America to do. The Episcopal Church is going to answer the call of Christ.

DR. FOSDICK ON RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

DR. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK at a dinner, given under the auspices of the New York Sunday School Association in the interests of religious education, Monday evening, March 31, at the Hotel Astor in New York City, made a stirring address. Dr. Fosdick is an orator of remarkable power. He has also a comic sense. In his stirring plea for specialization in the ministry of the Churches, he struck a telling note. Religious education is a field of specialization which the Churches should respect and make provision for. Dr. Fosdick affirmed that the lack of specialization in the ministry was responsible for an extravagant waste. He affirmed that the men and women who really can be counted upon to assume responsibility for the advancement of the Kingdom of God are the men and women who have been trained and nurtured in the Bible classes of our churches. Their Christian culture is likely to be deeper and finer than that of men who in later life first received the imprint of Christian teaching. That is sound psychology. It is the strongest of arguments for religious education. Certainly our experts in this department of the Church's work have the future with them. On every hand testimony is offered of the primary and urgent importance of informing the souls of children with the spirit of the Christ.

MEXICO

IN our note of comment in the issue of March 1, entitled "What is the Matter with Mexico?" a grievous wrong was done to Bishop Aves by our ignorance of certain personal matters. For this wrong, THE CHURCHMAN offers whole hearted apology to Bishop Aves. We hope that our readers read the fine letter from the bishop, which we published last week, and also the one from the Rev. A. L. Burseson. These letters came to us too late for editorial comment in the issue of which they appeared.

The Bishop of Mexico's reason for absenting himself from his diocese the greater part of the last two years would justify his course to any sympathetic person. His personal sorrow and anxiety, added to the unsettled conditions in that unhappy land are persuasive arguments in Bishop Aves' behalf.

But THE CHURCHMAN must make two statements in its own defense. If the statement in the brief editorial note of March 1 had been made upon hearsay, THE CHURCHMAN would have been well nigh criminally negligent in casting reflection upon the administration of the Church in Mexico. No reputable journal makes assertions upon mere hearsay. Every fact upon which we based our criticism of the failure of Mexico was vouched for by the best authority on the missionary work of the Church. But that authority erred in the omission of one fact and the mis-statement of another. Bishop Aves has not been away from his diocese for two years. Also, there was a compelling reason for the bishop's absence from Mexico. It is for these errors that THE CHURCHMAN offers apology to Bishop Aves.

But the main contention of THE CHURCHMAN's editorial comment stands. The work of our Church in Mexico has been woefully mishandled for years. Bishop Aves inherited this condition; he did not create it. Mexico, almost from the beginning, has been mismanaged by the Church and by those who have been sent to administer its work there. To be sure, it is not the only place where the Church has bungled its missionary work, but it has long been a patent example of such mismanagement.

What is the matter with Mexico? Something more serious is wrong than the insuperable personal burdens of its bishop.

SUNDAY BASEBALL

IT is interesting to note that in the letter of our English correspondent, in the Rhode Island letter and, during the week, in the news columns of the daily press, we find appearing a controversy over Sunday games. In England it is cricket; in America, naturally, it is baseball.

The Bishop of Rhode Island and the clergy who have entered the controversy there did not oppose Sunday amateur baseball. They opposed professional baseball. The distinction is decidedly in the interest of a Christian Sunday. The opening of the baseball parks for amateur games is quite proper and right. No one attempts to prohibit Sunday golf. No one has the right, on Christian grounds, to oppose amateur games on Sunday. But professional Sunday baseball introduces rowdiness, increasing the labors of motormen and, generally speaking, dishevels our day of rest. In Rhode Island the bill for Sunday baseball, we are informed, was pressed by men financially interested in the park.

There are, it must be noted, religious organizations which are opposed to any kind of baseball on Sunday. They would, if they could do so, compel people either to attend church on Sunday or twirl their thumbs in boredom. The Church is not concerned with the problem of whether people ought to fish, play ball or golf on Sunday. What the Church is concerned with is that people shall worship on Sunday. It is the business of Christianity to make worship appeal to the consciences and hearts of the people. It is in the interest neither of morality nor religion to penalize those who wish to take innocent diversion on Sunday. We recall that it was said of old that all the people wept when they heard the law. It is not wrong to be happy and it is not religious to be bored. The laws of Sunday keeping ought not to make Christians weep when they hear them read.

So we are glad that the clergy of Rhode Island have taken a constructive attitude towards the problem of Sunday baseball. They have put the prohibition where it belongs.

THE OUTLOOK ON THE MISSION TO THE VATICAN

THE Outlook in a recent editorial on "The Episcopal Mission to Rome" sees little hope in any future organic union of the Episcopal Church and the Church of Rome. It is probable, says the editor, that the Vatican will receive the advances of the Episcopal bishops more courteously than the Episcopal bishops received the advances of the Protestant clergy, for the Vatican is sure to be diplomatic.

But it is as certain as anything in the future can be that the Vatican will not recognize the Episcopal Church as a Christian Church nor its clergy as Christian priests, nor enter into any official relations with that Church or its clergy. And it is equally certain that the great body of Episcopalians in this country will never consent to repudiate the Episcopal Church, to concede that its ministry is not a Christian ministry, that its history is only the history of a schism, its church buildings are only secular halls, and its dead are all buried in unconsecrated ground.

The only way for Episcopalians to enter the Church of Rome is by the path of repentant or at least converted schismatics by which Cardinal Manning and Cardinal Newman entered it in the last century.

Dr. Huntington is reported once to have said with fervor: "No peace with Rome." Dr. Huntington was a zealous advocate of church unity long before unity became a popular cry among church leaders, but he looked for unity where it is most likely to come—among the Churches which are not ashamed of a Protestant inheritance. It is possible that in God's providence, the Church of Rome may change in the direction of the Protestant tradition, but that is not likely. It is far more natural that the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist and Baptist Churches may gather up some dropped stitches of the Catholic tradition. Unless Rome changes fundamentally in temperament, we should lose far more than we should gain by union with her.

QUAKERS IN RUSSIA

THERE is a group of people who during the past four and a half years of destruction and desolation have quietly and successfully taken their part in the struggle in the strength of a single weapon drawn from the arsenal of the ages. In France, Russia, Serbia, Armenia, Corsica, Tunis, Syria, Holland, Belgium and Italy the Quaker relief workers have operated central stores, co-operative shops, orphanages, hospitals, dispensaries, settlement houses. They have distributed clothing and food, opened libraries and home classes, encouraged modern methods of agriculture, carpet-weaving and knitting. Another expedition to Russia is now being organized by the Quakers of England and America. The plan is to send a commission of three or more prominent Friends with special qualifications for spying out the land and discovering just what assistance can be rendered to help Russian peasants learn the trades and carry on efficient production. With them will go a group of half a dozen or more of the most capable and experienced volunteers who have been tried out in war emergency work in other countries. No matter what political party has happened to be in power in distressed Russia, Quaker workers have never been molested; they have been respected alike by Keren-sky and the Bolsheviki. Everywhere they have the confidence and the gratitude of the people.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

How Jesus Abolishes Death

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D. D.

If a man keep my saying he shall never see death. St. John VIII—51.

HE does not abolish the fact of death. He does not abolish its partings nor its pain. And yet He does, but how? Just as the sun abolishes the stars: by flooding the world with so much greater light that we no longer see them. They are still there, but we forget them in the presence of so wonderful a glory. Thus Jesus Christ has abolished death by illuminating life; the life here and the life beyond. Sometimes when I was rector of St. James' Church in Brooklyn, I would stand, in passing it at night, and look upon its graceful proportions and its beautiful window. But it did not look beautiful then. It was dark—and sombre and opaque. And yet I knew it was beautiful because I had already seen it illuminated on the other side.

He who accepts Jesus Christ for his Friend and His teachings for his guide shall never see death, because he will see through it and beyond it. That which seemed dismal and obscure, shall be lit with glory, and he shall catch the music of anthems, and the voice of One within saying "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." He hath abolished death by bringing life and immortality to light. In the brightness of that revealing effulgence, "old things are passed away and all things are become new." He has abolished death by illuminating life.

And thus at every burial service, amid songs of triumph, our Church sends forth its exultant challenge, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Is that a death-bed where the Christian lies?
Yes, but not his. 'Tis death itself that dies.

When the body of Henry Ward Beecher lay in state in Plymouth Church where he had preached for so many years, it was guarded by a military watch, from the regiment of which he had been chaplain. And all through the night, as the sentry marched backward and forward, every hour his voice was heard, ringing out, solemnly but cheerily, "All's well!" And this is the message which I want to bring to you on this glad approaching Easter Morning; that if you are a believer in Him, and are therefore trying to live His life, whether death shall come to you fifty years hence or tomorrow or today, "All's well." They who become His disciples shall never see death. Even though death shall be present, they shall never see it. They will only see Him.

Jesus abolishes death by dissipating its gloom. He teaches His disciples to act and to think as though death for them did not exist. He teaches them that, it is in itself, neither the end of life, nor any great catastrophe, but a mere incident; a nothing at all, just a crossing over; to believe that it is not a finale but a beginning; a beginning of something greater and more glorious than has ever been conceived; that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him; but God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit."

When a young man graduates from college we do not speak of it as a finishment, though, of a certain stage in his development, it is; but all that is lost sight of, and we think of it and speak of it, only as a commencement because in that hour of anticipation, we realize what lies before. And even so, to the believer in Jesus Christ,

There is no death.
What seems so is transition.
This life of mortal breath
Is but the entrance to the life elysian,
Whose portals we call death.

The day of your college commencement was not a day of gloom. It may have been a day of sadness because such partings are almost always sad, but a sweet sadness. Do you remember your last night with the "fellows?" You gathered and sang the old songs, and you couldn't forget even if you would, that it was the last time.

Then you wandered forth together, as you had so many many times during those happy years which were now forever gone, to sing once more your old-time serenades beneath the same windows which were expectantly as then, only half closed. And when it was all over, and you were just about to part, someone suggested that you join hands and sing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." And so you sang it—or tried to. It was an hour of sadness; but it was one of the happiest hours you have ever known, because you knew, despite its partings, it was not the end, but only a beginning.

And as I sit here in my study writing this, I seem to catch across the ages, the voice of the Apostle "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown!" And then the Scriptures think so little of death, they do not even tell us that He died at all. They are not dealing with death, but life.

And last of all I seem to hear another voice. It comes from Calvary. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar He said, It is finished; and He bowed his head and gave up the ghost." And then, in only three days,—Easter Morning!

And out of the past, there comes to me a poem which I read many years ago:

If I were told that I must die tomorrow
That the next sun
Which sinks, should bear me past all fear and sorrow,
For any one;
All the fight fought and all the journey through;
What should I do?

I do not think that I should shrink or falter,
But just go on Doing my work, nor change, nor seek to alter
Aught that is gone;
But rise and move and love and smile and pray
For one more day.

And lying down at night for a last sleeping
Say in that ear
Which hearkens ever, "Lord, within thy keeping,
How should I fear?
And, when tomorrow brings Thee nearer still,
Do Thou thy will."

I might not sleep, for awe; but peaceful, tender,
My soul would lie
All the night long; and, when the morning splendor
Flashed o'er the sky,
I think that I could smile, could calmly say,
"This is His day."

AND THERE WAS NO MORE SEA

BY THE REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D.D.

THE sea in the thought of the seer of Patmos stood for the fearsomeness of the unknown. Only in part can we of modern years taste, in our own experience, this sense of the lonesome terror of the sea. Men who have stood at nightfall upon the decks of ships that drew near to the submarine zone have known a little of this sense of the vague and threatening unknown. The dark fell and there was no light. Whether the convoy was together or separated, one could not tell. What lurking shapes lay in the unseen waters no one knew. Only the ship steered ahead into the blackness that hid perhaps the menace which the next hour might uncover, while the ghostly phosphorescence gleamed in the water that writhed away from the vessel's track out into the empty dark. Magnify by an hundredfold this feeling which men of our own time have shared of a peril ominous yet unpredictable, and we begin to understand what was the sense of the hostile desolation of the sea that was in the mind of the writer of the Revelation.

When we take this symbol of the book of Revelation up into our spiritual experience, do you not begin to perceive how often our universe without Christ is all full of the mood of the desolate, unknown sea? There is a part of life which is familiar where we walk with confident feet; there are convictions that we trust in and are sure of; but we are afraid of the waste of the sea that lies beyond. There are men and women who in moments of some great grief and need for faith turn to the faithfulness of their human friends. They know that as far as these can, they will enter into their experiences, will share and sympathize and help. They trust also in what would be the friendliness of Jesus. They think that if He were with them, as He was with the disciples long ago, He would be understanding and compassionate and merciful.

But in flesh He is not with us. We cannot see Him or feel His touch. It seems as though His were a life that was lived long ago, and we are not dealing directly as men used to do then with Him. We have to do with the invisible God. We have to do with Him who sends us sorrow and pain in ways and for reasons we cannot know or understand. We see the young go out suddenly from life when we think that all their golden promise is unfulfilled. We watch the eager and the gallant and the good cut down, when to our poor stumbling comprehension the worthless seem to flourish; and we ask ourselves, what is the spirit that is back of the unknown? Is there really love and understanding in the heart of God? Or is life all full of a weary terror like the sea? Must our thoughts steer out into the unknown, afraid of the unfriendliness of the horizon and the dark?

Then to souls with such a questioning and in such a mood there comes the gospel of the Resurrection, which draws its glory from the remembrance of who it was that rose. Jesus lived on earth to reveal to men what God is like. That is what He did. When He was near, men found their understanding of the infinite One. They were satisfied that God must be like Jesus. They believed through Him that God was very good. They saw their Master trust even through Gethsemane. They believed that there were no unknown things to fear, no unplumbed spaces in His universe that were not filled with His Father's love. And then death came to Him. The sin of earth took Him and crucified Him; and there ensued for them those hours of dark despair which reached from the shadow of the cross on Calvary to the breaking of the Easter dawn. In those hours it seemed as though His faith were discredited, because there seemed to be one great void and gulf into which His trust in God could not light the way. Then came the Resurrection. In a transfigured world on Easter Day, the risen Lord walked again in the fellowship of His own.

And what did His rising mean? Not the mere miracle of one man's resuscitation, not the mere fact of the coming back to them of their supreme friend. No; but it meant the triumph of all that His life had stood for and proclaimed. It meant that He had plumbed the ultimate darkness, had passed through the utmost depths of life and death and had found God on the other side. The terror had gone out of life. The deep experiences which they thought were hostile were filled with friendliness. It was as though all the universe had become as sweet and sure as the dear familiar ground of Galilee, where the Lord's own feet had walked.

Shall it not be so for you today? There have been times when life was all sea—the mocking, sorrowful sea. But the Easter message comes to you to tell you that all your earth is lit by the light of the Master's presence. He who was on the earth, and lived and made Himself known to men, is living now. He is with God. He is the heart of God. It is a God-like Jesus that we trust and believe in. Be glad then, O weary voyager! Rejoice, O heart that fainted before the dismay of the far and dim! There are no terrors for you any more. There are no disastrous journeys for you to fear. Even though you cannot see it now, all reality is made up of such a substance as the friendliest ground on which your convictions, your hopes, your loves have stood. For you, too, on this Easter morning, there is no more sea,—unless it be the sea of glass mingled with fire, of a great calm and a triumphant joy.

In the second place, the sea stands for estrangement. It is the vast barrier of what are sometimes the world's insuperable distances. Now the gospel of the Resurrection comes to us to increase our instinctive desire to share the life of humanity to the utmost, and to break down those spiritual barriers of civilization which are symbolized, in the words of Revelation, by the sea that lies between. The life of Christ, the death of Christ, the triumph of Christ over death, exalt, as we have said before, His spirit into sovereignty for all our interpretation of what is noblest and most enduring. He was the Friend and the Saviour of all. He lived and died and rose not for the Jews, His own people, only, but for all the children of the Father. He came to earth, and His spirit comes to us to-day out of the Invisible, to help us understand the brotherhood of all human life. On Easter Day we remember that and try to express it. We realize that every Christian congregation is concerned with the destiny of the kingdom of God everywhere. We remember that men and women, not only in the mountain hollows, and the mining towns, and the Alaskan gold fields, under the American flag, but men and women in China and Japan, in Palestine, in Armenia, everywhere where the merciful messengers of the Lord can go, are hungering for the touch of Jesus' friendliness and waiting for the message of life that comes through Him. The Easter message is not fully grasped until it has enlarged our souls to an universal sympathy, and thrilled us so with a sense of the mighty wideness of the venture of the Kingdom that when needy lives beckon from whatever distance for us there is no more sea that lies between.

I would apply this thought also to perhaps the most crucial opportunity that faces us in this generation. We have fought side by side with the men of other nations. By the great bonds of mutual sacrifice we have been bound together. And now we are confronted with the question as to whether those bonds which have been forged in war shall go on into the greater and freer association of nations that deliberately league themselves together to make justice and peace endure in the world. It seems to me that the desire for this is taken up into the inmost meaning of our Easter thought. If Christ be risen, if His great love is on the throne, then out of hate and strife and old calamities there must be the broadening way towards life and love. We do not testify best to His Resurrection when we chant of it in thoughtless words, and suffer our conceptions of what it means to die within the isolation of the Church's walls. We witness to it best when we have tried to show in our practical choices that truly He is risen,—risen in the power of His present life out of the old graves of human error into the light of new aspirations of service and companionship. We testify best to His Resurrection when we make Him the living Lord who shall help us believe and hope and venture to bind the peoples of this world together in such a concord as shall represent His spirit, and shall make it true that from hearts in any quarter of the earth which beat with His sympathy and His desires influence and service shall be able to go out to all peoples in the new age which has transcended the barrier of the sea.

THE EVER-LIVING ONE

BY WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, A.M., M.D.

NOT long ago, I attended Easter morning service in a certain church. The music was particularly fine and the Easter flowers lovely, but the preacher pretty nearly succeeded in quenching their meaning by referring to the great festival as "the monument of the Resurrection." No doubt it was an over-sight and as such should not be taken too seriously, but it is worth asking ourselves how it is possible that even in a moment of distraction we—actually a bishop—could stand at the point, or speak from the angle, of calling Easter the "monument" of anything.

I suggest for explanation an incident told me by a mission study class leader. She was speaking to a well-known Bible student—a man—concerning mission study methods as compared with Bible study methods, and said something to the effect that in mission study the Bible becomes a living book and Christ our living teacher. His answer was somewhat startling. He said "I have been going back to the Bible as my teacher for so long that I had almost forgotten that Christ is alive."

In mission study the Bible is not so much a record of things which happened, as it is a guide and interpretation of things which are happening. We are not studying how the thing was done as much as we are finding out how to do the thing; not what Christ's mission was, but what it is, for if it ever was—it certainly is now. The matter of great interest is not what the Church did, but what she is doing; and Jesus, the historic character, fades and gives place to the Living Christ. A peculiar distinction between a Bible class and a mission study class is, that in the former, we think and speak of a past Christ; in the latter, of the Christ that is.

The fact is that in recent years it has become so largely a matter of habit to speak of our Lord in the past tense that we have in a measure psychologically removed Him into past time. We have developed a feeling of His historicity. We have made so much of manuscript and archaeological exploration that not only the Church has mentally buried Him but her message has conveyed that impression to the world. Our Christian literature is full of the past tense, even its most beautiful expressions speaking consistently and deliberately in past terms. It would be easy to make ten thousand quotations to back up this statement. One of the loveliest poems ever written of Christ, the all sufficient name of which is "Jesus," begins, "All fair things loved Him." The use of the past tense removes Him immediately to Palestine two thousand years ago. Suppose, instead of being so written, the line had run thus:

All fair things love Him
Streams and sounding seas
Birds in the cloudland shaking melodies
Like softly falling rain—

wouldn't it have made all the difference that there is between the expression "historic Jesus" and "the Ever-Living One." When we are definitely speaking of concrete acts in historic time, or talking with reference to historic circumstance, it is legitimate and natural usage to employ the past tense; but when thinking in terms of Christianity in action, when our minds are on present day themes and, above all, when we are practising the Presence of God, there is all the difference between the past tense and the present that there is between the "monument of the Resurrection" and the Morning Star of Eternal Life.

Now let us try out an example of this point of view business practically, and see where it lands us. In the eleventh chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, the twenty-eighth verse, it is recorded that Jesus exclaimed, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest"; and in another place—St. Matthew the twenty-fifth chapter, the fortieth verse—two days before His death and burial, He again spoke His sympathy for the neglected, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." How does that read and bear on social conditions today, as compared with this expression of the same thing, "Jesus says, 'Come to Me all you toiling and burdened ones and I will give rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn from me for I am gentle and lowly of heart and you will find rest for your souls, for it is good to bear My yoke and My burden is light'; and when He sums up His feeling on the whole question of service He says to us, "In solemn truth I tell you, that in so far as you rendered such services to one of the humblest of these, My brethren, you rendered them to Myself." I believe that one can quote the words of Christ in such a way as to remove Him almost completely from any connection with modern day problems; whereas the fact is that all that Jesus said, He says. He belongs to all time and to every day. Today He is crucified and today He is risen. His self-identification with the toilers is overwhelmingly a message of today and in the "Inasmuch" He is speaking to the modern world.

Years ago, the Church pitched on the Good Samaritan and decided that that was social service, which no doubt it is, though it is a lesson primarily in points of view. The Church has been a Good Samaritan, a very good one, but this Good Samaritan, Christianity, is only a step, a part, one function of Love. In so far as it is social service, it is the gathering up of the fragments that remain that nothing be lost, but Love is a progression; first pity; then justice; finally oneness; and the greatest of these is oneness. The Church ought to be further along in its progression than it is. At present we are in a transition stage, a state of progression into Love's higher reaches, when pity alone, will not do—it is not good enough; when even justice, to which we have not yet attained, can be seen to be, in itself, but on the way. The very word "charity" has lost its charm. No one wants "charity" any more, though many need help. Even justice is not perfectness. The goal of the Church is oneness with God and man, or it is nothing. We talk unity and we talk love, but do we really live either of these?

I suppose that many of us feel that when we shall have subscribed to the principles of social justice and expressed our understanding and sympathy with the world's dumb cry for help, we shall have attained. I do not so feel, myself. I do not so read the mind of Christ. The very fact that we can put ourselves as the Society of Jesus in the position of subscribing our sympathy to somebody else's program or need, shows the measure of our detachment and short-coming. It does not seem to me that we shall ever answer the call of Christ for help so long as we sit on the outside and shout back at it, or until we plunge into the abyss and become a part of it. Jesus does so. He is a part of it, the centre of it. Jesus belongs to the people. It is not the place of the Church of Christ to sympathize with working people. We, the Church, must be the working people. It is not our place to be even an echo of the sound of the world's cry. We must be a part thereof and a large part of the cry itself. The home is ourselves, of course, and the pulpit, but also the office;—and the diocese, but also the community. We Episcopalians must be the other Churches and we must be all classes. We must be American civilization at its best, and we must be other nations, too. There must be no bounds to our love, nor must there be any bounds to our being, and we must stop talking about it, too, unless we can live it.

In the new age which is before us, it will not do any longer to talk religion unless we live it. Judge Lindsey said recently of this: "The war has discovered a new religion—a religion ages old—the religion of Christ in action. The Churches must preach and practise that religion or prepare to hear their call for cheers greeted with an universal 'Boo!' when democracy's next great campaign is over and the ships again come in."

I wish you would let me quote here your own recent editorial words:

We gave our bodies and our wealth into our country's hand, believing it to be God's will that by force we should end the reign of force. LET US NOW DECLARE THE WAR OF LOVE. It will be a war on greed, on cruelty practised on the helpless, on every intrigue of the strong to exploit the weak. It will be a war on philistinism, on luxury and idleness, on the insolent strong of every class. It will be a war without the demagogue's shibboleths, one class hurling accusations at another. It will be war different from any yet espoused by social enthusiasts, for it will be waged without pride of opinion or prejudice. It will chant, as it fights, a great prayer to God, a prayer for that spirit of fellowship in the world's work which is the only spirit of reasonableness. There is only one flag to be carried in such a war; it is the flag with a cross on it. [THE CHURCHMAN, March 8, 1919.]

In those words we live with Christ. We come within sight of the point of making the world's unconscious cry for help our own cry; the voice of the Church becomes the echo of the living voice of Jesus as He says: "In so far as you do it to one of the least of us brothers, you do it to all of us."

AN EASTER PRAYER

BY ROXANA BYRD WHITE

O CHRIST, Who on that Easter morn,
When earth was young, arose from death,
Healed wounded hearts with sorrow torn,
Gave hope and peace, and brought the breath
Of life renewed to all mankind:

Grant that the lily's chaliced gold,
The soft blue sky, the meadows lush
With fragrant buds, the wakening wold,
The liquid song of the joyous thrush—
May calm again the hearts of men.

O Christ, Who suffered on the cross,
Rekindle with the spring, belief
In God's good justice; spare the loss
Of faith that saved the dying thief—

Grant to a world war-crucified
An everlasting Easter-tide!

THE CHALLENGE OF THE HOUR ACCEPTED

BY THE RT. REV. ARTHUR SELDEN LLOYD, D.D.

WHAT is undoubtedly one of the biggest and most courageous steps forward ever taken in the history of organized Christianity in America, was taken last week when the executive committee of the Board of Missions committed itself to as progressive and enterprising a program as was ever approved by any board. This program will serve as the basis for a Nation-Wide Campaign in which at least twenty million dollars will be raised over a period of three years.

At the meeting of the Board of Missions in December, the matter of a Nation-Wide Campaign was fully discussed and a committee of five, with power to act, was appointed. After careful consideration of the whole subject, a plan was adopted by the committee of five and unanimously approved by the executive committee of the board at its meeting last week. At this meeting of the executive committee a sufficient credit was provided for financing the campaign. The Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., has been chosen as national director of the movement.

Everything is ready now to bring the whole subject to the attention of the Church. A survey of the work in both the domestic and foreign fields is under way. This survey will be supplemented by a study of the needs of each diocese in order that the authorities of each diocese may, if they desire, incorporate their needs in a budget to be added to the general budget. Thus accurate facts can be presented to the Church as to the great call which comes from every quarter for increased support for our work in all fields.

It is planned to reach the conventions of every diocese and missionary district with a qualified speaker, who will be able to put the facts before the selected representatives of each diocese. This will be followed up by the organization of a local committee who will be responsible for the handling of the details within that diocese or district. A speakers' bureau is being organized and experienced speakers will be available for meetings of various kinds. Literature will be prepared which will show in attractive form the compelling facts concerning the needs in all fields. Articles that will be found good reading matter will be available for church and secular press, and every means will be used to enlist the interest and co-operation of every member of the Church and its various agencies.

It is planned to have the campaign embrace not only the Board of Missions with the Woman's Auxiliary and the American Church Institute for Negroes, but all the federal agencies of the Church, such as the General Board of Religious Education, the Joint Commission on Social Service, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Church Periodical Club, and other like agencies. The co-operation of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has also been pledged to the movement.

For the first time in the history of this Church, therefore, a practical working basis co-ordinating, as far as diocesan autonomy will permit, the whole work of the whole Church will be sought. The General Board of Religious Education and the Joint Commission on Social Service, together with the other agencies mentioned, have accepted the invitation of the Board of Missions to share in this united enterprise.

Many problems and tasks of unique and compelling interest thrust upon us by the present world emergency are in the minds of all thoughtful churchmen. These problems relate not merely to the obvious duty of the Church to support its general boards and to expand their work upon a much larger scale, but numerous special tasks to which the Church has always been committed but which she has inadequately dealt with, must be faced. The days of reconstruction are upon us. We cannot afford longer lightly to regard the Church's responsibility to the national problem of immigration. Our Board of Missions and our Social Service Commission must play their part by the strangers from foreign lands in our midst. The meeting of the crying need for men for the ministry and for trained lay workers; the strengthening of the home and family life of our land through Christian nurture and training; these are some of the pressing responsibilities placed upon the General Board of Religious Education.

Can we longer be largely indifferent to the unsupported struggles of the country church and the down town church? Has the Church no message nor act of sympathy and helpfulness for the millions in our land who after July 1 will be deprived of the only social centre provided for them? The saloon has served a community need. Cannot the Church provide a better? You cannot take something away from a man without giving him something in return. Our Church's industrial high schools for Negroes, especially in the South, must be equipped for their task of producing Christian leaders and teachers of their race. These are a few of our immediate responsibilities. We cannot evade them and remain true to America. That these obligations will be provided for under a united budget for all the agencies which the Church has created, marks an epoch in the history of the Church.

It is proposed to finish the campaign with an every member canvass not later than the first week in Advent of this year. The plan is, in brief, the extension of the "Campaign for the Church's Mission" which has been so highly developed by Dr. Patton and his staff of workers and its application to the entire Church. The success of the Campaign for the Church's Mission in parish, city and diocese has led those in charge to believe that its methods are sound and its results generally far beyond the expectation of those who have not been acquainted with its possibilities. If there has been any weakness at all in the Campaign for the Church's Mission, it has been in the lack of sufficient organization on the part of the Board of Missions to follow up the work and conserve the results. This will be obviated in the Nation-Wide Campaign by carrying the organization on for at least three years, in order that the Church may receive progressive and cumulative education; and the application of the principles in service and giving.

AWAKENING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND—IV

BY JOHN O'LONDON

A silent, sullen people will judge your God and you.

SO Rudyard Kipling sang in "The White Man's Burden," but we are beginning to feel in this country that the terrible words are equally true when applied to those who profess to be disciples of the Christ. It is because of this growing belief that certain movements within the Church of England are being earnestly pressed by a large number of influential men and women.

For virility, force and determination no modern movement is comparable to what is known as the "Life and Liberty Movement." The driving force of this young, but powerful organization is the Rev. Dr. William Temple, son of that tenacious and stalwart fighter, Dr. Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury. The fact is worth recording that Dr. Temple threw up his West of London parochial charge with an income of over £1,200 a year to devote his whole time to the movement without fee or reward. This incident will indicate the spirit which animates some of the ardent reformers in our midst.

The movement is in no way opposed to our episcopal leaders who, as I have indicated in my previous articles, are really anxious for the greater efficiency of the Church, but the promoters of "Life and Liberty" say to the bishops, "If you believe that this change is necessary to the Church's health, then set on foot the action necessary to bring it about; call the Church to prayer and conference; insist on such concentration of energy on this subject, even if need be to the momentary neglect of other claims, as may ensure success. We rejoice to know that your goal is ours. Lead on, we will follow."

In other words the "Life and Liberty" movement is to provide the driving force to the various recommendations which have been formulated by the committees appointed by the archbishops. The supreme aim of the struggle is to secure self-government for the Church. As your readers doubtless know the Church of England through her connection with the State cannot make any changes in her formularies or administration without the permission of Parliament. It is not proposed to advocate the disestablishment of the Church, but rather to secure her freedom while still maintaining her position as the National Church. It must be borne in mind that the Church of the English people and the English Parliament grew up side by side and a vast body of churchmen and a great many nonconformists do not wish to sever the link which for centuries has bound the nation together, but in this democratic age it is being increasingly felt that it is necessary that the Church should gain full control over her own activities and full power to form and express her judgments through her own representative assemblies. The example of the Church of Scotland is often quoted and I have never yet heard a convincing answer as to why the historic Church of England should not have similar liberty to that enjoyed by the established Church of Scotland. Various anomalies in the machinery of the Church which hinder her work can only be removed by parliamentary legislation and it is becoming increasingly difficult for Parliament to devote the necessary time to the framing and discussing of such legislation.

The question of ecclesiastical endowment is of pressing importance. A good deal has recently been heard about large episcopal incomes and the official palaces which are supposed to be necessary for the bishops, but thoughtful people do not object to this so much as to the scandal of the large emoluments at one end of the scale and the miserable pittances which are provided for thousands of the parochial clergy. The promoters of the movement maintain that this problem can be solved only by a representative council of a self-governing Church.

Then there are problems of parochial administration which have to be faced. It is being felt that the laity should have a definite voice in the government of their Church. It is proposed to form in every parish a church council with effective powers to deal with the work of the Church.

Our present system of patronage is thoroughly archaic, but nothing is so objectionable as the fact that the parishioners have no means of hindering the appointment of a clergyman whom they desire to keep away. Then again owing to what is known as "the Parson's Freehold" a rector cannot be removed unless he is definitely immoral or negligent to the point of open scandal. The appointments of our cathedral bodies are almost entirely under state control. Neither has the Church any effective voice in the selection of her bishops. Neither can a new diocese be created without parliamentary legislation. To overcome these disabilities the Life and Liberty people are promoting an "Enabling Bill" which they hope may be presented to Parliament this spring. If the bill is passed it will enable the Church, subject to certain restrictions, to govern herself and make her own laws. It is satisfactory to be able to record that already a committee of about 160 members of the House of Commons has been formed to support the bill when it comes before Parliament. This committee includes members of all parties and is not confined to churchmen.

One of the most pleasing features of the movement has been the readiness shown by a number of nonconformists to co-operate in securing greater freedom for the Church of England. "Our task in the Life and Liberty Movement," says Dr. Temple, "is to call the Church to face its task; to seek from God the message it is to proclaim with regard to the vast problems, moral, industrial, international, which the coming years must try to solve; to stir up the gift of divine life which is in us as members of the Body of Christ; and then to claim freedom of corporate utterance and action in order that not only through a few scattered individuals, but with one voice the Church as a whole may call men to rebuild society as those who have given themselves into God's hands, praying that He will use them as His instruments to build now in England, in Europe, in the world, His holy city, which men of themselves can never build, because it comes down out of heaven from Him."

THE CATHEDRAL NAVE

BY RALPH ADAMS CRAM, LL.D.

DEAN ROBBINS

BISHOP GREER

The Bishop of New York, the Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and the Architect of the Nave

DR. CRAM

AS THE declaration of peace and the assurance of the continuation of peace through some international covenant come nearer in point of time to crown the great sacrifice of many nations—and not least that of America—what better symbol could be set up than a mighty edifice eternally dedicated to the worship of God who alone gives the victory? The impulse of Christianity has always been towards the manifesting through art of all kinds, and very specifically architecture, of the highest emotions of praise and thankfulness and pious commemoration, and always this found its showing in that architecture which is consecrated to the glory of God. Decreasingly has this been possible through the disintegration of the once united and single Church, and in default of the perfect and significant thing men have turned to the inadequate and the unexpressive; to the triumphal arches of Roman imperialism, the realistic representations of the combatants themselves, the obvious personifications of abstract virtues and principles. In point of significance the results are generally commensurate with the quality of the artistic achievement.

Is there not now an opportunity to reform this altogether? Hardly in generations, even in centuries, has the soul of man been so stirred to its depths as by this cataclysmic war; hardly has there been a case in history when victory seemed so miraculous or the issue so manifestly determined by the grace of God. As so many times before we are impelled highly to commemorate heroism and loyalty and self-sacrifice; to give concrete expression to our thankfulness for victory; but as never before are we impelled to show after some unusual fashion our consciousness that even we ourselves have seen in process one of the great determining events in world-history, and have been witnesses to the mercy of God poured out upon a world that lay almost in despair at the threat that menaced it and the desperate nature of the peril that threatened its destruction.

It would seem that no better thing could be offered than the great communal cathedral for the personal and corporate memorials that are made an imperative necessity, a sacred obligation, by the Great War. For once the religious and devotional connotation is obtainable not in the form of isolated monuments scattered over a wide territory and so becoming in a sense too highly individualized, but in a structure destined to become, at least in size, one of the four greatest churches in the world. Here there is no possibility of elimination through destruction or reconstruction. As Sir Thomas Browne says "There is no antidote against the opium of time which temporarily considereth all things . . . but the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy, and deals with the memory of men without distinction of merit to perpetuity." In the progress of ages all material things must pass, but in spite of war and conquest and the vandalism that accompanies periodical social degeneration, it is the great cathedrals that remain when minor monuments pass. From Sts. Maria Maggiore and Aya Sophia, to Westminster and Amiens, the greater monuments have well outlasted their secular rivals, and were it not for the Reformation in England, the Revolution in France, and the Great War, the roll today would be almost complete.

It so happens that the projected nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine offers itself very singularly for the purpose of such memorials, whether they are personal and individual or whether they represent more general offerings. There are, first, the four great squares of the nave, each of which has a certain individuality and coherency. Divided, these fall into elements of piers and shafts, ten of the former, each susceptible of varied sculptural decoration, eight of the latter, towering columns six feet in diameter and an hundred feet in clear height. Then there are the units of the outer aisles, fourteen in all, each a possible chapel or memorial space, and so isolated one from another that individuality is wholly preserved. The windows with their arches, glass and tracery are also all of them admirable memorials; there are twelve aisle windows, each as large as the aisle windows of Chartres, and the same number of enormous clerestory windows which are also of Chartres dimensions. On the exterior the eight great buttresses and the six smaller, each with its tracery and pinnacles, offer equal chances for personal gifts. It would seem therefore that there was here a more than adequate opportunity for many people to make their own commemoration of personal devotion and sacrifice and as well to join together to create a great fabric that may be a real synthesis of a people's devotion.

While this element of memorial is very valuable, indeed indispensable and even in itself sacred, the whole nave should, it seems to me, take on other aspects of equal weight and merit. In the first place it must be not only commemoration, but praise and thanksgiving, a free-will thank-offering for the saving of Christian civilization "though so as by fire." The nave is the people's place, and as the war was a people's war, the victory (under God) a people's victory, so this coherent whole (for in plan and design it is such) the cathedral nave, the foundations for which were laid during the war, should in some way express a people's thanksgiving for the mercy they have received. I should like to see, carved in imperishable stone, not only the names of those in the diocese that gave their lives for the liberation of the world, but as well the names of the cities and battlefields where American men won for their land everlasting glory, and I should like to see also, in sculpture and glass, the saints whose names are associated with the cities and the states and the battles themselves, from St. Michael and St. George to St. Louis and Jeanne d'Arc. Then along the walls should be cut and gilded, texts and sentences from the Holy Scripture, the Te Deum, and the Prayer Book, and particularly from the Psalms and the Apocalypse, that express the humiliation of men for their sins, the promises of redemption and salvation, the aspirations of holy men towards God and the Kingdom of Christ.

The third element that should enter is that of prophecy. An epoch has passed in fire and blood and rending dissolution, but another is to take its place, and, please God, it will be better in every way. Somewhere, by symbolism and, even more powerfully, by the spirit of consecration amongst those who make the nave possible, this quality of solemn prophecy and high aspiration must be worked into the living stone, so that in the end these three qualities of commemoration, thanksgiving and prophecy may join together to make the cathedral nave an irenic exposition of all the spiritual good that has come to men, by the grace of God, through a devastating war and in spite of its horror and wickedness and loss.

As I say, the nave foundations were being laid, perhaps providentially, while the war was grinding onward in its appalling progress. Then when America also joined in the new crusade, the work of course was stopped. Now the war, we believe, is at an end, and the vast foundations, completed to the level of, and including, the floor, stand ready for the superstructure. The foundation stones are of war; let the nave itself be of peace, and built under peace for the guaranty of its continuance. Could there be a better? It would be hard to say where it could be found. The natural thing, the law, the political engine, the covenant, is of little value apart from the energizing force that makes it operative, and this force is of the spirit. Justice and righteousness and the fear of God are the only safety of a people or of all peoples, however ingenious their mechanical devices, and it is to religion, and to the Church that is its instrument of operation, that we must turn now, as always in the great days of the Christian past, for the determining, the proclamation, and the dissemination of these qualities through the possession of which society alone can endure.

It is hardly for me to estimate the design of the proposed nave, a few views of which are here set forth. It is possible to say, however, that it is no attempt at an archaeological restoration or re-creation. Neither in the general scheme nor in the detail is there anything exactly copied from the work of the past. As the Church is unchangeable in essentials yet infinitely adaptable in non-essentials, so the nave design is an effort at recovering the essential principles of Christian architecture without narrow adherence to any specific and pre-determined forms. The attempt has been made to avoid everything approaching that particular quality of modernism that precipitated the war, that even, it may be, made it inevitable, but at the same time to create a church building that should be modern and contemporary, not archaic or of past generations. What has been attempted is a restoration of something of the quality that made Chartres possible, and Amiens and Rheims; that reared Seville and Burgos in the South, Canterbury and Westminster and Lincoln in the North. Certain schemes initiated in the Middle Ages but never fully carried out, have been taken over and pushed further to a logical conclusion, as for example the alternating system, the sexpartite vault, and the lateral nave expansion into the primary aisles which was indicated in the nave of Bourges and the choir of Le Mans. In any case the result will be a logical, consistent and highly articulated organism, expressing at least an onward movement in a style that is no more dead than is christianity itself.

In this also there seems a certain appositeness to the times, for we also are bound to go back in order that we may discover something of the inner quality of the religion, the philosophy and the social system that could express themselves so triumphantly in the great art of the Christian Middle Ages, that art that is the baffling wonder of the world and that a part of the world has of late been determined to destroy and has partially succeeded, at least so far as Rheims, Noyon, Soissons, Ypres, Arras and a thousand parish churches are concerned. We go back, not that there we may remain in a fool's paradise of affected archaism, but that we may find a new road, a new point from which we may advance with a better hope than that which in the end involved us in the great débâcle of the last five years. So in architecture we desire a new point d'appui, for we are not altogether satisfied with the ultimate results of our latest journeyings, and we find this in that mysterious and even miraculous three centuries that saw the accomplishment of a perfected Christian art, from Jumiegès and Durham to Gloucester and Beauvais.

BISHOP VINCENT FINDS PARIS THE WORLD CENTRE

Patriarch of Constantinople Gives Visiting Bishops Cordial Reception

Special Correspondence

Bishop Vincent, who is on his way to Rome and the East as a member of a special commission from the World Conference on Faith and Order, writes the following letter from Paris. The letter written in London to which Bishop Vincent refers has unfortunately never been received in the office.

Paris, March 24, 1919.

In my last to you from London I think I told you of our good fortune in finding the Metropolitan of Cypress in London (on a political mission); of our presentation to him, then of our official overture to the Church in Cypress in behalf of the World Conference; of his cordial expression of appreciation of our mission, of his personal sympathy with its spirit and purpose and of his intention to call a special meeting of his synod to consider a reply to it. The same evening we were honored and greatly helped by a long visit from Mr. Athelstan Riley, who has traveled much in the East, who wrote a book some years ago on the famous monastery on Mt. Athos; recently edited a posthumous publication of the many valuable writings of Mr. Berkbeck on the Russian Church; and is altogether the highest authority probably in the Church of England on Eastern Orthodox Church affairs. We arrived here in Paris on the 22nd, after a most comfortable trip from London, all reservations on train and boat courteously arranged by our American embassy in London, even to sending the embassy motorbus to take us and our luggage bodily to the train. Today (the 24th) we have had several other great pieces of good fortune. We found here (also on a political mission) the acting Patriarch of Constantinople. All the world is in Paris just now! With him, too, we were able to secure an interview and formally presented our overture to the Church of his patriarchate. The Bishop of Chicago, president of our commission and deputation, fully explained our mission in an eloquent address, which was most cordially and graciously received by the acting patriarch, who assured us of his delight in such a mission in such a sacred cause undertaken by Americans to forward the cause of liberty, justice and humanity.

In this interview we were greatly favored and facilitated by the kind services of a M. Kuriakides, a representative of the Greek "Society in behalf of the Unredeemed Greeks," who had recently been in America and whom we met on our Atlantic steamer as he was returning to his own land. He is a graduate of Robert College, Constantinople, speaks English perfectly and translated all our communications into modern Greek for the patriarch's ears. Tonight also we were favored in

THE BISHOP OF OXFORD RESIGNS HIS DIOCESE IN ORDER TO WRITE

BISHOP GORE

Whose Resignation from the See of Oxford Has Just Been Announced

By James Cairns

LONDON.—We were more or less prepared for the resignations of the Bishops of Chester and Chichester (Drs. Jayne and C. Ridgeway) who were both old men, but the news that Bishop Gore intends to resign the See of Oxford in July has come as a bolt from the blue. One's first feeling is that of dismay, for in the present critical condition of our Church Dr. Gore's assistance in its assemblies is almost indispensable. He has himself anticipated that he will have "a bad moment of doubt" as to whether he will feel himself justified in being absent from them by his own act, a long call from Father Nikolai Velimirovitch, the leading Serbian priest and a professor in the theological college at Belgrade, who has spent several years recently in England, enthusiastically forwarding the cause of intercommunion with Anglicans and deeply interested in our own movement in particular for a world conference. He offered to be our conductor and interpreter in visiting the Churches in Serbia, Rumania and Bulgaria and promises us a most enthusiastic popular welcome for our mission in those countries. Altogether we have been most fortunate so far in these wholly unexpected opportunities and advantages, and feel that our work has already gone well on its way. We shall (D. V.) leave here tomorrow, passing hastily through Rome now, on our way to Athens and the further East, and postponing our formal overture at Rome until our return trip sometime in the Eastertide.

but on the other hand he is convinced that he can best serve the Church by getting more time for thinking, studying, writing, and preaching.

From that point of view one can feel a certain consolation. After all, we shall get the old Gore back again. He is still in the early sixties, and, humanly speaking, he may still have a great future before him in the matter of leadership. I can well remember that there was a certain feeling of dismay when he was consecrated Bishop of Worcester in 1902; his friends said with a sigh "No more books from Gore." Three years later, he went to Birmingham as its first bishop, and for the last eight years he has had a harassing task in the administration of the large diocese of Oxford. Constant attendance at committees has left him little time for study. And as he himself now says he is desirous of writing something better than "little books."

But besides the reason just given, Dr. Gore has an additional cause for resignation at the present moment, which is that the acceptance of the baptismal franchise by the Representative Council makes it impossible for him to co-operate any longer in the movement for autonomy. And it is characteristic of him to say in a sentence that he does not propose to ask for or receive any pension.

The Archbishop of Canterbury writes to him in reply to say that while deeply distressed, he is not wholly surprised. He consents to the resignation, and takes occasion to write in the warmest terms of the friendly intimacy which has existed between them for so many years. Dr. Gore's counsel has often been most useful to him "on occasions when our difference in opinion or conclusions has been, and has remained most wide." He deplores the loss of Dr. Gore's contribution to episcopal discussions: "I do not exaggerate when I say that the loss of that contribution seems to me at present to be almost irreparable." The archbishop, of course, does not argue the point which has been the immediate cause of the resignation; he does not agree with Dr. Gore as to the consequence of what took place in the Representative Council, that is all. The most interesting thing in the archbishop's letter is the last sentence, "I pray God that, for many years to come, and long after my own working days are over, your learning, your devotion, and your personality may be as heretofore at the service of the Church and people of England." One wonders if there is anything behind this: Archbishops generally die in harness, and Dr. Davidson may mean nothing else. There are stormy times ahead, and we need him more than ever.

IMMIGRATION SECRETARY MAY BE APPOINTED BY BOARD

Executive Committee Will Recommend Immigrant Work

The questions which came before the monthly meeting of the executive committee of the Board of Missions were of far-reaching importance. One especially, which had to do with the Church's attitude toward the immigrant people in the United States, received the most careful consideration. A committee composed of the Rev. Messrs. Smith and Burgess of the Province of New England, the Rev. Mr. Emhardt of the Province of Washington, and the Rev. Dr. Lacy, representing the committee of the Province of New York and New Jersey, headed by Bishop Burch of New York, met the executive committee at luncheon to go into this matter as thoroughly as time would permit. The result was that the executive committee recommended to the next meeting of the Board of Missions to be held in May that the Board create a bureau for work among the immigrant people in the United States, with a secretary in charge, and that an adequate appropriation be made to provide the running expenses of this department.

In the Latin American field, the committee had a further report from the bishop in charge of Santo Domingo, following up the report he made at the last meeting of the executive committee on the condition among the Church of England Negroes on that island. The bishop reported that there were at least 20,000 of these Negroes in the republic and only one Anglican clergyman to minister to them. The bishop asked for an appropriation to enable him to send at least two additional men to the island. The executive committee responded heartily to his request and assured the bishop that upon the presentation of proper credentials for these men, provision would be made for their support.

In the foreign field, two appointments were made: Miss Violet L. Hughes was appointed under the United Offering as teacher in the District of Hankow, and Miss Lillian J. Weiser, employed in the Philippines since March, 1916, was regularly appointed.

Owing to the resignation of Dr. John MacWillie as physician at the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, a vacancy occurred which has been filled by the bishop by the employment of a physician in the field. In Liberia, a vacancy in the superintendency at the Brierly Memorial Hall, due to the resignation of Mr. J. J. Neal, who for many years had been in that position, was filled by the employment of Mr. Faymes D. Hardy.

D. S. M. for Bishop Brent

The War Department has authorized publication of a cabled communication from the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces announcing the award of the Distinguished Service Medal to many officers, among them Bishop Brent. Bishop Brent's citation is as follows:

CHAPLAIN CHARLES H. BRENT.—For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished service. As senior headquarters chaplain he organized the Chaplain's School and established a schematic system of religious effort, enabling all chaplains throughout France to further those excellent results which have marked their duties among the troops. By his loyal spirit of co-operation, his marked ability and by his masterful attainments he has rendered services of most conspicuous merit and lasting value to the American Government.

Bishops Give Their Approval

It has been announced at the Church Missions House that a plan for a Nation-Wide Campaign announced in this issue under the caption "The Challenge of the Hour Accepted," has received the cordial approval of practically all the bishops from whom there has been time to receive letters. About sixty-seven have been heard from thus far.

SALARIES PAID IN CLIMATE

Los Angeles and California Rectors Receive Least Money in Province

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—At the last meeting of the convocation of Los Angeles a resolution was adopted memorializing the diocesan convention to formulate plans to secure the increase of the stipends of the clergy of the diocese so that no one shall receive less than $100 per month and a rectory. Two committees of the diocesan board of missions have the subject of increase of missionary stipends in hand and will have something to present at the convention in May. A comparative study of salaries throughout the province made a few years ago showed that the averages in the Dioceses of Los Angeles and California were below those in the other dioceses and missionary districts in the province, the obvious reason being that clergy salaries are paid partly in climate as are other salaries and wages in California. The trouble with the arrangement is that climate is not recognized as an assignable security at the banks or accepted by grocers and bakers in lieu of money. The diocese intends to remedy a condition that has arisen naturally and imperceptibly but is both a discredit and a source of inefficiency.

COMMITTEE ON THE WAR AND THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK

To Study the Problems Facing the Church in the Era of Reconstruction

Among the best of the laudable investigations now under way to study the various effects of war upon human nature is the work being undertaken by the Committee on the War and the Religious Outlook. This is an organization with President Henry C. King, of Oberlin, as its chairman, and thirty-one other prominent churchmen, educators and charity workers on the committee, representing almost all the religious groups that have been actively interested in war work. It originated at the instigation of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, working in co-operation with the General War-Time Commission of the Churches. The avowed purpose is "to consider the state of religion as affected by the war, with special reference to the duty and the opportunity of the Churches, and to prepare its findings for submission to the Churches."

This is a vast and an important undertaking. The task, as it is now conceived, is being divided into departments, with one or more members of the committee assigned for special work in each department. At present there are but four such sub-committees, but others may be added from time to time. They are as follows:

1. To study the effect of war upon the religious attitude of the surviving personnel of the army and navy, and to make a report of conditions discovered, and to offer what recommendations may suggest themselves as a result of this study for either taking advantage of the good war has accomplished or rectifying its evil.

11. To study the relation of the Church to the pressing social and industrial problems of reconstruction.

111. To study the religious outlook in foreign lands, especially as it may affect the world's missionary fields.

IV. To study the relation between religious work and the problems of women.

Results will necessarily be slow in developing, because of the great amount of material which has to be investigated. A series of pamphlets will be published, under the general heading of "Next Steps in Christian Progress," the first numbers of which are already in the process of preparation. Some of these will appear as official report of the entire committee, others are to be written by particular members thereof. The latter class will be the first on the press, some of which may be announced at this time:

Religious Outlook After the War, by Dr. Robert E. Speer; The Place of the Church in the Life of the Nation, by Professor Raymond D. Fosdick; Christian Principles Essential to a New World Order, by President William H. P. Faunce, of Brown University; The Christian State in a League of Nations, by the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins; Christian Principles of Social Reconstruction, by Bishop Francis J. McConnell; Christian Aspects of Problems of Economic Reconstruction, by Herbert N. Shenton, of the Council of National Defense.

The proposed work of this committee is in keeping with the heartiest desires of all persons interested in the future welfare of the Church, and its efforts will be watched with keen interest. To foster this interest, and lend the project as much assistance as possible, advance reviews of these pamphlets and reports will be published as they are about to appear.

English Church News

Archbishop of York on the Industrial Crisis.—If, as we may surely believe, Dr. Lang speaks the mind of the Church of England at this moment, our Church will not hereafter be reproached for once more taking the wrong side, and for missing her opportunity. As I write these words, our industrial and social fate is trembling in the balance, although there is hopefulness in the sympathetic report issued by the Coal Commission. But the Archbishop of York's views, partly spoken in a sermon, and partly written in a message to his diocese, were published at an even more anxious moment, while the commission was approaching the end of its enquiry into the miners' case. Dr. Lang has no sympathy with the impatient criticism of the miners for threatening to strike at a time when coal is our paramount necessity for industrial revival. On the contrary he holds them justified in insisting that we make good our resolve to "make a better England" after the war. Such a state of things could not come of itself "by the magic wand of some outward power" but only if we were prepared to make something of the same effort and sacrifice which we made towards winning the war. "The nation is at the crossroads" and it must choose whether it will follow the way of reason, justice, and mutual trust and good-will, or the way of passion, confusion and force. There is hope, said Dr. Lang, in the fact that the miners were willing to submit their case to the commission. There is also hope in the attitude of the best, and especially of the younger employers. They have come to see that it is only right and reasonable that the men should have a greater share in the rewards of industry, and a greater possession of leisure and of the resources of true human life.

A Great Layman.—The Rt. Hon. George W. E. Russell, who has just died, had his title for services rendered to the State, but the Church would vary it to the "rightly honored." He was devoted to the Church of St. Alban's Holborn, especially in the days of Father Stanton, and he served the cause of the school of churchmanship to which he belonged by his journalistic writings. And yet he was no partisan: he had had a strict Evangelical upbringing, and to the end he was full of appreciation of the good which evangelicals had done. In the days when it was too readily said that the Church was an appanage of the conservative party, Russell, together with many slum priests of the same school, could always be cited as instances of the combination of radicalism and churchmanship. It was a real asset to the Church to have a man of his type, who was prominent in social life, had troops of friends, and "had met everybody worth knowing" to represent the real ideals of the Church of England. He was a true Londoner, always obsessed by the loneliness of the great city for those not so happily placed as himself. He could, and did, say biting things about the unbrotherliness of communicants, who could see a lonely man and woman come up from the country, worship beside them regularly and never make any attempt to befriend them. His interests were widespread. He was a regular reader of THE CHURCHMAN, as I have good reason to know. Some time ago, as my readers may remember, he traced me through the clergy list, and called upon me to correct a small mis-statement which I had made in this column. Felix culpa, was my reflection, as it had drawn a genial letter, which I shall always treasure, from a great man.

Sunday Games.—It looks as if we were coming to it. It might indeed be a wise policy if we got in front, instead of being reluctantly dragged into it. The Rev. the Hon. J. G. Adderley quotes the classic instance of John Keble encouraging Sunday cricket. Now Keble as a spiritual writer is world-property; it is not always remembered that he was a conspicuously successful parish priest. I have come across traces of him in my present parish; for Hursley is but a few miles off, and some of the old people, who have moved into the city, still talk to one about the way he managed his parish. And I would add that his saintliness has proved to have been transferable. That is just the point: we could all declare for Sunday games if we were Kebles. Canon Adderley recognizes this, for while he suggests that the Y. M. C. A. could do a great work by encouraging Sunday afternoon games, making it quite clear, that they begin and end the day with worship, he stipulates that it must be thoroughly good Christian people, whose love of God is beyond suspicion, who must take the lead in this matter. The Guardian takes up the matter editorially. It says that the subject is engaging attention on your side; that returned American officers are pointing out the danger of letting demobilized men roam the streets. It goes on to review the various crazes, from "ping-pong" to "jazz," and claims that the only way to check really questionable forms of amusement (it is here referring especially to a certain clerical denunciation of "jazz") is to encourage the innocent ones. This, it holds, is a task for which the Church is eminently fitted.

Clerical Poverty.—The Ecclesiastical Commission has come in for a good deal of criticism lately. It seems as if there ought to be no real poverty among the clergy, seeing that the commissioners hold property which brings in an income of over two million pounds a year. But the commissioners report that of this sum more than three fourths has gone in payments to benefices, and the remainder mostly in grants to clergy. It is believed that the commissioners are precluded by law from acting differently; they are bound in most instances to help poor benefices by increasing the capital of the endowment, which of course brings in comparatively little in the way of increased income. But they have found it possible to make emergency grants.

BOSTON

The Rev. H. K. Sherrill at Trinity Church.—Dr. Mann writes: "A hearty welcome 'home' this morning to Mr. Sherrill from the clergy and people of Trinity! Every man, woman and child in the parish is proud of him. We thank God for his noble record of service for Christ and for his country as chaplain of Base Hospital 6, and we rejoice that his first word on his return is to be spoken here this morning, in the church that he served so loyally, and to the people who love him, and whom he loves."

Special Service for Base Hospital 6 on Palm Sunday.—On Palm Sunday the welcome home service for Base Hospital 6 (Massachusetts General), was held at Trinity Church. It was eminently fitting that the same church in which was held the notable farewell service on Sunday, June 3, 1917, was the church to welcome them home.

Annual Presentation Service.—The annual presentation service of the Easter offerings of the Church schools of the diocese will be held in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Saturday afternoon, May 10, at three o'clock. Every school is asked to send three delegates (a teacher and two pupils) to the service. The clergy are requested to be present in their vestments and to form the choir on this occasion. Tickets for the three delegates will also be sent out about May 1. Tickets for other persons will be sent out, so far as the seating capacity of the cathedral will permit, on application by mail to the Rev. C. P. Mills, 1 Joy Street, Boston, before May 1.

Ordination.—The Rev. Messrs. George Leonard Drowne and Frank Taylor Weil were advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Babcock on Wednesday, March 26, at Grace Church, New Bedford. The Rev. H. Beal, rector of Grace Church, presented the candidates. The Rev. C. E. Jackson read the Litany and Suffrages.

The Twenty Weeks.—The committee appointed by Bishop Lawrence to prepare a series of daily Bible readings from Easter to Trinity, announces that the readings will be ready on April 8. They will be on sale at the Old Corner Book Store, 27 Bromfield Street, at two cents each; in quantities of one hundred or more, by the secretary, St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, at $1.50 per hundred.

The Training of Laymen.—(From a report to the diocesan convention). In Bulletin No. 1, entitled, The Church and the Home-coming Man, published by the Joint Commission on Social Service, the following statement is made: "It will be more necessary than ever that the Church should make a special effort to increase the number of her lay workers. . . . It is desirable that laymen especially should be so far as possible utilized for the advancement of the work of the Church with reference to the community and the world at large."

The boys are the great outstanding asset of the Church. A wise Church will conserve that asset, and so we come back to the need of training as one of the means whereby the Church can hold the boys and the boys grown to manhood can hold to the Church and serve the Church as lay readers, lay workers, Church School workers, boys' club leaders, and so on. Give them in a training school for laymen, courses on the Bible, the Prayer Book, Church History, the Faith, Reading and Speaking, also courses for leaders of boys' clubs, treasurers, vestrymen, lay readers, and other church workers, give them knowledge—simple elementary knowledge—and put the whole plan of supplying this knowledge on a permanent and solid basis.

If this project of training laymen as the logical outcome of the policy of training boys is to be established in Massachusetts as the pioneer diocese, the time has come to do it. For four years the courses offered have attracted a total enrollment of 120 men and this in spite of inadequate publicity, partial organization, local operation and a total budget for the experimental period of four years of less than $1,000. Bishop Lawrence.—Bishop Lawrence has returned from Aiken, South Carolina, where he has been since the end of February. The bishop is much improved in health and strength.

MILWAUKEE

Noon-Day Services.—Lenten services at the Majestic Theatre were inaugurated by the Church Club of Milwaukee on April 7. They started promptly at 12:30 and ended at 12:55. The last of the services was on Good Friday. The preachers were all exceptionally able and eloquent men including Dr. Ernest Smith of Washington, Bishop Webb, Dr. Waters, and Dr. John Henry Hopkins of Chicago. The Church Club has emphasized the fact that these services are for all, regardless of church affiliation. They were inaugurated to fill a demand for Lenten services that would be accessible in the downtown district to busy men and women. ARTHUR E. TIMM.

INDIANAPOLIS

The Church of the Advent Opened.—A new church which will be known as the Church of the Advent, held its first service Sunday, April 6, at the church property recently acquired by the Diocese of Indianapolis at Meridian and Thirty-third streets. The rector of the new parish is the Rev. C. E. Bishop, who has arrived from Sturgis, Michigan, to assume his duties.

In many ways the organization of the new church is unusual, because the acquiring of the property and the building up of what promises to be a large congregation has been accomplished in such a relatively short time. Many prominent families living on the north side and representing many communions have shown a deep interest in the new church and have promised the parish their active support.

Bishop Francis, long has desired to establish a parish on the north side and when he returned recently from France, where he served as chaplain of base hospital No. 32, he discussed his plans with Aquilla Q. Jones, who has been prominent in the affairs of the Diocese in Indianapolis for many years. Mr. Jones entered into negotiations for the purchase of the property of the Baptist church and undertook the task of organizing the parish.

It is planned to support the church by voluntary contributions and no pew rents are to be charged. WILLIAM MARSHALL.

WASHINGTON

Dr. McKim Brands Bolshevism.—Dr. McKim, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, before, during, and after the war has addressed his parish and the community again and again in the spirit of one of the prophets of Israel, and no more so than on Passion Sunday when he spoke on the subject of Bolshevism. He declared any proposal by the American delegation at the peace conference to recognize the Russian Bolshevik government to be a policy of weakness and dishonor. He advocated the raising of a volunteer army of two hundred thousand men to go to Russia in a holy crusade to destroy what he called "the deadliest nest of vipers the world has ever seen." He said that the policy of the Allies in inviting the Bolshevik representatives to a conference at Prinkipo Island had served to strengthen the prestige of Bolshevism and had given those monsters, Lenin and Trotsky, the idea that the Allies fear the Bolsheviks. He described Herron, the commissioner selected to go to Prinkipo on the part of America, as "a low Socialist, an enemy of the family and purity, and an avowed advocate of free love." Immediately after the service, the vestry held a meeting, unanimously endorsed Dr. McKim's sermon, requested its printing and wide dissemination.

In Washington at least the idea of some of our public writers, that the clergy have neglected their duty in the pulpit in these momentous times, has not been fulfilled.

Islands Committee Recital.—The Islands Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary arranged last week for a delightful recital which was held at the Hotel Biltmore. John Powell, Francis Rogers and Bruno Huhn gave an attractive program. This committee raises considerable money every year for missionary work in the island possessions of the United States.

Victory Service.—On Palm Sunday a victory service in honor of the heroes of the church was held at the chapel of the Holy Spirit in the Bronx. Dr. Reiland made the address. Another Palm Sunday service in the Bronx was a memorial service at St. James' Church when Lieutenant John Bryan was honored by his fellow parishioners. Lieutenant Bryan was secretary of the Sunday School and active in the parish life. He served on the Mexican border and went to France with the 26th Division. He fell in battle while leading a charge. At this service a service flag with seventy stars, three of them gold, was dedicated.

The News in Jacksonville.—St. Andrew's has been exceedingly fortunate in having the opportunity of hearing two well known clergymen of the Church during the lenten season. Dr. Charles L. Arnold, who, for twenty-nine years, was rector of St. Peters Church, Detroit, preached for us on the evening of the Second Sunday in Lent. He has also preached on three occasions at the noon-day lenten services which are held under the auspices of the Church, at the Republic Theatre. During the following week Archdeacon Webber conducted all the services at the theatre and preached at St. Andrews in the evenings. He was also the celebrant at the early services at St. Andrew's during the week. These two men have left a lasting impression on the minds of their hearers, who by their constant attendance showed their appreciation of the messages thus brought to them.

Two Deaths.—St. Andrew's has been saddened by two deaths. On February 3 Mr. Samuel Scull died at his home in Jacksonville after a prolonged illness. He was confirmed in England before making his permanent home in this country.

We have also suffered the loss of one of our boys who was brought up in the parish. Warren Washburn Scott, son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren F. Scott, died on February 16, after an attack of pneumonia which he contracted on the Mallory SS Nueces. He was third engineer on this ship and had been in the merchant marine service for over a year. His influence over his shipmates as testified to by them, was profoundly Christian and we feel a deep sense of gratitude to him for his noble example to those who faced the dangers of the sea.

MISSOURI

Return of Rev. J. H. George to Columbia—The people of Calvary parish, Columbia, and indeed the entire community are rejoicing in the return of the Rev. James Hardin George and Mrs. George to the work of the church and the social life of the town. Mr. George had been the rector of Calvary for a year and a half and had greatly endeared himself to the people. The post here is an important one, for Columbia is the seat of the state university. Mr. George resisted several strong temptations to "go over"; and finally, fifteen months ago, he sailed for France. Having been at one time connected with the faculty of St. John's University, Shanghai, his knowledge of Chinese was of great value and he has been almost wholly occupied in Y. M. C. A. work with the Chinese coolies behind the British lines. Meanwhile Mrs. George has been engaged in educational work in Tennessee. When Mr. George went off to the war, he sent his resignation to the vestry of Calvary. They at first accepted it, because he insisted that they should. But they immediately reconsidered and again called Mr. George as rector and gave him leave of absence indefinitely. During the rector's absence, the Rev. Benjamin E. Reed of St. Louis has acted as locum tenens. He has kept the work in splendid shape, has presented a class of fourteen for confirmation, and has greatly endeared himself to the people.

Social Service Efforts—"To divert the energy and enthusiasm aroused by war needs into the steady channels of Church activities" is the aim of the diocesan house of church women in the formation of "The Church League of Service," the purpose of which is to reach every parish and mission in the diocese with a view to co-operating with and inspiring to greater zeal and efficiency, every existing parochial agency. The diocesan social service commission clinched a splendid opportunity on March 20 to bring a goodly number of earnest people together at St. Stephen's parish house to discuss the work of the San Francisco Social Service Exchange and to listen to stirring addresses by Dr. Samuel Langer, of the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum, and Mr. H. C. Maginity of the endorsement committee of the Chamber of Commerce. The Rev. Geo. H. B. Wright, rector of St. Stephen's, is making his parish a centre of social service work for the city and diocese and his leadership in this department of church activity is recognized and appreciated by both the clergy and laity.

The March Meeting of the Clerical Seminar was made more than ordinarily interesting on account of a remarkably able paper on social service by the Rev. H. St. Geo. Buttrum, D.D., of Christ Church, Sausalito. The discussion elicited both approval of and dissent from the reader's conclusions, which were that the paramount duty is the preaching of the Gospel only incidental to which should be the effort in the direction of social service work.

Penitentiary Work.—To his many parochial duties as rector of St. Luke's Church the Rev. Edward Morgan has added an important service by the faithful work which he is doing at the state penitentiary, at San Quentin. In more than one instance has he recently given the last ministrations of the Church to men about to suffer the penalty of death.

A Returned Chaplain.—The Rev. Frederick W. Clappett, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, has returned from his war duties in France as chaplain of the regiment popularly known as the "Grizzlies." His welcome home was most cordial and enthusiastic at the hands both of his parishioners and the citizens generally of San Francisco. One of the most thrilling and interesting of his addresses was delivered at a recent dinner of the Men's Club of St. John's Church, the Rev. Charles L. Thackeray, rector, at which he related many incidents at the front and described the splendid heroism of the American soldiers. He was profoundly impressed by the evidences of the deep religious convictions of many of the rank and file, and counseled a thorough preparation by the Church for their homecoming.

The Monday Club of the Convocation of San Francisco held a most successful meeting at Sausalito on March 31, when its members were the guests of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Buttrum and the Ladies' Guild of Christ Church. After a delightful luncheon an automobile trip was taken through beautiful Marin County, which for loveliness of scenery is unsurpassed in northern California. The club is entirely a sociable affair which affords the clergy an opportunity to throw off parochial cares for a few hours and mingle in good natured fellowship. The convocation of Oakland also has a similar club and arrangements are under way for a joint gathering of the two organizations.

Open Forum.—A series of Sunday night meetings has been held during Lent at St. Luke's Church, Des Moines, which has proved of interest to a number of people in the parish and community. The rector believed that the forum plan would result in bringing to the churchpeople, and perhaps to others, the viewpoint of prominent men who are experts in their several walks of life. Sunday evenings seemed the best time for these addresses, and the guild hall the proper place.

The results have justified the experiment, although the gatherings have been made up chiefly of the people of the Church rather than a mixed assembly. The guild hall has been well filled. Community songs are sung heartily, and other music is added, glee clubs and soloists of the city gladly giving of their talent. "Problems of an Editor," "Good Roads," and "Community Patriotism" have been discussed by some of the ablest men in the city. The series of meetings closed Palm Sunday evening with a most delightfully informal address by Miss Anne Austin, editor of the People's Popular Monthly.

RHODE ISLAND

Conference of the Clergy.—By call of Bishop Perry the clergy of the diocese devoted Tuesday, April 8, to a conference at St. John's Church, Providence, on urgent matters to which the bishop wished the clergy to give special consideration. He counseled flexibility in church services to meet the post-war situation. In planning for special services for the welcome to returning soldiers and in thanksgiving for the coming peace treaty he hoped thereby the civic celebrations would not fail of their religious element. In order that the Church in the diocese might lead and not follow the trend of public opinion a strong committee was created to frame a manifesto concerning economic and social justice in these reconstruction days. In the early part of the afternoon conference welfare work among girls was presented by Miss Ziegler, field secretary of the War Emergency Committee of the Girl's Friendly. An address was also made by Dean Robbins of the New York cathedral.

Sunday Baseball.—The state legislature has passed a local option law permitting baseball on Sundays. Bishop Perry and many of the clergy made a fight against it, but the political influence of the baseball magnates was too powerful.

OREGON

Portland.—Noonday lenten services, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, were held during the last two weeks of Lent, at the Baker Theatre, which is kindly donated for the purpose. The location is in the heart of the downtown business section. Monday and Tuesday, in Passion Week, the speaker was William C. Harvey, Brotherhood Secretary, Camp Lewis. Wednesday to Friday inclusive, Dean Hicks, who has recently returned from France. His brother, Reginald T. T. Hicks, is now dean of the Cathedral of St. Stephen the Martyr, Portland. During Holy Week the speakers are from the city clergy, Chaplain Howard of the Good Samaritan Hospital, the Rev. O. W. Taylor, of Grace Memorial and the Rev. C. H. L. Chandler of Oregon City, where he has spoken very often and acceptably, to the men at the paper-mills. Maundy Thursday the speaker is the Rev. Thomas Jenkins, rector of St. David's, and Good Friday Bishop Sumner conducts the service.

Children's Rally.—A Rally of the Children of all the Church Schools of the city has been appointed for Sunday afternoon, May 18, at the cathedral, when their lenten offerings will be presented by representatives of each school. To increase the interest of the children and their friends in securing a generous offering the bishop has addressed a letter "To my dear friends, the children of the Diocese of Oregon."

Meetings of the Clergy.—The clergy of our communion, in the city and vicinity, meet every Monday morning at a room which they rent for the purpose near the business centre. Once a month some one is secured to address them on a question of the day; another time a book-review is given by one of their number. One morning is reserved for a devotional service, at the cathedral, consisting of a celebration of Holy Communion and meditation by one of the clergy. Whenever his duties permit the bishop is present at these gatherings, and at noon all lunch together, and thus the bond between the bishop and the clergy, and among themselves is strengthened.

LOS ANGELES

Death of Archbishop Hamilton.—As was reported in the Canadian Church News recently, the Most Rev. Charles Hamilton, D. D., formerly Bishop of Ottawa and since 1909 Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Province of Canada, died on March 13 at La Jolla in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He had been in poor health for some time and with Mrs. Hamilton and a son and daughter had been living in retirement at La Jolla. Funeral services were held in the parish church of St. James by the Sea, La Jolla, in the early morning of March 17. The interment was at Riverside where the body of the archbishop was laid at rest beside that of his son who died there some years ago.

A Mountainous Missionary District.—Bishop Johnson has appointed the Rev. Mortimer Chester, a deacon, missionary in charge of the mountainous region including Beaumont, Banning, Hemet, San Jacinto, Elsinore, and Murrieta. Undaunted by difficulty of travel and size of field Mr. Chester is throwing himself into this work with an enthusiasm that is winning him many friends. A candidate for orders from this diocese, he took his divinity course partly at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific and partly at the General Theological Seminary. He will shortly be ordained to the priesthood.

Pro-Cathedral Noonday Services.—The noon-day lenten services at St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral which are meant for people from all the parishes who may be down town at mid-day, are being well attended. More than usual interest has been created by the provision for special preachers from abroad for many of the services. Bishop Sanford of San Joaquin was the speaker for the first week, the Dr. Lubeck for the second, and Dean Gresham of San Francisco for the third.

The Neighborhood Settlement.—Four friends of the Neighborhood Settlement in Los Angeles have purchased and presented to the settlement association the lot on 9th Street, adjoining the Neighborhood Hall. The cost was $3,500.00. A small store room on the front of the lot will be remodeled and used for a dental clinic, the current expenses for which have been provided by another friend. The back part of the lot will augment and greatly improve the playground of the settlement. Since its beginning in 1904 the settlement has grown in influence and numbers until it has become an important institution touching every week the lives of hundreds of people of many nationalities. Deaconess Mary who has been in charge since 1910 and has been an important factor in the upbuilding of the settlement is now taking an extended leave of absence.

CHICAGO

Committee for Lake Geneva Conference Meets.—On April 3 Deaconess Fuller, the chairman of the continuation committee of the Episcopal Church's delegation at the Lake Geneva Conference called a meeting of a committee which she has formed to increase the delegation from the Diocese of Chicago at the 1919 conference. The committee was composed of representatives of the various diocesan organizations. It was decided to get in touch with the corresponding organizations in the other cities in the province, and to urge that each diocese form a similar committee to secure a delegation to the conference.

The question came up about a possible conflict with the church conference at Racine. It was pointed out that there need be no conflict between the two conferences. In the first place they come at different times, the Racine Conference being from July 8 to 18 and the Lake Geneva Conference coming in the last part of July and the first part of August. In the second place the two conferences are very different. The Lake Geneva Conference is primarily a missionary conference. Furthermore, the Lake Geneva conference this summer will be a part of the Interchurch World Movement of North America, and will give a good part of its attention to discussing the problems and plans of the world movement.

Program of the Racine Conference.—The program committee for the Racine Conference has sent out the preliminary program of the conference for this summer, to be held from July 8 to 18. Courses in many different subjects are offered. Bishop Reese, Bishop Webb, Bishop Wise, Dean Bell and others will lecture on "The Church's Share in Reconstruction." There will be a number of courses on missions given by the Rev. George Long, Miss Grace Lindly, and others. There will be normal courses for Sunday School teachers taking up the Christian Nurture Series in detail, as well as courses having to do with Sunday School organization. Dean Lutkin of Northwestern University and Canon Douglas will be in charge of the instruction in music. The registrar of the conference is Miss Rosalie Winkler, 131 Eleventh Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

CHARLES L. STREET.

PHILADELPHIA

Cathedral Fund Drive On.—More than 100 men and women met recently at the home of Mrs. Alexander Van Renssalaer to hear Bishop Rhinelander outline his plans for a cathedral. A site has been purchased at 23d Street and the Parkway—where open air services have been held for several summers. Bishop Garland also spoke, as did Dr. Richardson, the new vicar of the Diocesan Church. Six prominent laymen are said to have given $5,000 each to the fund which now amounts to $34,000.

Church Mission of Help.—The annual meeting of the Church Mission of Help was held at St. James' Church on Tuesday, April 8. Mrs. L. F. Pease spoke on the work done in New York by this organization. Mrs. Jane D. Rippen told of conditions in training camps. The Rev. Dr. Mockridge, of St. James' Church, is president of the mission here; Dr. Jefferys, of the City Mission, Mr. John Cadwalader, Jr., and Miss Dorothea Emlen are the other officers.

Bishop Woodcock Active Here.—In addition to preaching the noon-day services at the Garrick Theatre all week to overcrowded congregations, Bishop Woodcock has preached at St. Peter's, Germantown, and addressed the women in St. James' Church in the city. The newspapers quoted his addresses daily at some length, that those unable to hear him might still have his message.

Rev. Mr. Booth Addresses Woman's Meeting.—The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Chestnut Hill and Germantown was well attended at St. Luke's Church, Germantown, on Thursday, April 3. The preacher was the Rev. S. B. Booth, of the Diocesan Church of St. Mary, who has lately come from a chaplaincy in France, and brought home many messages.

Memorial Chapel Opened.—The first services in the new Chapel of the Mediator were held on Sunday, April 6. This chapel is a memorial to the late George

C. Thomas. The dedication service will be held in the near future. The vicar of the chapel is the Rev. Phillips Osgood.

Every Member Campaign.—Reports are not yet complete of the work accomplished by the diocesan Every Member Campaign which was completed in the visitation on March 30. But many report much good aside from financial gain. One small parish, for instance, showed that some 125 families had promised to have family prayer; even if that were only grace at meals, it would mean much. The same parish showed that many had pledged for every form of religious service specified on the pledge card; and also an increase of $800 for missions.

IRVING A. MCGREW.

EASTON

Interest in the Children's Lenten Offering has been increased throughout the diocese by the offering of two rewards by Mr. Dudley G. Roe, of Sudlersville, and also a member of the provincial board of religious education. The school giving the largest amount at the Easter offering will have five dollars added to its total and the school giving the largest amount per number of pupils will also have an additional five dollars added to its offering.

St. Andrew's Chapel, Sudlersville, the Rev. Douglas Hobbs, rector, is leading the diocese to date in special offerings. The united offering from this chapel was $127. For war relief the chapel gave $12 and to the Armenian war relief fund the congregation gave $367.

St. Peter's Parish, Easton, surprised the rector, the Rev. Henry Davies, and his wife at their silver wedding anniversary by presenting them with a congratulatory letter of appreciation and a purse enabling them to make a trip to their old home in England. If passports are available Dr. and Mrs. Davies plan to sail early in June. He has been rector of the parish for thirteen years.

EVERETT JOHNSON.

EAST CAROLINA

New Rector Instituted.—On Sunday, March 16, the Rev. C. H. Bascom was instituted as rector of St. Paul's Parish, Greenville, N. C., by the Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D.D., Bishop of East Carolina. This was the first time in the history of St. Paul's Parish that the Office of Institution of Ministers was ever used, and a great deal of genuine interest was manifested in the services. After the sermon, by the bishop, the rector celebrated the Holy Communion and administered the Sacrament to the people of his new parish.

Church Extension Work.—A new parish has recently been formed in the diocese with the merging of Emmanuel Church, Farmville, North Carolina, and St. Barnabas Church, Snow Hill, N. C. A clergyman has been called to the rectorship of this new parish. Four years ago this large parish was spasmodically administered to by one clergyman. Under this new arrangement three resident clergymen instead of one will be placed in this field.

The Bishop's League.—Bishop Darst is deeply gratified with the interest which has been manifested throughout the diocese in his "Bishop's League." This league, which started at the beginning of the new year, now has enrolled a membership of over 700, this membership coming from twenty-six parishes in the diocese. The bishop, from the resources of this league, is planning some new extension work in the diocese.

St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, N. C.—The Rev. Charles L. Arnold, the eighth rector of the parish, who resided here about thirty years ago, is now on a visit to his old parish. The Rev. Mr. Arnold will preach on Sunday, April 6, in his old church. Mr. Arnold now lives in Detroit, Michigan. During the Sundays of Lent at the afternoon services, selections from Maunder's Olivet to Calvary have been rendered by a large choir, augmented by the singers in the various church choirs in the city. A great deal of interest has been manifested by the community at large.

J. H. GIBBONEY.

PITTSBURGH

Charitable Bequests.—By the will of the late Christopher L. Painter, of this city, the following bequests were made for charitable and religious objects: $25,000 each to Trinity Church, The Church Home, Pittsburgh Association for the Improvement of the Poor and Western Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind; $20,000 to the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Home for the Friendless; $15,000 each to the St. Barnabas' Free Home of McKeesport, the Home for Colored Children at Lexington, Kentucky, the Saint Margaret Memorial Hospital, the Presbyterian Hospital, and the First Presbyterian Church.

Brotherhood Meeting.—The lenten meeting of the Pittsburgh Assembly of the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew took place on Monday evening, March 31, at Christ Church Parish House, beginning with a short service at 6:15, followed by supper and a large gathering of Brotherhood men at eight o'clock. The speaker was the Rev. Warren Lincoln Rogers, of Jersey City, New Jersey, formerly of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, and this week the preacher at the noon-day services at Trinity Church.

Hospital Visitations.—A new scheme for hospital visitations in Pittsburgh has been devised and is being tried out at the present time, by means of which it is hoped to bring the patients in the various city and suburban hospitals more closely and more speedily into touch with the rectors and pastors of the churches of different denominations. Through a central agency connected with the hospitals, notice of the names and church affiliations of incoming patients are sent to the denominational headquarters, which in the case of the church are the Church Rooms, 317 Jenkins Building. The working out of the plan is in the hands of the Clerical Union, who have supplied the librarian at the Church Rooms with a list of clergymen, who have expressed their willingness to look up the cases reported in hospitals located in their neighborhood. The plan works somewhat in this wise: If when a case is reported, the parish connection of the patient is given, the rector of that parish is notified; but if only the residence is given, the clergyman to whom that hospital has been assigned looks up the case, and makes report to the individual parish authorities concerning it. The plan has been in operation only ten days, but in that short period of time twenty-two cases have been reported and cared for. Some of the patients from outlying towns who have been visited have expressed their gratification at the kindly attention received.

Day of Intercession.—In Christ Church Greensburg, the Rev. Dr. W. F. Shero, the first of the days of intercession which the Board of Missions requested should be held on the last Wednesdays of March. April and May, was observed on March 26. The opening service was a celebration of the Holy Communion, with address, at ten o'clock. From the close of that service until four o'clock continuous intercessions were made in half hour periods by different bands of communicants. At four, Evening Prayer was said by the rector, with an address. The occasion was an unusual one, and was entered into in a spirit and with an interest that were surprising and gratifying. The rector expects to observe the other appointed days in a somewhat similar fashion.

JANE CUDDY.

MICHIGAN CITY

Lenten Preachers.—The Rev. James A. Miller, rector of Trinity Church, Michigan City, is having special services on each Thursday evening of Lent. He has arranged for special out-of-town preachers as follows: March 6, Rev. John F. Plummer, Kokomo; March 13, Rev. E. S. White, Church of the Holy Apostles, Chicago; March 20, Rev. R. E. Carr, South Bend; March 27, Rev. R. J. Long, archdeacon of the diocese; April 3, Rev. Dr. Barwell Walker, Laporte; April 10, Rev. W. Hawthorne, Hammond; April 17, Rev. L. E. Morris, Indiana Harbor. These week night services are proving most helpful and a large congregation is usually present. It is interesting to know one of the secrets of their success. The rector keeps his people informed of the service and the preachers by sending to them the following notice, which is in itself happy and inspiring:

Trinity Parish, Michigan City, Indiana. We can do it. What? Make Thursday night the greatest in the history of Trinity Parish. How? By being present at the service and bringing friends and neighbors. Service at 7.30 P. M. Preacher — will be there.

New Hymnals.—Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, is showing its spirit in keeping abreast of the times by adopting the new hymnal. One hundred and twenty-five have been ordered for the choir and the rector has wisely suggested that people do not purchase combination sets of Prayer Book and hymnal, as the new hymnal will displace the edition now in use.

April 19, 1919

A Weekly Record.—Everyone aspires to have a large lenten offering. It is of deepest concern to an entire parish and to the children of the Church School—their interest is tinged with excitement. Though eager and anxious about this offering, too often it is left to drift in uncertainty until Easter Day. This is not true, however, in St. John's Church, Elkhart. In the Church School a weekly class record is kept of the children's offerings, which stimulates a desire to see the amount grow. A banner is to be awarded to the two classes giving the most generous lenten offering.

GRACE EVERETT.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Roanoke.—Bishop Tucker was the preacher at the Theater services in Roanoke on Friday and Saturday, March 28 and 29 and large congregations heard him with great pleasure. The Bishop held special Confirmation at St. John's Church, confirming two candidates left over from a class of twenty recently confirmed by Bishop Thomson.

Norfolk.—On March 19 Bishop Tucker confirmed twenty sailors at the naval base, presented by the Rev. E. P. Minor, and on the 20th he confirmed nineteen sailors, presented by the Rev. Dr. D. W. Howard at Galilee Chapel, Virginia Beach. On the 26th Bishop Thomson confirmed eight sailors in Norfolk. Rev. Francis R. Lee, Rector of the Churches in Southampton, has been called as assistant to St. Paul's Church, Norfolk.

Accomac County.—Bishop Tucker recently visited Exmore and organized a congregation at that point which will go to work immediately to build a new church. This faithful band of people have been for a long time gathering money for this purpose. This work will be in charge of the Rev. J. R. McAllister, who has just been ordained to the Priesthood at Cape Charles.

G. OTIS MEAD.

NEVADA

Bishop Hunting Makes Visitations.—The bishop is making his annual visitation or Confirmation through the district. When this is finished he will go by automobile to the out of the way places, many of which have no religious services except on the occasion of this visit by the bishop. Candidates for Confirmation of high school age and over are to be given, by the clergy, a written examination of some fifty questions covering doctrine, faith and works.

Sunday School children who are ready will be examined by the bishop in the whole Catechism and if found proficient will be given the "Bishop's Certificate."

With the co-operation of the clergy the bishop is sending a personally signed letter to all persons he has confirmed in Nevada asking each to be present at the approaching visitation to receive the Holy Communion and recall with him the text given to each class for daily remembrance: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Offer a boy a dish of bread and milk, and a dish of Puffed Wheat in milk. You know he will take, ten times in ten, these flaky, toasted bubbles.

In Puffed Wheat every food cell is exploded. The grains are shot from guns. He gets a scientific food, where digestion is easy and complete.

When children like it better—vastly better—why not serve some Puffed Grain to them in every bowl of milk?

THE INVITATIONS OF OUR LORD.

By the Rev. J. G. H. Barry, D.D.

294 pp., cloth, gilt, $1.50

Dr. Barry has done the Church a real service in giving us this very interesting and valuable book. It consists of a series of nineteen meditations worked out in a very suggestive and helpful way. The book is admirable in every way. Designed especially for those who are striving to establish the habit of meditation and for those who have given up the habit because of its difficulty, it is certain to be of great assistance if faithfully used. It will be found a particularly helpful guide to the keeping of a holy Lent. At the request of his publisher Dr. Barry has prefixed an excellent paper entitled "How to Make a Meditation."—J. W. S.

The New Books

Two Books on Prayer

DEAN ROUSMANIERE who contributes an introductory note to Talking With God, Some suggestions for the practice of private prayer (Morehouse Publishing Co. 60c.) says that it is the most useful book on prayer with which he is acquainted. Not every one would subscribe to this statement, but all will agree that it is a book of real value, and that any who read it carefully are certain to be helped. It may be especially recommended for beginners in the devotional life, but even those who are well trained in the practice of prayer might read it with profit.

The forty-four collects in A Book of Collects (by Pater and Filius. Morehouse Publishing Co. 50c.) are, without exception, of rare beauty. Not only are they admirable in structure and diction, but their tone is faultless. They are divided into two groups, the first containing new collects, and the second adapted collects derived from sources for the most part ancient. The following, taken from the second group, well illustrates the character of the collection as a whole:

Grant us, O Lord, we beseech thee, in all our perplexities thy counsel, in all our dangers thy protection, and in all our sorrows thy peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord.
J. W. S.

Sermons

JUST as they stand, the sermons in The Pulpit in War Time (by Ten Ministers of the Presbyterian Church. The Westminster Press. 75c.) naturally and obviously have lost something of their original purpose. The armistice is signed, the day of peace has come. But they do indicate two things, one how the pulpit of a great communion (the Presbyterians) measured up to the responsibility it faced in the war days and then how, in the exigencies of a critical hour, the adequacy of the Christian faith to hold secure the souls of men was revealed. In England a similar attempt was made to gather together current "war sermons," preached without thought of publication (these were issued under the title Christ and the World at War). The American contribution to the literature of the Great War manifestly shows that Churches in this country did not fail in the face of an unparalleled opportunity, to follow the example of their English brethren.

Sermons on the Gospels, Advent to Trinity (by Ernst P. Pfatteicher, D.D., General Council Publication House, $1.75) is a volume of sermons on the Gospels, from the first Sunday in Advent to Trinity Sunday inclusive. A single theme runs throughout them all—Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, contrasted and compared with those with whom He came in contact. Dr. Pfatteicher is pastor of Trinity Church (Lutheran), Reading, Pennsylvania. He says these sermons are "practical discourse with a definite object in view," following the ordered course of the Church Year which, "though its detailed celebration not essential to our salvation, it is undoubtedly conducive to a clearer, more systematic and consequently more helpful knowledge of the plan whereby God saves men." They cannot be called "popular" sermons. They rather indicate a presupposition of a wide knowledge of the Scriptures. The congregations to which they were addressed consisted in part of university and college students assembled in the Lutheran Church of the Holy Communion, Philadelphia. R. P. K.

The Meaning of Salvation

THE GOSPEL OF THE CROSS. By J. R. Coates, C. H. Dodd, W. F. Halliday, Malcolm Spencer, and Olive Wyon. To express the message of a conference of the Swanwick Free Church Fellowship. The Macmillan Company, New York and London. 1918. $2.25.

Composite authorship has its disadvantages. The reader feels a certain lack of individuality, of personality. And with difficulty can he avoid the critical attempt to find differences of style as indicating different sources. In the present volume he fancies that with chapter VII there comes a transition to a more popular and somewhat homiletic style. And such an attitude distracts the reader's mind.

Yet the volume is a success, and is a real contribution to theology. It is a careful study of the meaning of Christian salvation as that meaning is interpreted by Christian experience. And that experience is found in the New Testament and in human life to-day. An admirable appendix gives a careful study of certain theological terms, such as atonement, forgiveness, justification, law, and sin. And another appendix gives valuable suggestions as to further reading. One wonders why among the many and good books mentioned, there should be lacking McLeod Campbell's The Nature of the Atonement. But the book as a whole is to be strongly commended. It is unfortunate that a volume of only XIV plus 165 pages should cost $2.25. But perhaps that fact is only one of the signs of the times.

Not Problems But Mysteries

SOME OF LIFE'S MYSTERIES. By The Rev. Rolfe Crum, Lyman Bros., Inc., Syracuse, N. Y., 1919. 50c.

"Not problems but mysteries," let us thank Mr. Crum for this. The author interprets tribulation and temptation by the "long view" of life and finds pain and suffering to be calls to holiness, brotherhood and godliness while the great adventure of death is a dawning that throws light revealing the meanings of the mysteries that precede. These kindly, thoughtful addresses were preached just prior to the author's departure for service in France.

Oregon Missions

THE OREGON MISSIONS. By James W. Bashford, Abingdon Press, New York, 1918. $1.25.

An excellent introduction to the study of the conditions of mission work in Oregon as they are now. An inspiring and valuable record of the lives of Jason Lee and Dr. Whitman. The author's method is logical, his style interesting, and his political and historical background makes the mission history clean-cut and clear.

The Evening of Life

TREASURES OF HOPE FOR THE EVENING OF LIFE, by the late Rev. George Congreve, M. A., Longmans, Green & Co. New York, 1918. $2.00.

Father Congreve was one of the choicest spirits the Church of England ever produced. To be with him was a benediction. His simplicity, his courtesy, his dignity of bearing, his evident humility, and the depth and reality of his devotional life, always so apparent, made him a marked man. No one could fail to see that he lived in close touch with the other world. It was like a breath of fresh air to hear him in the service, and when he celebrated the Holy Communion, as he did daily in one of the chapels of the Cowley Fathers' church in Oxford, one felt it was good to be there. There was never any hurry, but a quiet reverence which was deeply impressive. Every word that he uttered was clearly audible and seemed to have gained new meaning since one heard it last. He preached with the utmost simplicity, with manuscript, and without gesture, and yet his preaching had singular power. Quite apart from what he said his whole tone and manner were uplifting, and his hearers went away with a new sense of God's love for them and a fresh desire to lead better lives.

Thus much has been said about the man because his books are the outcome of what he was, and this is especially true of Treasures of Hope for the Evening of Life, published after his death. The book, as its name implies, is meant especially for those nearing the end of their earthly pilgrimage, but there is much in it that will be of help to all, and young as well as old will find it full of comfort and inspiration.

News "Isms" in the Light of the Gospel

AN ANGEL OF LIGHT. By the Rev. Kenneth MacKenzie, Christian Alliance Publishing Company, 692 Eighth Avenue, New York City, 1918. $1.00.

This book deals with various religious manifestations of the day, some of which claim to be equal or superior to Christianity and some of which are wrongfully clothed in the garments of Christianity. These movements include Theosophy, Christian Science, New Thought, and spiritism. The chapters are well arranged, and the author draws keen comparisons between the claims of the adherents of these religious movements and the teachings of Christ. His conclusions are logical and illuminating. The problems of healing and faith are also presented in a very readable chapter, and the Emmanuel Movement is compared with Christ's teaching and methods. These are live problems met in almost every parish. The book is an admirable one for a clergyman to have at hand to lend to any parishoner fascinated by one of these attractions. The clergyman himself might be much helped by reading the book for, while it is brief, the author shows every evidence of careful reading and painstaking investigation. He sets down only those things which are most important. One also feels that he knows his Gospels and consequently his conclusions carry much weight and conviction. He shows how many Christians are being deceived by these alluring and seductive cults, and his aim is to point out dangers and expose the pit-falls.

The Rural Problem

THE RURAL CHURCH SERVING THE COMMUNITY. By Edwin L. Earp, Professor of Sociology, Drew Theological Seminary, The Abingdon Press, New York, 1918. 75c.

The problem of the rural church is a theme of frequent allusion in the religious press, and of an occasional exposition in general terms. Professor Drew wastes no time in defining the problem (that is easy enough), but briefly, pointedly, and in most practical terms he makes a number of suggestions, indeed outlines a complete program for its solution.

A "Diatrion"

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS. By Anita S. Ward, with an introduction by the Rev. Ambrose W. Vernon, The Pilgrim Press, Boston, 1916. $1.00.

Miss Ward gives us for the first time a consecutive narrative of the life of Jesus as told by the synoptic gospels, omitting the opening chapters of Mark and Luke. The text is based on the Markan version. There is no question but that this is a beautiful piece of work, the form very attractive, the arrangement most convenient. The plan is excellent, the workmanship of a high order, the spirit of the author, as shown in the preface, sweet and reverent.

The aim of the study, according to the author, is to acquire a knowledge of the work which was given to Christ to do (by the Father), and the way in which He accomplished it, as the chief source of our inspiration for our own life work.

The value of the book to a student depends entirely upon whether he desires or cares to study our Lord's ministry without the light thrown upon it by the opening and closing chapters of St. Matthew and St. Luke, and without the contribution the "author of the Fourth Gospel" makes to the narrative.

If, however, he happens to agree with the Evangelists that the Gospel of the Infancy and the events of the Great Forty Days put one in the right attitude to understand the narrative of the ministry, if he happens to hold the view to which the best modern scholarship is gathering again that the author of the Fourth Gospel is the apostle and friend of Jesus, and that there is in the gospels no place for a distinction between "what Jesus in His life time taught" and "what has since been taught about Him," then this "diatrion" will still be interesting and quite helpful though its value in straightening out a "confused account" which the "four gospels present" will of course be very limited and leave much hard work for the student to do by himself or with other helps. It is always easy to unravel a tangle by cutting out the knot.

to clergy whose incomes are below £300 a year. Two years ago they granted £10, last year they gave £20, and this year they are going to give the really substantial emergency grant of sums up to £40 to all such parishes. But next year they will begin to taper off again, and the grants will cease in three years' time. By then, it is to be hoped that church finance will be in a more satisfactory state, whether by a central fund or otherwise. Meantime the "bitter cry" of the poor parson continues to voice itself in the press. There is a real danger that the poorer clergy will be asking to be released from their ordination vows, in order that they may go and earn their living. Country clergy and their wives are in many instances doing their own housework. The church loses even more in these cases from the withdrawal of the parson's wife, who used to be the mainstay of many parish organizations. She has now no time for them.

OBITUARY

IN MEMORIAM
ELIZABETH ANNE POPE
October 13th, 1918

After a long and useful life, in the confidence of Paradise, this loyal devoted Christiana passed into the world of light.

Endowed with an unusual intellect, which did not fall, possessed with a keen understanding of things just and fair, charitable and generous in her deeds of kindness, her memory will live and be cherished by those she loved.

So at this Easter tide all who knew and loved her here will read with deeper meaning those beautiful lines:

"The strife is o'er, the battle done:
The victory of life is won;
The song of triumph has begun,
Alleluia."

The members of The Clerical Union of the Diocese of Pittsburgh desire to record the appreciation of the character of the Rev. Robert Waddington Grange, D. D., who entered into Paradise, January 9th, 1919; and also express their sympathy to the members of his family.

He was a member of the Clerical Union from its inception and attended the meetings regularly until he was prevented by reason of failing health. He was respected by all regardless of their school of theology. His unflinching courtesy, genial humor, and quiet dignity made him popular with all the members, and especially with the younger clergy. His freedom from sham and the humility which he manifested upon many occasions made his presence charming and wholesome. He stood for the best type of Anglican Churchmanship—loyalty to the Church, ready to concede that there may be many sides to a proposition, willing to believe that there is an ever increasing and unfolding of the revelation of God. Christ's Truth was to him unchanging; but man grows into an increasing knowledge of the truth.

For the presence of Dr. Grange among we thank God. To the members of his family we extend our sympathy, trusting that God may send to them comfort and strength in time of their bereavement.

On behalf of The Clerical Union,
JOHN HEBER McCANDLESS,
GEORGE BRINKERHOFF RICHARD,
RUDOLPH EDWARD SCHULZ.

Training for Authorship

How to write, what to write, and where to sell.

Cultivate your mind. Develop your literary gifts. Master the art of self-expression. Make your spare time profitable. Turn your ideas into dollars.

Courses in Short-Story Writing, Versification, Journalism, Play Writing, Photoplay Writing, etc., taught personally by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and a staff of literary experts. Constructive criticism. Frank, honest, helpful advice. Real teaching.

One pupil has received over $5,000 for stories and articles written mostly in spare time—"play work," he calls it. Another pupil received over $1,000 before completing her first course. Another, a busy wife and mother, is averaging over $75 a week from photoplay writing alone.

There is no other institution or agency doing so much for writers, young or old. The universities recognize this, for over one hundred members of the English faculties of higher institutions are studying in our Literary Department. The editors recognize it, for they are constantly recommending our courses.

We publish The Writer's Library. We also publish The Writer's Monthly, especially valuable for its full reports of the literary market. Besides our teaching service, we offer a manuscript criticism service.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

HIS is the Annual Spring Book Number of THE CHURCHMAN. Una Hunt, who discusses the fundamental themes running through Ibanez's novels, is herself a novelist and writer of short stories. Adelaide Teague Case, who advises what books we should buy for the children, is the head of the department of religious education at the New York Training School for Deaconesses. Margery Lacey-Baker, who writes about the new plays is editor for the pageantry department at the Y. W. C. A. national headquarters. Dr. Slattery, Dean Hodges, the Rev. Latta Griswold, the Rev. Robert Kreidler, Dr. A. L. Murray, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton and Miss Gladys Barnes have all been reviewing for THE CHURCHMAN long enough to need no introduction. Dr. Atwater, the rector of the Church of the Saviour, Akron, Ohio, finishes this week his series of articles on "The Church and the New Era." The Rev. Pascal Harrower whose Easter choral we publish, is the rector of the Church of the Ascension, Staten Island, New York.

Personals

THE REV. ROMILY F. HUMPHRIES, who recently resigned from the rectorship of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, is now superintendent of the city mission work of the Episcopal Church in Baltimore. His office address is 1110 Madison Avenue.

THE REV. BERNARD I. BELL was the preacher at Cornell University in Sage Chapel on Palm Sunday.

THE ADDRESS of the Rev. Isaac Dawson has been changed to 2437 10th Avenue, East Oakland, California. Mr. Dawson is now rector of the Church of the Advent, East Oakland.

THE REV. J. A. RYAN, of Christ Church, Forest City, Pennsylvania, presented a class of thirty-eight persons for Confirmation April 9. Of this number ten were men, eleven women and fourteen boys.

THE REV. DAVID H. CLARKSON has resigned the rectorship of Christ Church, Schenectady, to take effect May 1. Mr. Clarkson resigned on account of impaired health. He came to Christ Church in October, 1907, and resigned in May, 1916. During that time the new church and rectory were built, conservatively estimated to be worth altogether $90,000. He was recalled to the rectorship in May, 1918, but found the work was beyond his strength. The Rev. George A. Perry, rector of Trinity Church, Watervliet, New York, has been called to succeed him.

THE VESTRY OF ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, Massena, New York, has voted to increase the rector's salary two hundred dollars and to relinquish the appropriation from the Board of Missions, and so become an independent parish.

THE REV. JAMES CLEMENT SHARP, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd at Waban, Newton, Massachusetts, who has been given a year's leave of absence by his

with a diploma, or without it? In either case, you of course do not wish to leave off being educated. When education ends, life ends.

Take a Reading Course

Everybody reads, but too many read without any plan, and to no purpose. The college graduate is like other people in the need of system, but a little more likely to realize his need. The Chautauqua Reading Course is useful alike to the person of limited training, who labors many nights over each book, and the critic or vigorous man of affairs who can sweep thru them all in a few hours. For either, a group of related, intelligible, and competent studies leads to a well rounded result.

Don't Read at Random

For many years, the very mention of a reading course has meant without further explanation the Chautauqua Reading Course. It was the first and is still the best and it alone has a world-wide fame. The cost is trifling, $6 for a year. Are you tired wasting your odd minutes? Write for free synopsis or mail this ad, signed, to Box 234

The Great Hunger

by

Johan Bojer

(Fourth Printing Now Ready)

THIS book presents a compelling, masterly and timely theme, dealing with the spiritual hunger; dominant not only in Peer Holm, its hero, but in all of us. On the eve of a new era, when old traditions, beliefs and customs are being reborn, the whole world is seeking solace for the Great Hunger of what comes next—to know that the end is not here nor there, but is ever evolving onward.

JOHN GALSWORTHY says: "The Great Hunger is so touchingly searching and sincere that it interested me from the first page to the last."
